Labor in the South as a rule is underpaid. Wages in the Birmingham mineral district range from 10 per cent to 50 per cent less than in other industrial centers of the country. The more skilled the worker the more nearly will his wage compare with wages in Gary, Pittsburgh, and Bethlehem. The common laborer receives, roughly speaking, about 50 per cent of what the same class of labor would be paid in northern industrial centers. Skilled men, such as mechanics in the building trades and foundries, get from 75 per cent to 90 per cent of what such workers receive in northern and eastern cities. The Alabama coal miner is the poorest paid in America.

The chief factor in this wage situation is the remoteness of the district from other labor markets. The Steel Corporation dominates the Birmingham labor situation. It is the largest and best employer; other large employers follow the Steel Corporation, and as a rule pay slightly less and give less attention to welfare work. There is no real competition among the great employers, and there is small choice to the worker among them. He is forced to choose between the wages and conditions which they dictate and removing himself and family for hundreds of miles into some other labor center. The great corporations which dominate Birmingham are able to control labor because there is no real competition among them or between them and employers in the large labor centers. They are able to dictate to labor because the workers have no alternative. They are able to destroy the workers' unions and to drive from the district any worker whose activities may be objectionable to them.

FORD WILL COMPETE FOR LABOR.

With Ford at Muscle Shoals there will not only be industrial competition with the Aluminum Trust, the Cyanamid Co., the Union Carbide Co., and the other monopolists who, by reason of their favorable position as users of Niagara electric energy, hold their hands at the throat of American industry, but there will be labor competition with the Steel Corporation, the Republic Co., the Sloss Co., and the other great employers of the Birmingham district.

It will mean much to the workingmen of my city and section. It will mean for every one of them a few additional dollars in his pay envelope—better food and clothing for his wife and children, and a better house to live in. More than that, it will mean for the men who toil a certain measure of industrial independence—a choice whether they will work for the Steel Corporation and its imitators or may seek employment from a more humane and enlightened employer.

I do not wish to be misunderstood. I do not approve Henry Ford's labor policies. I find his statements concerning labor organizations utterly lacking in understanding, not only of the human element in labor, but of certain sound considerations of labor policy. I do approve in Henry Ford of his recognition of the fact that the way to get good work is to give good pay. At least he has sense enough not to stint the horse that he drives—sense enough not to attempt to buy his labor for the least possible wage that he can force the worker to accept.

The great labor significance of Ford at Muscle Shoals is well understood, not only by the laboring people themselves, but by the employers with whom he would compete for labor. The wage earners of my district are unanimous for the acceptance of Ford's offer. The large employers are practically 100 per cent against it. The latter have not had much to say publicly, but they have dealt with the situation in their customary under-cover way. Do not be misled. The large employer interests of Alabama are not for Ford's offer and never have been.

A very good evidence of this was the appearance of Mr. Ingalls, president of the Birmingham Chamber of Commerce, before the committee in opposition to Ford's offer. Mr. Ingalls is himself head of the Ingalls Iron Works and a large employer of labor. It will cost him more money for labor with Ford at Muscle Shoals. His pay rolls will be larger. He sees only the direct result, and though Ford might add half a billion to Alabama tax values and increase our population by 250,000 intelligent white people, Ingalls looks at the effect on his pay roll and not upon the secondary effect of a larger business and in the end a more profitable enterprise.

The American Federation of Labor at its Denver convention in 1922 adopted a resolution indorsing Ford's offer and urging its acceptance. Since he gave the Collier's interview expressing such amazing and half-baked opinions on politics and labor, the Federation has not renewed its efforts. However, while those who are authorized to speak for labor do not approve his ideas, it remains that Ford's methods are much to be preferred above those of Gary and other great employers.

BIRMINGHAM EATS OFF THE WAGE EARNER.

The Birmingham district is essentially a labor district. The great industrial concerns have their local officials, but few of their stockholders live in my city. The community is supported by the wage earners. The great bulk of the money spent there originates in the pay envelopes. Birmingham eats off the wage earner. He is the source of whatever prosperity we may have. Back to his industry may be traced the dollars which constructed our palatial residences, our business blocks, and which lie in the coffers of our banks.

It makes little difference to Birmingham what the profit of the man who owns the works may be. He lives in a distant city and has no local interests. Perhaps he is merely a bondholder who cashes his coupons and never saw Alabama and does not know that Birmingham is on the map.

But every dollar that a wage earner receives is spent at home. It goes to his landlord or his grocer or for other necessaries. Those who receive it from him pass it on to the professional classes and to the banks and larger business interests, who are bound by this indissoluble economic tie to the humble workers in the mines and in the mills.

For instance, one of our foundries sells a trainload of pipe to a customer overseas for, we will say, $20,000. The profit on the sale stops in New York or some other financial center. A small percentage of the cost goes to local company officials, but the bulk is handed to grimy workers in their pay envelopes on Saturday night, and through them my city draws all of the benefit which comes to it from the transaction.

In such a situation local business and commercial interests would be expected to be in full harmony with the wage earners. However, strange to say, in any dispute over wages between the workers and the great concerns which employ them, usually the more important merchants and business men line up solidly with the nonresident employer. They fight against themselves and their own best economic interests, and this not because merit is on the employer's side, for they make no inquiry as to the merits of the dispute. Impelled by irresistible social and class consciousness, they line up on the employer's side without regard to the righteousness of his position.

While usually elements identified closely neither with labor nor with employers side with the latter in all matters in conflict, this rule does not obtain as to Ford's offer for Muscle Shoals. Practically every business man in my district who is not a large employer recognizes the desirability, from the standpoint of his own interest as well as of the general public welfare, of accepting Ford's offer.

EFFECT ON ALABAMA POLITICS.

I have discussed the labor aspect of Ford's offer for Muscle Shoals from the standpoint of a citizen of Alabama. There is another local slant which this subject has which perhaps may escape those not acquainted with conditions in Alabama. The subject has a local political aspect of high importance.

Alabama in many respects is highly progressive—politically our State is decidedly reactionary. I will not now take the time to state the genesis nor the factors which have produced existing political conditions. It is enough to say that my beloved State is dominated by political influences of a highly reactionary kind. The Alabama Power Co., and other industrial concerns, in combination with reactionaries and selfish politicians, hold Alabama in the hollow of their hands. Life to a public man in Alabama is uncertain and in most cases brief unless he is willing to "listen to reason" with these interests. The Alabaman who aspires to serve his State and country will find his way a path of thorns and his hold on public life precarious if he dares to antagonize the great corporations and the ringsters who are their political partners.

The masses of my State are progressive. They suffer for want of leaders and lack of means to make themselves felt and heard.

The right of suffrage is denied in practical effect to thousands of native-born white persons. In my own county there are probably 100,000 native whites above 21 years of age. Yet the largest vote ever cast was less than 27,000. This is not because of lack of interest, but because our laws are contrived to deny the vote to the poor, the transient, the thoughtless, and those who are too busy in the fields, mines, and shops to qualify. A voter must live two years in the State and one year in the county. He must have paid his poll tax for every year since 1901; a default of a single year disqualifies him. Payment of poll tax is purely voluntary. No one asks it of him. He must hunt up the collector and tender it. It must be paid before February 1 or will not be accepted. He must be duly registered, and the facilities for registration are inadequate. The result is that a majority even of eligible whites are disqualified. I am informed that the congressional district which I represent, among its native-born white population, has the smallest percentage of qualified voters of any district in the United States.

REACTIONARIES THWART PROGRESSIVE MASSES.

Alabama is in urgent need of civic reforms—reforms which can not be achieved under existing political conditions and without more liberal election laws. Despite Ford's "queer" political opinions, he can not join with the Steel Corporation, the Alabama Power Co., and other elements now in control. He can not "lie in the same bed" with them. He will constitute a third angle to the political situation, and on him the progressive masses may rely for help.

But apart from the personal influence of Mr. Ford, the thousands of intelligent operatives which he will assemble at his Muscle Shoals plants will constitute a splendid reenforcement for the progressive elements of my State. Our masses may look to them for help in solving our political problems and making of our State that which as of right, because of its resources and the quality of its people, it ought to be—the greatest State in the Union.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] is recognized.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the Burton amendment, putting this project under the Federal water power act, and I expect to vote for it. I do not take any stock in the argument that a vote for this amendment is a vote against Muscle Shoals, against cheap nitrates, or against the interests of the farmer.

If you will put this project under the Federal water power act, you can then make whatever terms you want or whatever conditions you want with reference to the use of power for the manufacture of fertilizer. You can then control, under the terms of the Federal water power act, the other power that is there developed; and under those conditions the Government can see that the people of that section of the country are protected in the sale of that power and that it is not monopolized, which would be the result if it were put in the hands of one man.

I was greatly interested in the argument of the gentleman from Alabama as to the exceptions or provisos in the Federal water power act. One of them was a stipulation for Government purposes. If this is given to Henry Ford, can it be interpreted as being for Government purposes under any construction of the law? Certainly it can not.

Mr. QUIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. I can not yield, as I have only a short time. I am not going to take up the time of the committee by yielding for questions; I am going to give my views. Gentlemen have been talking for two or three days, and now I want to express myself. Another point was that it was for the development of Government property. No one can say that this Government wants to retain that property and develop it for any purpose other than the use of nitrates during war, and for that purpose it can be acquired at any time, regardless of who has it or under what conditions it may be had.

I was greatly amazed the other day when I read the speech of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE] in which he referred to the opposition to this bill and that that opposition existed in this little bureau, which was a creature of Congress, and that this bureau is desirous of maintaining its own control over the water-power development of the country. And then he called them a little bureaucratic bureau. Well now, gentlemen, the whole purpose of the water power act was the preservation of the water power of this country which can be used for the benefit of the people, and tell me how you are going to use the power that is created down there for the benefit of the people if you are going to turn it all over to one man to use as he sees fit?

Oh, you are stipulating here for a certain use of this power; that it is to be used for the making of fertilizer, but that is only a small part of the chapter that is to be played down there. The main thing is water power. A little of it will be used for fertilizer, but not nearly all of it. And I want to say to you that whenever you pass this bill with its present provisions, and if you do not amend it so as to put it under the provisions of the water power act, you are going to practically destroy the water power act, for which able men, interested in the preservation of the natural resources of this country, fought for 15 years.

Now, if the act is not perfect, amend it; if it does not contain the proper provisions or put on proper restrictions let us amend it, but we should not follow the suggestion of the gentleman from Alabama in which he says, "Let us give this project to this man and then in due time let us pass a law bringing them all within the provisions of the water power act." I want to say to you that you can not take away from Henry Ford, or his estate or the corporation, he is to organize to carry out the provisions of this contract, one vested right that is put in this contract—not one. Do not think of that theory in the years that are to come, for that can not be done.

The Federal Water Power Commission is not a little bureaucratic commission. It is composed of the Secretay of War, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of Agriculture, three broad-minded, strong men. I do not believe we want to call them little bureaucrats here on the floor of the House. They are entitled, if you please, to have the provisions of that act carried out in the way that the original act was intended to be carried out.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has control of transportation and the Federal Water Power Commission is going to have control of the distribution of power and the rights thereunder, and that is the only thing we are asking you gentlemen to do here to-day.

I believe you can sell the farmer fertilizer as cheap, and even cheaper, if you will put this bill under the provisions of the water power act, as you can under the provisions of your present bill; and not only that, but then you can say to Henry Ford, "Bring down all of your aluminum factories, bring down all of these other factories, and we will let you have power according to the provisions of this act, and you can then develop your industries."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. FISHER] is recognized.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Chairman, this is a contract we are discussing to-day, and the provision in the contract which relates to 100 years ought not to be stricken from it. The Federal water power act has nothing to do with it. The President of the United States specifically designated, under the authority which was given to him in 1914 in the national defense act, that water power should be used in the nitrate program, and it was an essential part of the program. In the nitrate program there was also included the fertilizer program. They knew they could not go on with the fertilizer program in peace time without having water power, because coal was too expensive.

When the war came on we found that the activities which related to the dam, and related to the nitrate program, were tremendously increased. Water power was always a vital part of that program, and the only reason they built other power houses which furnished power made by coal was because the dam was slower, but it was always in mind that this water power should be used for the manufacture of nitrates for ammunition if we happened to have war, and in peace time for fertilizers.

When the war broke down and the armistice came, the Government was left with over $100,000,000 worth of property, and this raised the question as to what was to be done with it. As all know there is and has been great opposition to the Government operating the big nitrate plant and carrying out the program to manufacture nitrates there. That property stood idle, and it has cost the Government over $1,000,000 in upkeep and maintenance since the armistice.

We know that this Congress would never consent to the Government—if this contract should not be accepted—going down there and making and selling fertilizers and making fixed nitrogen at plant No. 2. If the contract is not accepted, think of the cost of maintenance to the Government, because every officer in the Ordnance Department who has testified has said that each year the cost of upkeep, maintenance, and replacement would be approximately $400,000.

It is the maintenance of the big plant No. 2 in a going condition which we would have to keep for nitrate preparedness, and over a period of 50 years the cost would be over $20,000,000. Think of the huge amount that would have to be paid by the Government.

Mr. MAYO. The point is if the offer is accepted we will have such a very large investment at Muscle Shoals in the course of the next 10 or 15 years that we could not afford to risk that much of an investment there and run the risk of having the power end of it cut from under your feet at the end of 50 years. (p. 243.)

Mr. MAYO. * * * On account of the size of the project and the immense amount of capital necessary to develop it to such an extent that we can use all the power, Mr. Ford felt that in 50 years he would perhaps only have made a good start. (p. 296.)

The War Department, through the Secretary of War, the Chief of Engineers, and other high officials in the Army, sought broadcast throughout the United States for a great captain of industry to come to the rescue of the United States and make them an offer to take these great projects. They found none. No one wanted to take this heavy burden that was caused by the war off of the shoulders of the United States, and the waste and expense continued. The Government, through its agents and representatives, sought this great man, Henry Ford, who here to-day offers to take this burden off of the shoulders of the Government and develop this country as has never been dreamed of before. We find he came down here, and in conference with the War Department and in the Judge Advocate General's department his representatives and officers of our Army drew up a tentative contract, or a tentative offer, and there the question was discussed of how long the lease should run; and right then and there the Government, through its representatives, wrote into the contract, as Mr. Ford had said he would have to have it if he made an offer at all, 100 years, which was to be the life of the lease; and when that contract was redrafted and sent to our committee it had in it the same 100-year clause; and when the hearings were held before the committee Mr. Ford's representatives came before it, and I have the statements that were made by Mr. Mayo, his representative, which I will insert in the RECORD, in which he said that if the offer was accepted, the plans of the company were so immense that 50 years would not give them time; that they expected to spend $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 on the development of that country. Think what that means. He said 50 years would not give them sufficient time. They want to develop water reservoirs in the mountains of east Tennessee, so that the water power which is now more or less limited may be doubled in capacity.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McKENZIE and Mr. CHINDBLOM rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] is recognized.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on the pending amendment close in 25 minutes, 10 minutes for the gentlemen favoring the amendment and 15 minutes for those opposing the amendment. Mr. Chairman, the opposition has had more time than we have had on this amendment, and I do not want to take any more time than necessary.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman that I have some remarks I want to make upon the proposition, and I doubt if I am going to be able to conclude in five minutes. I rather think it will take seven or eight minutes, although I will try to get along with five minutes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify that request by making it 35 minutes, 15 minutes to be used by those opposed and 15 minutes by those in favor of the amendment, and that I have 5 minutes to close the discussion.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Will the gentleman make his request apply to the section and all amendments thereto?

Mr. McKENZIE. No; we can not do that.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, that makes 20 minutes against the amendment and 15 minutes in favor of the amendment.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I would be glad to give the gentlemen 20 hours on each side if there was nothing to it but time, but I realize that the membership of the House is getting somewhat weary of this discussion and I would like to hurry along with the bill.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, does the gentleman's request apply only to the amendment or to the paragraph?

Mr. MORIN. To the pending amendment.

Mr. McKENZIE. To the pending amendment, which is the Burton amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment close in 35 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I shall not object if the request is 20 minutes, to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] and 15 minutes by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

Mr. LONGWORTH. You can not do that in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McKENZIE. That is understood, however.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois modifies his request and asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment be closed in 35 minutes, 20 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois and 15 minutes by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge if I may have an opportunity to move to strike out, maybe, the next to the last word and get a chance for my white alley here?

Mr. McKENZIE. I will say to the gentleman that after we vote on the pending amendment he can then offer another amendment.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. But, perhaps, I may like to speak to the amendment. I do not object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. I doubt whether it is in the power of the committee to assign control of time in Committee of the Whole. I think the request should be that the debate should close at a certain time, and gentlemen will take the floor in their own right.

Mr. McKENZIE. In order that there may be no misunderstanding, I desire 5 minutes for the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER], 10 minutes for the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], and 5 minutes for myself; and 15 minutes to be divided, 8 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL] and 7 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois that debate on the pending amendment be closed in 35 minutes? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I was a member of the Military Affairs Committee during the consideration of the Ford offer. I come from the most remote corner of the United States and have as little personal interest in the disposition of the United States properties at Muscle Shoals as any Member on the floor of the House. I went into this investigation of the Ford offer last year with something of an opposition to the offer, but the further I pursued the matter and the more interest I took in it, the more I became convinced that it was to the interest of the United States Government to accept the offer of Henry Ford. [Applause.]

The Tennessee River where this power plant is situated falls 132 feet in 37 miles. There are two dams 17 miles apart. The Tennessee River has been there since the beginning and no private capital in America has ever thought for one instant of going into the improvement of it at this point because the expense is so enormous.

The river there is a mile wide and it flows over a limestone ledge. You and I could walk across that river in an ordinary flow of the water. The expense is so great to build this enormous dam that private capital would never touch it and would not touch it to this day. Henry Ford's offer was made last year. In 1920 the water power act was passed. Nobody has applied to the United States Government under the national water power act to improve the Tennessee River at Muscle Shoals for the generation of hydroelectric power up to this good hour. They will not touch it. The United States Government is hooked good and hard at Muscle Shoals. It has $140,000,000 invested there. You can not apply the enterprise of the Government at Muscle Shoals with any water-power site in America.

If you strip this offer and limit it to 50 years, make it under the national water power act, you will kill the Henry Ford offer that quick. [Applause.] I would rather see the Henry Ford offer turned down as a whole than to see it butchered piecemeal and put in such a condition that Ford and his associates would not accept it.

I fear that some Members who have spoken on this subject fail to appreciate the enormous interest involved in this project, and I am almost afraid that some of them have never had to do with great, substantial interests in the country. There have been various amendments proposed putting in a forfeiture clause. Whoever heard of a $10,000,000 proposition with a forfeiture clause in it? Nobody in the world would put such a sum of money into any enterprise with a forfeiture clause tacked onto it.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. No; I can not yield; I have too little time. My idea is that if the Government is ever going to dispose of the Muscle Shoals enterprise, Henry Ford is the only man in the United States who will take it. None of these gentlemen talking about this great water power have made a proposition in good faith to handle and develop it, except they leave the maintenance of the great cyanamide plant at the expense of the United States Government. [Applause.]

The water power is not the only feature of the Ford offer; it is not the only element. Up to the time Mr. Ford made his offer, not a man or a company, either water-power companies or fertilizer companies, would touch the Muscle Shoals proposition. For months the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers sought in vain for some one, somebody, to submit an offer. The water-power interests were as silent as a grave; the fertilizer interests equally quiet. After Ford came in with his offer, the power companies and the fertilizer companies began to stir themselves, with the result that one power company submitted a sort of an offer that no man could for a moment consider. When the last Congress adjourned, without taking any definite action on the Ford offer, and everyone thought he had dropped the matter, the power company sank back into its silence. When, to their surprise, the offer was again taken up at this Congress, the power company and the fertilizers came back to life. An amalgamation of several power companies was formed recently, and this combination has put in a tentative bid. But this bid contains no promises of possible advantage to the Government. In my judgment, it is submitted only for the purpose of undertaking to delay, if not to ultimately defeat, the Ford offer. This is the reason I say no private capital will touch the Muscle Shoals proposition. This combination of power companies do not want the property, but they do not want Ford to have it. The reason is obvious.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I apprehend that I find myself in pretty much the same position on this bill as most of those Members of this House who have not had the good fortune to study the subject specifically in a committee of which they are members, or by gentlemen who find themselves interested by reason of the locality of the vicinity in which Muscle Shoals is located. I say that without any intention of reflecting on those who have a local interest. We all have local interests. I have an interest in my community and you have a right to have an interest in the locality where you live and in the development with which you are concerned.

To the average Member of this House, to the average citizen, this proposition will appear, it seems to me, about in this fashion: Here is an enormous water power which is more than a natural resource. It is not entirely a natural resource. Water-power development there is artificial; it has been created by an expenditure of $100,000,000 of the people's money. There are no natural falls at Muscle Shoals which will produce water power. We are artificially creating a water power. There are two dams 17 miles apart, and the fall in the river is only 132 feet in a distance of 37 miles, and this water-power project has been developed at a cost of over $100,000,000, and we are now to turn it over to a very distinguished gentleman, a very worthy gentleman, under very extraordinary conditions. We are to reverse the policy which this Government announced, which this Congress announced, after many years of labor in the matter of natural resources—we are to reverse the policy established by the water power act of June, 1920, and give a lease of the property upon extraordinarily liberal terms for a period of 100 years. For myself, I can reach no other conclusion than that it becomes my duty to support the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], and, in fact, I gave notice last evening, immediately prior to adjournment, that I proposed to offer an amendment, on page 18, reading very much like the proposal of the gentleman from Ohio, except that it goes some distance further. The amendment I propose is this:

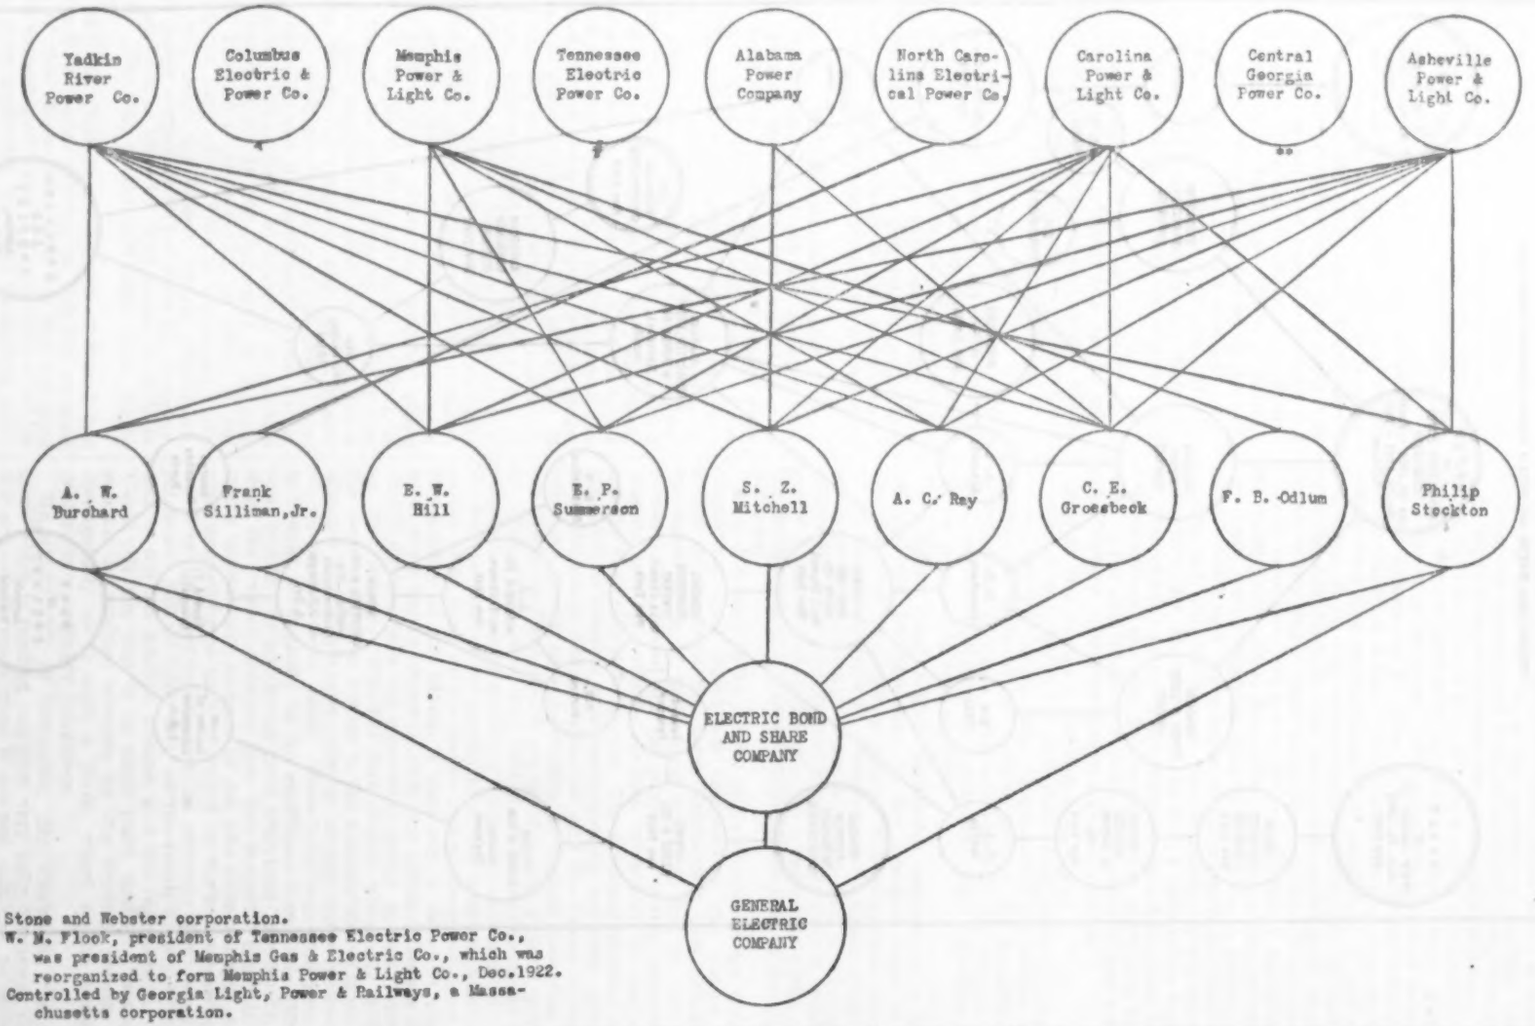
"That in the exercise and enjoyment of all rights acquired under this act, Henry Ford, his heirs, representatives, and assigns, and the company, its successors and assigns, shall, so far as applicable, be subject, except as herein specifically otherwise provided, to all the terms, provisions, obligations, restrictions, and limitations of the Federal power act of June 10, 1920."

We heard some rather persuasive arguments a moment ago to which, perhaps, some further attention might be given. One was that we ought to support this proposition because it would be antagonistic to a certain monopolistic situation in the State of Alabama; because it would tend to alleviate and relieve the labor situation of Alabama; because it would give power to those who desire to make a successful battle against the domination of a vicious political machine in the State of Alabama.



Now, I submit in all candor and earnestness, are those considerations upon which the Congress of the United States should recede from the policy established with reference to the conservation of its natural resources and go into a particular neighborhood for the purpose of giving extraordinary benefits and opportunities to men of capital, no matter how capable they may be? Ah, no. The principal question here, to my mind, is whether sufficient argument has been adduced to vary the policy and the principle and the theory of the Government's policy of conservation of natural resources which we proclaimed and which we fixed in the Federal power act of June, 1920. You may find it easy, gentlemen, to satisfy your own consciences and your own judgments that this should be done because of the proximity of the interests involved, but to the great mass of the people and to the great mass of the membership of this House, I dare say, a sufficient argument has not yet been adduced to show any adequate reason why we should deviate from the established policy of this Government on that subject. Whether this project ultimately will serve the issue of national defense in the manufacture of atmospheric nitrogen by the fixation process or any other process is a matter of very grave doubt. There have been statements made in debate, particularly by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] and by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL], which show the present situation upon that subject. I had an opportunity myself last summer to get into close contact and intimate acquaintance with a project in Norway where nitrogen has been produced by the fixation process. They have a perpendicular fall of 1,500 feet, as the result of which they are able to use the fixation process, and the engineers in the Old World tell you that in no other place, probably, would it be possible to produce nitrogen by the fixation process so advantageously as in such a place, where nature herself has created extraordinary conditions.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which is pending has been very fully discussed, although the arguments made upon it are not sufficient to satisfy my friend from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM], who has just left the floor. There is really nothing that can be added to the statements touching this tenure that have been made heretofore by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE], the gentleman

INTERLOCKING DIRECTORATES OF POWER COMPANIES OPPOSING HENRY FORD

These Nine Companies, in a letter to O. C. Merrill, Executive Secretary of the Federal Power Commission, proposed that one or more of them would make an offer for Muscle Shoals. Three of them did make an offer for the group. These were the Alabama Power Co., the Tennessee Electric Power Co., and the Memphis Power & Light Co. Their offer is found in the Hull Bill, H. R. 6781, introduced Feb. 8, 1924.

* Stone and Webster corporation.
‡ W. W. Flook, president of Tennessee Electric Power Co., was president of Memphis Gas & Electric Co., which was reorganized to form Memphis Power & Light Co., Dec. 1922.
 Controlled by Georgia Light, Power & Railways, a Massachusetts corporation.

NOTE ON ANTONY GIBBS & SONS

Report by Charles J. Brand, of the Department of Agriculture, issued June, 1923, on a special investigation of the position of Great Britain in the Chilean nitrate of soda trade, contains the following:

"In the merchant group the most important in order of their importance of those located in London are Antony Gibbs & Sons," etc.

"In theory, the actual fixing of prices is done by a committee of 16 members, elected from the important operators who conduct the oficinas in Chile. In addition to these producers' representatives, the Chilean Government designates four members of the committee. The governmental members, in fact, have very little voice in the fixing of the price.

"The larger committee, thus composed of 20 members, has a subcommittee which is resident in London and is made up of selected representatives of the British nitrate houses. * * * Practically, the London subcommittee, known as the Chilean Nitrate Committee, recommends to the whole committee in Chile what prices shall be, and its recommendation is almost invariably adopted. This is an interesting situation from an American standpoint, as the United States purchases about 50 per cent of all the nitrate exported from Chile and has no voice whatever in the fixing of prices."

(A report from the American consulate general, Santiago, Chile, Aug. 11, 1922, states H. C. Gibbs of Antony Gibbs & Sons, London, was the representative of the London committee who went to Chile and negotiated with the producers and the Chilean Government for an agreement to relieve the nitrate distress in Chile in 1922.)

from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES], the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER], and other gentlemen who have discussed the question. I do not criticize the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] for presenting the amendment. He is perfectly within his rights, and he did a very logical thing. He is opposed absolutely to the proposition, and therefore he takes the method of presenting an amendment which he understands and which every other Member of the House should understand means, if it be adopted, the defeat of the proposition. We need not deceive ourselves about that. Therefore it seems proper that at this time there should be laid before the committee certain conditions that exist, that have not yet been fully presented, so far as I have heard, in the course of the argument.

The head and front of the opposition to the Ford offer is the Alabama Power Co.; not that it is conducting the fight alone, but because it has been put in the lead to undertake to destroy the proposition. That company is the company which during the days of the war took advantage of the Government's necessities and in the hour of the country's trial and tribulation forced upon the Government an unconscionable contract. That company is controlled by its common stock, and that common stock is owned by a Canadian corporation. I have before me a chart, which I see is being distributed among the members of the committee, and I hope gentlemen will glance at it for a moment. The first sheet shows the interlocking connections between the several power companies that made the last offer, or alleged offer, on the Muscle Shoals project, the Alabama Power Co. and the associated companies, and gentlemen who will follow the lines on that chart will see how these companies are interlocked and how they lead down finally through the Electric Bond & Share Co. to the General Electric Co. If gentlemen will then turn to the second chart they will find three firms, each occupying a larger circle, which have made offers, the central circle being occupied by the Associated Power Cos., of which the head and front, as I have said, is the Alabama Power Co. The offer upon the right is that of E. H. Hooker, W. W. Atterbury, and J. G. White. That upon the left is the offer of the Union Carbide Co. If gentlemen will follow the lines of those various offers through the different circles and through the individual names that are mentioned in the circles they will observe the way by which, through this system of interlocking directorates, the Alabama Power Co. leads back through this Canadian corporation to the Bank of England and to Sperling & Co., of England. Then if gentlemen will look to the middle of the left-hand side they observe the Chilean Nitrate Producers' Association. That has made no offer, but that is the concern from which this country is buying all of the nitrates used in fertilizer.

If gentlemen will follow the lines of that they will find that it goes through Antony Gibbs & Co., of New York, Antony Gibbs & Son, of London, England, Lord Cullen, of Ashbourne, back to the Bank of England. So you have the united power companies of the United States and the concern from which we obtain all of the nitrates that we now use, both in time of peace and time of war, leading back to two English concerns.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It seems to me, therefore, gentlemen of the House, that it is about time to have an American firm upon this American matter. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. MORGAN. Is it not a further fact that this English corporation controls the transportation of this product, the nitrate of Chile, through William R. Grace & Co., of New York?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I can not say about the control of the transportation through the concern the gentleman mentions, but it is undoubtedly true that now, since Germany became independent herself as to nitrates during the war, there has been left to England the great control over all Chilean nitrates so far as production and marketing of it are concerned.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] referred to the fact that he had never been able to talk to Mr. Ford about this proposition. One of the things that has struck me with very great favor about this matter is that so far as I know no Member of Congress has ever had an opportunity to talk with Mr. Ford about the proposition, and he has never sought an opportunity to confer with any Member of Congress concerning it. I wish that these other companies that are fighting it could be in as favorable a situation in so far as keeping their hands off as Mr. Ford is. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then, under the leave granted for extension, I insert the charts with certain explanatory statements.

THE INTERNATIONAL NITRATE TRUST

Antony Gibbs & Sons, who have a direct connection with the General Electric Co., as shown in the accompanying diagram, are named in a special report of the Department of Agriculture issued in June, 1923, as the most important of the London members of the international group interested in nitrate of soda. Not only are they the most important of the great London nitrate firms, but they are the most important firm supplying the French trade and own outright one of the principal distributers of nitrate in this country—the American firm of H. J. Baker & Bro.

In 1919 Antony Gibbs & Sons took the leadership in the organization of the Chilean Nitrate Producers' Association, an international trust whose principal purpose is to fix the price at which nitrates may be sold.

Quoting from the report:

In theory the actual fixing of prices is done by a committee of 16 members elected from the important operators who conduct the "oficinas" (nitrate factories) in Chile. In addition to these producers' representatives the Chilean Government designates four members of the committee. The governmental members, in fact, have very little voice in the fixing of the price.

The larger committee, thus composed of 20 members, has a subcommittee which is resident in London and is made up of selected representatives of the British nitrate houses. * * * practically the London subcommittee, known as the Chilean Nitrate Committee, recommends to the whole committee in Chile what prices shall be, and its recommendation is almost invariably adopted. This is an interesting situation from an American standpoint, as the United States purchases about 50 per cent of all the nitrate exported from Chile and has no voice whatever in the fixing of prices. (Report of Charles J. Brand, consulting specialist in marketing, United States Department of Agriculture, entitled "The Position of Great Britain in the Chilean Nitrate of Soda Trade.")

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported in the gentleman's time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BURTON:

Page 2, line 23, after the words "United States" insert the words "under the terms of the Federal water power act."

Page 3, line 2, strike out the words "one hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifty."

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, neither the Committee on Military Affairs, the Members supporting the Ford offer, nor those opposing the Ford offer have had an opportunity to investigate the facts so graphically set forth in the charts which were just distributed throughout this Chamber and which purport to show the interrelations of the Tennessee Electric Power Co., the Memphis Power & Light Co., the Alabama Power Co., and various other corporations. As far as I am concerned I know nothing about the interlocking of these various corporations or about the corporations themselves except what appears in the hearings before the Military Affairs Committee; but it might be well for me to say, so far as I know, neither one of the members of the Committee on Military Affairs by the name of HILL, neither the gentleman from Alabama nor myself, know anything about nor have ever had anything to do with Mr. E. W. Hill, whose name appears on these papers as interested in one of these companies.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] said it was well known that the acceptance of this particular amendment, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] to place this project under the Federal water power act, would mean the defeat of the Ford proposition. If the adoption of this amendment and adherence thereby to the deliberately accepted policy of the United States, accepted after mature consideration, for the conservation of the national resources, should result in a defeat of the Ford proposition, it ought to result in that defeat. [Applause.]

I knew nothing of any of these companies, neither the Alabama Power Co. nor any of them, until the Committee on Military Affairs took up for consideration this offer; but for over two years this committee has studied this question. I do not in any way attempt to depreciate the extraordinary enthusiasm of the gentlemen who favor the Ford offer. I speak merely as a member of the committee who for two years made a study of the question. At the end of the last Congress the views of the minority were expressed in a very able report submitted by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEARNS]. Our views are practically the same to-day—that neither nitrate plant No. 1 nor nitrate plant No. 2 should be sold. They cost the taxpayers of this country too much money. They ought to be leased, together with the hydraulic electric power created by Dam No. 2, and this lease ought to be made under the Federal water power act. Now, the gentleman from Tennessee states that if you adopt the Burton amendment you defeat the Ford offer.

I have heard that suggestion raised, not by the gentleman from Tennessee but by certain members of the Committee on Military Affairs, in the last two years in reference to every proposal for change in the Ford offer that has been made. In spite, however, of this repeated protest we have caused from time to time changes or modifications of the Ford offer, and I can here show you the hearings and suggest to you that in spite of what has been repeatedly stated we still have the Ford offer with us, and to predict that even if the Burton amendment is adopted and you put this project under the Federal water power act Henry Ford and his interests will still jump at and grab at Muscle Shoals.

I desire to call to your attention the fact that there have been several Ford offers. There was the Ford offer on the 25th day of January, 1922, that we considered seriously and which itself was a modification of a previous offer. That offer was abandoned in certain particulars after hearings before our committee, and there was afterwards substituted the offer of the 31st of May, 1922, which we now have under consideration. Now, gentlemen, please mark this: As a direct result of the criticism and antagonism of the Committee on Military Affairs, as shown in the hearings on this proposition, Mr. Ford, through his agent, Mr. Mayo, abandoned the provisions contained in section 17 of his 25th of January offer by which he attempted to secure a perpetual extra right after the first 100 years. I ask you to direct your attention to page 16 of the original hearings.

Section 17 of the offer of January 25, 1922, provided:

17. In order that said company may be supplied with electric power and the farmers with fertilizers after the termination of the said 100-year leases, should the United States elect not to operate said power plants but determine to lease or dispose of same, the company shall have the preferred right to negotiate with the United States for such lease or purchase and upon such terms as may then be agreed upon. If the said leases are not renewed or the property covered thereby is not sold to said company, its successors or assigns, any operation or disposal thereof shall not deprive the company, its successors or assigns, of the right to be supplied with electric power at reasonable rates and in amount equal to its needs, but not in excess of the average amount used by it annually during the previous 10 years.

Note the second paragraph of this section. The Ford representative at first insisted upon it, as they did at the same time in the 100-year original term, but they dropped it. They dropped it because of the following opposition in the Committee on Military Affairs. Mr. Mayo said Mr. Ford would not consider a 50-year franchise. He also said Mr. Ford wanted the "preferred" claim after the 100 years. He dropped the latter, and if you make the term 50 years under the Federal water power act Mr. Ford will accept it.

I ask your careful consideration of the following questions I asked Mr. Mayo when he appeared before the Military Affairs Committee as agent for Mr. Ford on February 14, 1922:

Mr. FIELDS. Do you care to express a positive opinion, Mr. Mayo, as to whether Mr. Ford would consider the Muscle Shoals proposition under a 50-year franchise?

Mr. MAYO. No, sir; Mr. Ford would not consider it.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Mayo, this question depends particularly on the duration of this franchise. Will you please turn to paragraph 17 of Mr. Ford's amended offer, at the top of page 18? That paragraph reads as follows:

> "In order that said company may be supplied with electric power and the farmers with fertilizers after the termination of the said 100-year leases, should the United States elect not to operate said power plants but determine to lease or dispose of same, the company shall have the preferred right to negotiate with the United States for such lease or purchase and upon such terms as may then be agreed upon."

As I understand it, that means at the end of the 100-year period?

Mr. MAYO. Yes, sir.

Mr. HILL. And it is your opinion that Mr. Ford would not make this proposition except on a 100-year period basis?

Mr. MAYO. Yes, sir; that is correct.

Mr. HILL. Paragraph 17 continues:

> "If the said leases are not renewed or the property covered thereby is not sold to said company, its successors, or assigns, any operation or disposal thereof shall not deprive the company, its successors, or assigns of the right to be supplied with electric power at reasonable rates and in amount equal to its needs but not in excess of the average amount used by it annually during the previous 10 years."

As I read that it looks to me as if after the 100-year period, should this proposition be accepted, there is a perpetual right on the part of the company or its successors or assigns to be provided with an amount of power equal to its needs, not in excess of the average amount used by it annually during the previous 10 years. My construction is that beyond the 100-year period there is an absolutely perpetual, prior claim by this company on the United States Government to be furnished with that amount of power. What is your view on that?

Mr. MAYO. The thought in framing that paragraph was that we would have a very large investment built up around the dams, and that it would not be fair to the company to take the power from under their feet and give it to some one else; but they should have a preferred claim, everything else being equal.

Mr. HILL. Now, then, that paragraph, according to Mr. Ford's intention, means that after the 100-year period, if it is not arranged that his interests or the successors of his company shall buy the property, he will have a perpetual right to get indefinitely and have a first lien on the power that is produced there, not to exceed the average amount used annually in the previous 10 years.

Mr. MAYO. He thought he ought to have it, everything else being equal.

Mr. HILL. That is a very unusual arrangement; it is one I had not noticed before. Here is the proposition which he puts up, as I understand it: It does not make any difference what the ultimate disposition is, his company has a perpetual first claim on the plant after the 100-year period; is that not right?

Mr. MAYO. Yes, sir.

Mr. HILL. Do you think it is a proper thing for the United States Government to tie itself up in reference to this plant forever?

Mr. MAYO. I think so. I do not see that they can lose anything by doing so. They can always exact of him whatever they could get from anybody else.

Mr. HILL. Does Mr. Ford put very much stress on this clause relating to after the 100-year period?

Mr. MAYO. I think so. He will have built up a plant to absorb all the power, and if you took the power away from him the plants would have no value.

Mr. HILL. As I understand this proposition, if at the end of 100 years Mr. Ford's company is not allowed to purchase this plant they have still in perpetuum a prior lien on the output of this plant up to its full capacity, not in excess of the average annual amount which he has taken for the previous 10 years.

Mr. MAYO. Yes, sir.

Mr. HILL. In other words, it is indefinite, forever.

Mr. MAYO. Yes; but the terms are to be agreed upon.

Mr. HILL. This clause does not say so.

Mr. MAYO. I thought it did. It says "upon such terms as may then be agreed upon."

Mr. HILL. No; it says——

Mr. MAYO (interposing). The thought was that he should get the power at the going rate which anybody else would pay for it at that time.

Mr. HILL. But it gives him a prior lien.

Mr. MAYO. As I read it, it only gives him a preference, at a rate to be agreed upon.

Mr. HILL. My thought was that Mr. Ford did not intend to tie the United States Government up forever.

Mr. MAYO. It was not meant to tie them up. He figured he had a very large investment there and that he ought to have a preference at an equal rate.

Mr. HILL. Let me read this clause to you: "If the said leases are not renewed or the property covered thereby is not sold to such company, its successors or assigns, any operation or disposal thereof shall not deprive the company, its successors, or assigns, of the right to be supplied with electric power at reasonable rates and in amount equal to its needs, but not in excess of the average amount used by it annually during the previous 10 years."

Suppose in the previous 10 years the company used every ounce of power, and then suppose that the 100-year lease terminates, and suppose the United States wants to use this plant for its own purposes. As I read that provision of the lease the United States is bound forever to continue to give to this company this prior right on that amount, so that the United States could not use it for any other purpose; is that not your understanding?

Mr. MAYO. On the basis of reasonable terms.

Mr. HILL. I am not talking about the terms; I am talking about the amount. There is no option as to the amount.

Mr. MAYO. I understand exactly what you mean. That paragraph was put in there in fairness only. If we were using 100 per cent of the power when the 100-year period lapsed, although we had used only 75 per cent during the prior 10 years, we would have the right to ask for only 75 per cent of it.

Mr. HILL. It seems to me this is rather important, and I would like to get it clear. If, say, in the previous 10 years of the contract, from the ninetieth to the one-hundredth year, this company or its successors or assigns uses every kilowatt of power, and then, after that, if the United States decides not to sell to them, then that company or its successors or assigns has a prior claim on the output of the plant; is that not right?

Mr. MAYO. It says "reasonable rates" to be made at that time.

Mr. HILL. Subject to rates, but not as to amount.

Mr. MAYO. It would cover the whole amount, if we had used the whole amount the last 10 years.

Mr. HILL. Is not that, then, a virtual disposition in perpetuity of this property to that company?

Mr. MAYO. At reasonable rates; yes, sir.

Mr. HILL. Forever?

Mr. MAYO. At reasonable rates.

Mr. HILL. Leave the rates out.

Mr. MAYO. Oh, but the rates come in.

Mr. HILL. No; they do not.

Mr. MAYO. I think they do.

Mr. HILL. Does this not contemplate an agreement that whether at the end of the 100 years or not the United States decides not to sell to this company, that company, under certain conditions, shall be entitled to all the output forever, irrespective of anything except the fixing of rates? Is that clear? My own thought was that this particular paragraph did not mean what it appears to mean, because that had not been raised before.

Mr. MAYO. The intent is that after the 100-year period has lapsed the company has the right to get the same amount of power that they have been using the last preceding 10 years at a reasonable rate.

Mr. HILL. Forever?

Mr. MAYO. Yes; subject to agreement.

Mr. HILL. I do not see anything like that here; I see the absolute grant of a perpetual first lien on the purchase of this company, and I want to ask if that is the intention of this offer?

Mr. MAYO. In the third line of the paragraph it says, "the preferred right to negotiate."

Mr. HILL. Yes; I see that. Paragraph 17 is made up of two parts, and the first part takes up the possible sale to this company.

Mr. MAYO. And upon such terms as may then be agreed upon.

Mr. HILL. That is the sale.

Mr. MAYO. It says "for the lease or purchase."

Mr. HILL. That ends with the word "upon." I invite your attention to the following words: "If the said leases are not renewed or the property covered thereby is not sold to said company, its successors or assigns, any operation or disposal thereof shall not deprive the company, its successors or assigns, of the right to be supplied with electric power at reasonable rates and in amount equal to its needs, but not in excess of the average amount used by it annually during the previous 10 years."

The point I have especially in mind in connection with that is this: Suppose at the end of this 100-year period it has become obvious to the people of the United States that the United States should own all its great water powers and control them itself, and dispose of them itself, in its own way, dispose of the products of them. That is not an inconceivable thing?

Mr. MAYO. No, sir.

Mr. HILL. As I read the second part of paragraph 17, there is conveyed there an absolute right, the taking away of which would be a violation of the guaranties of the Constitution, which gives this company a prior claim on the output of this particular project. I want to ask if that is the intention? It seems to me it is.

Mr. MAYO. The Government is the owner of this dam for the 100 years, is it not?

Mr. HILL. The Government would be the owner after the 100 years?

Mr. MAYO. No, sir; they are always the owner.

Mr. HILL. Oh, yes; but there is a lease up to the 100-year period?

Mr. MAYO. Yes, sir.

Mr. HILL. What I mean to say is that although this appears to be only a lease up to 100 years, it is practically a grant in perpetuity, absolutely, without the 100-year period?

Mr. MAYO. But in that time, if it should be decided that the Government should own its water powers, it always owns this one, and it seems to me this would be subject to the same rules and regulations under which they would sell their power from other dams.

Mr. HILL. But you would have a preferred claim on the output?

Mr. MAYO. We think we should have.

Mr. HILL. You think that under this contract this company which Mr. Ford proposes to create should have forever a preferred claim on all the output of this plant; is that right?

Mr. MAYO. Oh, yes, sir; at reasonable terms. If the Government is selling all of its own power, controlling all of its own power, we should get it at the going rate.

Mr. HILL. On reasonable terms, as to terms, but not as to output. You would acquire a perpetual exclusive right to use the output; is that not right?

Mr. MAYO. Not all the output, but the average amount we had used for the last 10 years. It was taken for granted that in that time the thing would become stabilized, and we would be using a certain amount of power and that we would have the right to use that power. There are indefinite grants of power rights on navigable streams. The Mississippi River Power Co. has one at Keokuk, Iowa; the Alabama Power Co. has one at Lock 12 on the Coosa River. There are a number of others. The idea is nothing new.

Mr. HILL. If you had used all the power, you would have the right to all of the output?

Mr. MAYO. Yes, sir.

In the foregoing hearings Mr. Mayo insisted on prior and perpetual rights after the termination of 100 years, just as to-day his friends insist on the 100-year term. After the above hearing Mr. Ford dropped this claim.

I ask you to direct your attention to section 18 of the later offer of May 31, 1922, and section 17 of the McKenzie bill, and then to refer back to section 17 of the original Ford offer, which I have just quoted. The hearings show my questions.

The amended offer of Mr. Ford drops the quite untenable claim for priority after the 100 years. Mr. Ford evidently decided that he had better drop this demand. Note section 18 of the May 31 offer:

SEC. 18. In order that said company may be supplied with electric power and the farmers and other users with fertilizers after the termination of the said 100-year leases, should the United States elect not to operate said power plants but determine to lease or dispose of same, the company shall have the preferred right to negotiate with the United States for such lease or purchase and upon such terms as may then be prescribed by Congress.

Nor does the McKenzie bill revive the old demand of January 25, 1922. Here is the section of the pending McKenzie bill:

SEC. 17. In order that said company may be supplied with electric power and the farmers and other users with fertilizers after the termination of the said 100-year lease, should the United States elect not to operate said power plants but determine to lease or dispose of same, the company shall have the preferred right to negotiate with the United States for such lease or purchase and upon such terms as may then be prescribed by Congress.

Mr. Mayo said in 1922 that if we did not give Mr. Ford priority after the original 100 years he would not continue his offer. The committee protested against it in the numerous hearings before the committee, and Mr. Ford cut that clause from his present offer, and it does not appear in the McKenzie bill.

Gentlemen, we stand here responsible only to the American people for the disposition of the greatest nitrate plant in this country, a nitrate plant that the Secretary of War says at the present time, with the Waco Quarry and plant No. 2 in connection, will turn out enough nitrate to take care of two field armies of 1,000,000 men. I am not against the leasing of these dams or the leasing of these nitrate plants, and so forth, for a reasonable period of time. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] says if you make the term 50 years you will kill the Ford offer. I say to you that Mr. Ford's agents said they would not submit their proposition again if they did not have a prior option to continue their contract at the end of the 100 years. When that was cut out by the committee the Ford agents still made their offer. The question you will vote on is whether we will stand by the Federal water power act—and I hope you will vote in favor of it, as expressed by the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio. [Applause.]

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, when we first took up this matter for consideration two years ago the Secretary of War appeared before us as a witness, and I asked him this question:

Mr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Secretary, I will be very brief. If we should adopt your suggestion to change this plan from a 100-year term to a 50-year franchise, it would simply be a refusal to accept the offer made by Mr. Ford and would necessitate the submission of an entirely new proposition, would it not?

Secretary WEEKS. It would, unless Mr. Ford agreed to it.

Mr. Ford declined to agree to it. Now, my friends, we are up to a point of casting a very important vote.

The amendment is offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] in all good faith, and I want to say to him and to all other gentlemen like my friend from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON], who are so conscientious about the water power act, do not deceive yourselves, my good friends; gentlemen, do not deceive yourselves with the idea that by voting through any such amendment as that it will be possible to settle this great question in the interest of the American people. The water power act is all right in its place. I voted for it. It embodies an agency for the Government to do certain things for us. But when we created that commission and when I voted for it I did not surrender my rights as a Member of the Congress of the United States, nor did Congress surrender its sovereignty over the agency which it had created. It is simply an agency, and to come in now and say that the Congress of the United States shall not have the right in its majesty to take hold of a great proposition like this and determine it, to my mind, is a very poor argument to make. The man that is making it from a conscientious standpoint I do not criticize, but whence comes the demand? As the gentleman from Tennessee pointed out, it does not come from the toiling millions of this country. I want to say to my colleague from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM], who spoke here yesterday afternoon in favor of this proposition and for the defeat of the Ford offer, that the farmers of America are not asking him to do that; the workingmen of Rock Island and Moline and the hundreds of thousands of workingmen elsewhere and railroad men everywhere are not asking us to do this. The great business interests of our country outside of the corporate powers that are now interested in transmitting this current are not interested in defeating this proposition.

I want to say to you, my friends, and especially you on this side of the House, the old 157 standpatters, of whom I was one, who marched down to defeat here a few days ago while holding up the banner of Andrew Mellon to reduce further the surtaxes of certain of our citizens, I believed then, as it was alleged, and I believe now that it is a sound economic policy; but you, my friends, who have followed the banner of the Republican Party as I have from my boyhood days, proud of its achievements, and who have stood before thousands of people and boasted how we had protected the rights of the people, how we had stood for the interests of the common workingman, and how we had stood for the farmers, and how we had stood for big business and for giving big business a square deal, let me appeal to you, my friends. We are in power. We are responsible for action in this House. And in God's name, are you going to permit a great measure like this, that is fraught with more potential good to this country than any measure I have ever had the pleasure to support, are you going to quibble and find fault and try to find a little subterranean passage to get out and let it go to the country that the Republicans are opposed to this measure? I hope you are not going to do it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. BURTON. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 79, noes 169.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Tellers are demanded.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. MCKENZIE and Mr. BURTON to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 104, noes 182.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WILLIAMSON: Page 3, line 8, strike out all of line 8 after the word "facilities," all of line 9, and all of line 10 appearing before the word "payable."

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported. We could not hear it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, under the offer as it now stands and as it is embodied in this bill, Henry Ford will only pay interest in the way of rental upon what is expended on Dam No. 2 after May 31, 1922. Prior to that time this Government had expended more than $17,000,000 upon Dam No. 2. Every dollar of this money went into construction work and not into improvements. The $17,000,000 spent is just as much a part of the cost of Dam No. 2 as the additional millions that we have spent since May 31, 1922, and the further millions that we will expend before the dam shall have been completed. There is no more justification in exempting Henry Ford from the payment of interest upon the first $17,000,000 than there is for exempting him on the millions spent subsequently upon this dam. We have already, under this proposal, agreed to give to Henry Ford $80,000,000 worth of property for $1,500,000. He proposes to give us $5,000,000 in payment for $85,000,000 worth of property. This included the Gorgas steam plant which cost $5,000,000. Under this bill we are giving him back $3,472,481 we received for this plant for the construction of another steam plant in lieu of the Gorgas plant. It is the most munificent gift ever given to mortal man, and that this Congress should ever think of handing over an additional gift in the way of an exemption from the payment of interest upon the first $17,000,000 put into this dam is quite inconceivable, yet the advocates of this bill seem determined to do that very thing.

It has been said here that Henry Ford proposes to amortize the entire cost of these two dams in 100 years; but, my friends, this proposed amortization does not include interest upon the $17,000,000. Not only that but his total payments to this Government in 100 years' time only amounts to $4,368,378 under the amortization paragraph, an infinitesimal sum when compared with what he gets. If we were to amortize the interest paid, together with the sinking fund, we should, indeed, have a pyramid of striking dimensions at the end of the 100-year period. But, on the other hand, if we were to amortize the loss to the Government as the result of turning over this vast plant to Henry Ford on the same basis we should have another beside which the first would be a mere pigmy. Our losses, with interest compounded at 4 per cent annually, would amount to $1,470,000,000. If it is fair to figure that way on behalf of Mr. Ford, it is equaly fair to figure upon the same basis on behalf of the American people, whom we are supposed to represent.

As I said to this House the other day, this Government, by retaining possession of its own plant, can manufacture fertilizers as cheaply as Henry Ford, and by disposing of the surplus current can retire the entire cost of the plant in 50 years' time. Capital cost will then be eliminated and it can manufacture fertilizer and sell current at actual cost of operation.

Much has been said about the Alabama Power Co. But, gentlemen, the Alabama Power Co. is not concerned here, and, so far as I am concerned, I have never seen a representative of the Alabama Power Co. since I came to Congress. There has not been any kind of propaganda that I know anything about by this company for more than 18 months. Constant reference to this and other companies here is ridiculous, and is put forward in order to befog the issue.

The fact is, gentlemen, that this offer can not be defended upon any principle of justice or with any regard to the rights of the American people. Indeed, its proponents have practically ceased to defend it, but are determined to put it across regardless of the American taxpayers. We are told to follow the Republicans. Who are the Republicans? A mere handful of them just voted against the Burton amendment, which would have compelled Ford to come under the water power act. The Republican supporters of this bill are working with the Democrats, not with the big majority on their side of the House. It is not, gentlemen, a party issue; I concede that; it is not a southern issue; it is not a northern issue; it is a national issue, and we ought to stand up and see to it that every last dollar in the American Treasury is not given to Henry Ford. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. WILLIAMSON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAMSON) there were—ayes 44, noes 110.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. The company will further pay to the United States during the period of the lease of Dam No. 2, $35,000 annually, in installments quarterly in advance, for repairs, maintenance, and operation of Dam No. 2, its gates and locks; it being understood that all necessary repairs, maintenance, and operation thereof shall be under the direction, care, and responsibility of the United States during the said 100-year lease period; and the company, at its own expense, will make all necessary renewals and repairs incident to efficient maintenance of the power house, substructures, superstructures, machinery, and appliances appurtenant to said power house, and will maintain the same in efficient operating condition.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BURTON: Page 3, in section 4, strike out lines 18 to 25, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "The company, during the period of this lease, shall, at its own expense, provide for the necessary repairs, maintenance, and operation of Dam No. 2, its gates and locks."

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, the purport of this amendment is perfectly clear. It is to compel the grantee under this license to do what every other licensee must do and what is done in every other business transaction, namely, pay the expense of maintenance.

There is here provision for a ridiculously small amount. These dams are to cost, one of them probably between $50,000,000 and $60,000,000, the other $25,000,000. The first is to be leased for 100 years and the amount that is to be paid by this company is $35,000 a year, much less than 1 per cent.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Would it not take more than $35,000 to operate the locks, as there are two of them 60 feet wide and 300 feet long?

Mr. BURTON. Yes; that is a very good suggestion. It will probably require four to six men in three shifts, and the mere operation of the locks will cost more than $35,000 a year.

Now, I am keenly disappointed in the vote that was just taken, but I want to be a good sport and be good-natured about it. I have been defeated before, but I repeat what I said day before yesterday, that I have had some experience with this very Tennessee River. A measure was passed here and I was very much attacked because I opposed granting the right to construct dams at any place in the river along by Muscle Shoals. The newspapers especially were somewhat bitter about it, but within eight months, beginning with a telegram from the mayor of Huntsville and signed by the leading citizens, they asked me to defeat that very bill that had been passed, and I did defeat it by inserting a provision in the river and harbor bill of 1907.

History sometimes repeats itself. It may not be so soon as that, but I think this House will hear from the country; I think it will hear from the farmers of the country, and I desire in this connection, as it has been very generally supposed that the farmers were all in favor of this, to repeat what I said the other day, that it is only one of about half dozen such organizations that is in favor of the Ford plan.

Why should it be considered that there is only one man who can carry out this proposition? Why should we kotow to Henry Ford? I deplore the amount of dust that has been scattered in the air about the Alabama Power Co. That is all aside from the question. I do not care for any of them, but I do care for seeing the rights of the Government and of the people of the United States preserved as they would be preserved by the act of 1920. [Applause.]

Now, gentlemen, if you wish to vote down this amendment, understand just what you are doing. You are imposing upon the Government of the United States the obligation of maintaining a dam costing $60,000,000, which, as the gentleman from Texas has said, might wash away at any time, for the beggarly pittance of $35,000 a year. Vote that way if you wish to, but I wish to have it understood, while you are voting on this subject, the kind of support there is behind this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to have this paper inserted in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to have a paper inserted in the RECORD as part of his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

NATIONAL GRANGE, P. OF H.,
Washington, D. C., March 5, 1924.

Hon. THEODORE E. BURTON,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of March 5 just to hand, and in reply will say that the National Grange has never at any time specifically indorsed the Henry Ford Muscle Shoals proposition, but at each session of the National Grange has for the last three years passed some kind of a resolution with reference to Muscle Shoals.

I am inclosing a copy of the resolution adopted at its last session at Pittsburgh last November. An identical resolution was adopted the year before, and in somewhat modified form similar resolutions had been previously adopted.

Trusting that this satisfactorily answers your inquiry, I am,

Yours sincerely,

T. C. ATKESON,
Washington Representative.

MUSCLE SHOALS.

We repeat our former declaration that that great development of natural resources at Muscle Shoals should be leased or sold by the Government to the highest bidder on such terms as will best safeguard and protect the interests of the public, or that it be operated by the Government at once. To do this effectively, measures should be enacted into law which guarantee, first, that nitrate and fertilizer production to the capacity of the project will be continually carried on; second, that the entire project be made available for military uses in times of war; third, that experimental and research work be established to develop and to discover new and approved methods for fixing nitrogen and manufacturing fertilizers; fourth, that sufficient power shall be guaranteed in times of peace to operate the project at its full capacity; fifth, that provision be made for reimbursing the Government the additional money required to complete the project.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the committee, is recognized.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am not going to take your time to discuss this amendment further than to say that I do not put my judgment up against the judgment of my distinguished friend from Ohio. The gentleman has had more experience than I have had, but I rely on a friend of his, Gen. Lansing H. Beach, the Chief of the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army, who stated to our committee that $50,000 would take care of this work on the two dams. General Beach wrote a letter to the Secretary of War stating that $50,000 would do it, and therefore I am bound to believe the Chief of Engineers of our Army, and I ask for a vote.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. I merely wanted to bring out the fact that anything General Beach said——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I have offered a substitute which is in order under the rules and I ask that it be read.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, have I the floor?

Mr. BLANTON. I presume we are working under the rules of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Texas will subside until we get order, the gentleman will be recognized.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the gentleman from Illinois yield the floor?

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. The gentleman yielded to me for a question.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Who has the floor?

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes; I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. I wanted to ask the gentleman if what he said about General Beach included putting up the dam again if it was swept away. General Beach merely covered the upkeep and not replacing it in case it was destroyed by earthquake or in some other way.

Mr. McKENZIE. Certainly, and if the Government was operating the dams and they were washed away they would have to replace them.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I move the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MAPES, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 518) to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to sell to Henry Ford nitrate plant No. 1, at Sheffield, Ala.; nitrate plant No. 2, at Muscle Shoals, Ala.; Waco Quarry, near Russellville, Ala.; and to lease to the corporation to be incorporated by him Dam No. 2 and Dam No. 3 (as designated in H. Doc. 262, 64th Cong., 1st sess.), including power stations when constructed as provided herein, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE OF AGRICULTURE AT ROME (S. DOC. NO. 58).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President which, with the accompanying papers, was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

To the Congress of the United States:

I invite the attention of the Congress to the accompanying report of the Secretary of State concerning requests made by the Secretary of Agriculture that legislation be obtained that will enable an appropriation of $10,045 to be made for the expenses of nine delegates to the meeting of the General Assembly of the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome in May next, and an appropriation of $5,000 to enable the United States to meet the obligation which would be incurred in requesting the admission to the institute of Hawaii, the Philippines, Porto Rico, and the Virgin Islands.

I quite agree with the views of the Secretary of State and the Secretary of Agriculture that it is important to the agricultural interests of the United States that this country should be adequately represented in the General Assembly of the institute, and that the United States should have in the assembly a voting strength and influence equal to that of any other country. I therefore commend the requests to the favorable consideration of the Congress.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 7, 1924.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 a. m. to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there are committee meetings to-morrow morning, and all of us are interested in this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, March 8, 1924, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, March 8, 1924.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Who is like unto Thee, O Lord? Thou art the author of life, death, and immortality. Lift us to the height of our noblest love and our finest convictions. Clothe us with great decision of character that gives vital guidance and without which human strength is weakness and human wisdom a perplexity. Deliver us from the power and strife of sin. Let us know Him who said "I am the truth," and thus find a solution for all the spiritual problems of life. Persuade us that peace of mind and rest of soul come with the "Prince of Peace." This season set apart for reflection, meditation, and prayer—may it be helpful to all and direct us to look into our lives and feel deeply the necessity of redeeming and preserving grace. In the name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 6349) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

MARBLE TABLET ON FRANCIS SCOTT KEY BRIDGE.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate Joint Resolution 91, to authorize the National Society United States Daughters of 1812 to place a marble tablet on the Francis Scott Key Bridge, and to consider the same at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table and consider at this time Senate Joint Resolution No. 91. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 91) to authorize the National Society United States Daughters of 1812 to place a marble tablet on the Francis Scott Key Bridge.

Resolved, etc., That the National Society United States Daughters of 1812 is authorized to place on the Francis Scott Key Bridge across the Potomac River a marble tablet inscribed with the insignia of such society and with the last verse of The Star-Spangled Banner, after the plans and specifications for such tablet have been submitted to and approved by the Commission of Fine Arts on such plans and specifications.

SEC. 2. Such tablet shall be erected without expense to the Government of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ALLEGED CHARGES AGAINST TWO MEMBERS OF CONGRESS—REPLY OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
March 7, 1924.

THE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIR: Resolution No. 211 of the House of Representatives of the United States passed March 6, 1924, directing me to transmit the names of the two Members of Congress mentioned in the report of the grand jury of the district court of the United States for the northern district of Illinois, eastern division, and the nature of the charges made against such Members of Congress can not be complied with by me for the reasons—

First. I am unwilling to make public the name of any man against whom any criminal charge has been made until the evidence in my possession convinces me that there is reasonable ground to believe that the person is guilty as charged and until proper legal steps shall have been taken to protect the public interests.

Second. To transmit to you the nature of the charges made against any persons under investigation in the Department of Justice is incompatible with the public interest and will tend to defeat the ends of justice.

If, however, the House of Representatives of the United States, acting within its constitutional power (under Article I) to punish its Members for disorderly behavior or to expel such Member, requests that all the evidence now in the possession of anyone connected with the Department of Justice shall be turned over to the House of Representatives to enable it to determine what action should be taken by the House in reference to the conduct of any of its Members, I will direct all such evidence, statements, and information obtainable to be immediately turned over to you or to such committee as may be designated by the House and will await the complete investigation of the facts of the House before continuing the investigation now being made by the Department of Justice. To have two tribunals attempting to act upon the same facts and to hear the same witnesses at the same time will result in confusion and embarrassment and will defeat the ends of justice.

Until I am requested by a resolution of the House of Representatives to submit these matters to the jurisdiction of the House the investigation now being conducted of the matters referred to in said resolution will continue in accordance with the usual rules of the department.

Respectfully, H. M. DAUGHERTY, Attorney General.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the communication of the Attorney General be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to report at the earliest possible moment its conclusions and such recommendations as it may see fit to make.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for five minutes?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, the day before yesterday this House passed a resolution directing, commanding I may say, the Department of Justice to report to this House the names of the two Members charged with the commission of crime, and the nature of the accusation against them. This reply of the Attorney General which has just been read is mere quibbling. It is an outrage upon the dignity of this House and upon the integrity of its membership for the Attorney General to say now that he can not give the names. [Applause.] I do not know whether the honored occupant of the chair of the Speakership of this House, the majority leader, the minority leader, or who may be under suspicion. We ought to know. This man, the Attorney General, who is a creature of ours, ought to be made to tell us who these suspected Members are and ought to be made to submit the evidence to this House so that we may purge ourselves if there are those among us who have been guilty of crime.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Can the gentleman possibly imagine how it can interfere with the ends of justice if the names and the evidence and the nature of the offense charged be given us?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I can not. No Member of this House will flee justice if his name be given. He could not do it; he could not get away. The processes of the Government could reach him. Why this secrecy? Why this casting of suspicion upon all the membership of the House of Representatives?

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. In a moment. Mr. Speaker, I have been here for 19 years, and I have seen this House gradually give away its prerogatives and its powers and privileges, gradually desert its ancient privileges, until now the press of the country, the bureaucrats in the departments, look upon us with contempt, and we ought to assert ourselves as one of the branches of the legislative departments of this Government, the main one, in fact, in the estimation of the framers of the Constitution, and let these creatures of ours understand that they can not malign all of us with impunity.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. If we should pass a second resolution, as the Attorney General suggests, would it be any more compelling upon him than the one we have already passed?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I am in favor of bringing the Attorney General before the bar of this House and punishing him for contempt because of his defiance of the order of this House. [Applause.]

That is where he ought to be brought, and I am not his enemy; but he ought to be brought here and made to answer to this House why he defies and refuses to obey a plain resolution of the House.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Why should the Attorney General or his department give these names to the newspapers of the country and then refuse to give them to the House?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The newspapers do not say that he gave them.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Where did they get them?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not know, but floating out around this Capitol and over the Nation is the statement that two Members of this House have been guilty of violation of their oaths of office and accepting bribes. Let the Attorney General come here, our creature, and be made to answer, and if he does not answer, let us commit him for contempt of this House.

Mr. STEAGALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will.

Mr. STEAGALL. Does not the Attorney General say in his reply that he will submit the information to the House in response to a resolution if the House will permit him to dictate the resolutions? Is not that what his letter means?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I think so; yes; but he can not dictate anything to the House of Representatives. Gentlemen, let us now stand here and assert our rights under the Constitution and make these people do what we say they ought to do. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. My recollection is that the precedents, so far as Congress is concerned, are that when either House of the Congress directs a Cabinet officer to report certain facts and that officer finds it incompatible to the public interest to do so, the President sends such message to the Congress, and not the Cabinet officer. Now, I wonder why in this instance the Cabinet officer took upon himself the responsibility of saying to the Congress that it was incompatible with the public interest. That has been done by the President under the precedents for at least 100 years.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will say frankly there are a number of doubts arising in my mind as to the precise effect of this message in reference to the rights of the House and the proprieties of the situation, and that is the reason I think it is the wise and safe thing to refer this matter to the Judiciary Committee for its report.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If the gentleman will yield, will the gentleman accept an amendment to the resolution, and if so, I desire to offer an amendment, Mr. Speaker, that the Attorney General be required to appear before the bar of this House and submit the names of the Members and the nature of the charge against them.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I will not yield to the gentleman for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. LONGWORTH. I hope the gentleman will not insist on going any further than a reference of this matter to the Committee on the Judiciary and let them consider this question.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Then, if the gentleman will pardon me, are we all to remain under suspicion for weeks and maybe months.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I anticipate a report of the Committee on the Judiciary by Monday. I think it will come Monday or Tuesday at the latest.

Mr. DYER. If the gentleman will yield, I will state to the gentleman from Ohio that the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary is not here to-day, but I am acting chairman and I will say that the committee will be called Monday morning to give consideration——

Mr. LONGWORTH. Could not the gentleman find it possible to get the committee together immediately? I think it would be wise to do so.

Mr. DYER. At the suggestion of the leader I will ask the clerk to call a meeting of the committee this afternoon.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. LONGWORTH. For a question.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman amend the resolution so as to require the Committee on the Judiciary to report instanter?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I used the words "at the earliest possible moment," and I think we can trust the Committee on the Judiciary to do everything that can be done.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Florida that I will personally call the committee for 2.30 this afternoon to take up this matter.

Mr. LONGWORTH. So that we will have speedy action.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for recognition. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will yield the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, you can well understand the humiliation that I have felt at the insinuations and defamations which have been made against my name and character. Those of you who have served here with me know that I am no master of eloquence, and it would be absolutely impossible for me to attempt to move you by an eloquent appeal, and, further, it is not my purpose to endeavor to do so at this time. But I want to make the statement that there is no reason given in the letter of the Attorney General of the United States in response to the resolution of this House refusing to disclose the names of the Members accused of wrongdoing, which is worthy of recognition by the House [applause], because I have it from reliable and authentic authority that immediately upon the arrival of Mr. Crim—formerly from Virginia, but who was appointed from New York—the special attorney in charge of the case in this city, he telephoned the name of another distinguished Member of Congress and myself all over the city.

I want to say that if this matter is taken up by a grand jury that I am prepared to waive my constitutional rights of immunity and submit myself to the fullest examination by Mr. Crim or by Mr. Daugherty, or by each and every member of the grand jury. [Applause.] I court the fullest investigation, and I have no fear but that I will be able to clear my name of every charge and every insinuation that has been made or is reported to have been made and which is claimed to be a part of the evidence laid before the Chicago grand jury. I want and ask the fullest investigation of every charge made, and I am confident that I can demonstrate to this House and to the country that I have been guilty of no wrongdoing [applause], and I here again, as I have elsewhere done, deny the imputations made against me, and with conscience clear I have abiding faith in my complete vindication.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland is recognized for one minute.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, as a member of the Maryland delegation and a Member of this House, as one of you on whom all of these reflections and unwarranted assertions fall, I want to say that we in Maryland, having known our colleague for many years, feel that he is absolutely speaking with the utmost sincerity when he demands your immediate investigation, and that we have absolute confidence in him.

I want to say one more thing, Members of the House. For five years I was United States district attorney, and I can say to you that if all the baseless rumors, all the unfounded and untrue allegations against important people that were made in and out of the grand jury room had been published, there would have been very few of us in the city of Baltimore who would have escaped slander. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 6349, the Treasury and Post Office appropriation bill, just messaged over from the Senate, be taken from the Speaker's table, the Senate amendments disagreed to, and the bill sent to conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the Treasury and Post Office appropriation bill be taken from the Speaker's table, the Senate amendments disagreed to, and the bill sent to conference. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6349) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is that agreeable to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS]?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes, indeed.

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman will give us a right to pass on the additions of importance made by the Senate?

Mr. MADDEN. On anything that is subject to agreement under the rules of the House, of course, we are going to act as the representatives of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. Where the appropriations have been increased to a large amount, even where they do not violate the rules of order in the House, the gentleman would give us a right to pass upon them?

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman would not want us to bring it back if we were going to cut it out?

Mr. BLANTON. No.

Mr. MADDEN. I think the gentleman can trust us to bring it back if it is important enough to warrant its being brought back.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ALLEGED CHARGES AGAINST TWO MEMBERS OF CONGRESS—REPLY OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the Speaker of the House and the majority leader did me the courtesy of submitting the letter of the Attorney General just a few moments before the House met, and, as I understood it, as quickly after the receipt as they could get in touch with me, and there was a discussion as to what procedure ought to be taken under the terms of the reply. I confess that I was troubled in my own mind as to what should be done. None of us had time to think it over very much after its receipt, but I am of the opinion that probably the very best thing to be done is to adopt the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] and refer the matter to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House, which is the law committee, with the instruction contained in his motion, that they report their conclusions as promptly as is possible.

Therefore I am prepared to support the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, and I believe that all of us here had best support that proposition. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House——

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Nebraska rise?

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. For the purpose of saying something about this resolution.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I believe I have the floor.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I had not expected to say anything on this subject, but I have just heard our colleague from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN], who has the respect of every man in the House, and I believe in the honesty of his statement, that this man Crim came from Chicago and immediately on his arrival in Washington telephoned this information about these two Members all over the city of Washington.

I believe this man Crim is a crook. This man Crim went to Chicago for the purpose of seeing if he could not dig up something. He knows that there is a resolution pending in this House pertaining to the Department of Justice and another department, and this man Crim is the man who sold out the Government's case against the harness grafters. [Applause.]

Do you know what he did after the evidence was secured by Mr. Crim in the suit and everything was in order? Those cases were taken up somewhere in West Virginia. It was a conspiracy case, a conspiracy between Army officers and civilians to graft money off the Government. What did this man do? He indicted the civilians, but failed to indict the Army officers. The result was that the Government's case fell to the ground and the Government was defeated. I say this man Crim is a crook. [Applause.]

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska rose.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does the gentleman desire some time?

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Yes. I would be very grateful to the gentleman if he will grant me but a moment.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will yield the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. The information I desire to convey to the gentleman, in the hope that it may induce him to make his resolution just a little bit stronger, is the fact that within 24 hours I heard the statement made by a Member of this House that an error had been made by this man Crim; that he had given the name of the wrong man; and that another Member of this House was intended to be named rather than one of the two who have been named. Now, under the circumstances, it would seem to me that instant action ought to be taken as to those supposed to have the true facts regarding these two names, and I sincerely trust the gentleman from Ohio, exercising that vast power which is his, and is so often beautifully exercised [laughter], will do something that will really put a cocklebur under the official tail of the Attorney General and make him obey the orders of this House. [Applause and laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF SECRETARY OF NAVY RELATIVE TO NAVAL OIL LEASES.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a unanimous-consent request. On March 3 a resolution was introduced into the House calling for certain information and facts from the Secretary of the Navy; that information and the facts have been presented to the Committee on Naval Affairs and the resolution has been unanimously reported to the House in proper form. I desire to make the unanimous request that the resolution and the reply thereto may be entered in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD for the purpose indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, when I introduced the resolution, House Resolution 204, on last Tuesday I did so for the sole purpose of clarifying the atmosphere surrounding the oil scandals and to bring out the really good side of this national calamity which would surely destroy confidence in our present form of government unless counteracted.

The hearings before the Committee on Naval Affairs have convinced me that both Secretary Daniels and Secretary Denby were headed in the same direction for the protection of Navy oil, and the fact that Daniels and John Barton Payne, then Secretary of the Interior, leased without public advertisement the drilling of new wells in the naval petroleum reserves is the best evidence that this was then considered to be the only real method of conservation.

Mr. Speaker, complying with that resolution, Secretary Denby to-day presented to the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House a detailed reply to the 23 requests for facts and information concerning the leasing and drilling of Navy oil preserves.

Notwithstanding the oft-repeated statements of former Secretary Daniels that his principal desire was to preserve the Navy oil in the ground, it now develops that on August 16, 1920, John Barton Payne, then Secretary of the Interior, transmitted to Secretary Daniels copies of leases providing for the drilling of five new wells on the California naval reserve No. 2, and on August 21, 1920, Daniels approved these leases, and in a letter to Payne indicated that the Navy Department had been in conference with the Boston-Pacific Oil Co. for that specific purpose.

The new drilling was considered necessary because of drainage by owners of contiguous territory, and the royalty accruing to the Government under the lease was 25 per cent, while the Doheny lease of December, 1922, has provided an actual net royalty averaging more than 27 per cent—a more favorable rate.

It is noteworthy that the Daniels-Payne leases were negotiated without competition, but I am certain that they were made in the interest of Navy oil conservation.

On December 6, 1920, Secretary Payne wrote the President that—> to offset the draining of the land by wells drilled upon adjoining tracts the Secretary of the Navy and myself are of the opinion that the company—Boston-Pacific Oil Co.—should be allowed to drill five additional wells, paying to the United States a royalty of 25 per cent of the value of all oil * * *, or, on demand, to turn over to the Government the percentage named of the products of the wells. If this suggestion meets with your approval, leases will be issued and delivered accordingly.

This letter is "approved December, 1920, Woodrow Wilson, President."

It is quite evident that all the Daniels and Denby oil leases were drawn in the very best interest of the Navy, and that the Government was protected in every possible manner.

Mr. Speaker, I present a favorable report from the Committee on Naval Affairs, together with a copy of the resolution and the reply to same by Secretary Denby:

AUTHORIZING AND DIRECTING THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY TO FURNISH TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES CERTAIN INFORMATION RELATIVE TO CERTAIN OIL LEASES.

Mr. BRITTEN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, submitted the following report (to accompany H. Res. 204):

The Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives, to whom was referred the resolution (H. Res. 204) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to furnish to the House of Representatives certain information relative to naval oil leases, having had the same under consideration, report the same back to the House without amendment and recommend that the resolution do pass.

House Resolution 204.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
March 3, 1924.

Mr. BRITTEN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, if not incompatible with the public interest, to furnish to the House of Representatives at the earliest date possible such data and information as he may have concerning the following questions:

1. Is it a fact that the then Secretary of the Navy, the Hon. Josephus Daniels, sent similar letters to the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate and of the House of Representatives, dated, respectively, March 29, 1920, and March 5, 1920, stating:

(a) It therefore becomes imperative "when viewed from an economic standpoint only that machinery be provided whereby wells may be drilled for protection against drainage from adjacent lands, or to supply oil for the Government's needs."

(b) And that excess oil from protective wells may be sold or storage provided for excess oil if considered advisable.

2. Is it a fact that in the above-referred-to letters dated March 5, 1920, and March 29, 1920, Secretary Daniels suggested legislation as follows:

> "That the Secretary of the Navy is directed to take possession of all properties within the naval petroleum reserves as are or may become vested in the United States; to conserve, develop, use, and operate the same in his discretion, directly or by contract, lease, or otherwise, and to use, store, exchange, refine, sell, or otherwise dispose of the oil and gas products thereof and those from all royalty oil for the benefit of the United States."

3. Is it a fact that language practically as suggested by these two letters was enacted into law on June 4, 1920?

4. Is it a fact that had it been the policy of Secretary Daniels at the time these letters were written to retain the oil in the naval petroleum reserves in the ground no legislation of this character was necessary?

5. Is it a fact that Secretary Daniels approved the leasing without public advertisement by the Hon. John Barton Payne, then Secretary of the Interior, and drilling of new wells on naval oil reserves?

6. Is it a fact that it has been the practice for many years for one executive department to perform services for another executive department, and that this practice has been recognized by the Congress in the act of May 21, 1920, providing that the funds of one department for which the services are performed may be placed subject to the requisition of the department performing the service?

7. Is it a fact that at the time the "administration and conservation" of the naval oil reserves were transferred to the Interior Department that department had under lease or permit over 3,500,000 acres of public oil land, and has now under lease or permit over 17,500,000 acres of such land, while the total acreage of the naval oil reserves being operated is less than 52,000 acres?

8. Is it a fact that proposals from three companies were entertained for leasing the Teapot Dome reserve and that five companies were asked to bid on royalty oil from the California naval reserve?

9. Is it a fact that the Government received over $3,000,000 premium on its royalty oil from the Salt Creek district in 1923 as a result of the competition promoted by the leasing of Teapot Dome naval reserve?

10. Is it a fact that under its contract for the leasing of Teapot Dome naval reserve the Navy received, for the calendar year 1923, 41 cents more per barrel for its royalty oil than the selling price of all other producers in that district?

11. Is it a fact that had the production from the Teapot Dome naval reserve reached even the minimum of production anticipated the amount received by the Government on its royalty oil above the daily market price would have been more than $16,000,000 and would have exceeded by many millions of dollars all of the cash bonuses ever received from the sale of Government leases in the entire Salt Creek field?

12. Is it a fact that on the minimum production now anticipated the sum that will be received from the Teapot Dome naval reserve above the daily market price will exceed the cash bonuses received by the Government from the sale of all Salt Creek leases?

13. Is it a fact that royalties fixed in the Teapot Dome naval reserve lease exceed the ruling royalties for wells of the same size on other Government leases in the same direction?

14. Is it a fact that the Navy received a large bonus for the lease in the California reserve in the form of high royalties, free storage for its royalty oil, free pipe-line transportation, advance supply of fuel oil in storage, option to purchase at a discount all petroleum products, construction of storage facilities without profit, etc.?

15. Is it a fact that the average royalties so far accruing under the contract and lease of the Pan American Petroleum & Transport Co. on naval oil reserve No. 1 in California amount to over 28.50 per cent as compared to 18.14 per cent received under the leases in reserve No. 2, where the royalties were established in accordance with the general leasing act passed by the Congress?

16. Is it a fact that the leases and contracts on naval oil reserves Nos. 1, 2, and 3 with the Mammoth Oil Co. and the Pan American Petroleum & Transport Co. provide that oil shall remain in the ground in these reserves in the only large area under naval jurisdiction not subject to drainage?

17. Is it a fact that in May, 1922, before any development work was undertaken under the contracts with either the Mammoth Oil Co. or the Pan American Petroleum & Transport Co., Secretary Denby informed a committee of the Senate that such leases had been made, and of the transfer of the administration and conservation of the naval oil reserves to the Department of the Interior, and of the storage tanks to be built, so that the Congress had full authority to impose any restrictions or regulations desired before any work was undertaken under these contracts?

18. Is it a fact that by the leasing act of February 25, 1920, the Department of the Interior is charged with the leasing and administration of all then existing producing wells on naval oil reserves?

19. Is it a fact that there is now actually in the ground more oil in the naval petroleum reserves than there would have been had the leases above referred to not been negotiated?

20. Is it a fact that up to July 1, 1923, there has been turned into the Treasury from royalties received from the naval oil reserves more than $5,000,000?

21. Is it a fact that no officer of the Navy was retired or ordered away from his station of duty in Washington because of his disagreement with Secretary Denby's policy?

22. Is it a fact that none of the officers ever on duty in connection with the naval petroleum reserves had any prior training or experience in connection with the oil-production industry?

23. Is it a fact that important portions of the naval reserves never have been under the control of the Navy?

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY,
Washington, March 7, 1924.

The Hon. THOMAS S. BUTLER,
Chairman, Committee on Naval Affairs,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: In compliance with House Resolution 204, forwarded with your letter of March 4, 1924, the information therein requested is, as follows:

"Question No. 1. Is it a fact that the then Secretary of the Navy, the Hon. Josephus Daniels, sent similar letters to the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate and of the House of Representatives dated, respectively, March 29, 1920, and March 5, 1920, stating:

"'(a) It therefore becomes imperative "when viewed from an economic standpoint only that machinery be provided whereby wells may be drilled for protection against drainage from adjacent lands, or to supply oil for the Government's needs" (b) and that excess oil from protective wells may be sold or storage provided for excess oil if considered advisable.'"

Answer. Yes.

Copies of these letters dated, respectively, March 29, 1920, and March 5, 1920, are inclosed herewith. The letter dated March 5, 1920, to the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs may be found on pages 3119 and 3120 of the hearings before the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives, appropriation bills subjects, 1920, volume 2.

"Question No. 2. Is it a fact that in the above-referred-to letters dated March 5, 1920, and March 29, 1920, Secretary Daniels suggested legislation, as follows:

"'That the Secretary of the Navy is directed to take possession of all properties within the naval petroleum reserves as are or may become vested in the United States; to conserve, develop, use, and operate the same in his discretion, directly or by contract, lease, or otherwise, and to use, store, exchange, refine, sell, or otherwise dispose of the oil and gas products thereof and those from all royalty oil for the benefit of the United States.'"

Answer. Yes; this language is a verbatim quotation.

"Question No. 3. Is it a fact that language practically as suggested by these two letters was enacted into law on June 4, 1920?"

Answer. Yes.

The language of that part of the act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. 813–814, ch. 228), referring to naval petroleum reserves, reads as follows:

"Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is directed to take possession of all properties within the naval petroleum reserves as are or may become subject to the control and use by the United States for naval purposes, and on which there are no pending claims or applications for permits or leases under the provisions of an act of Congress approved February 25, 1920, entitled 'An act to provide for the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain,' or pending applications for United States patent under any law; to conserve, develop, use, and operate the same in his discretion, directly or by contract, lease, or otherwise, and to use, store, exchange, or sell the oil and gas products thereof, and those from all royalty oil from lands in the naval reserves, for the benefit of the United States: And provided further, That the rights of any claimant under said act of February 25, 1920, are not affected adversely thereby: And provided further, That such sums as have been or may be turned into the Treasury of the United States from royalties on lands within the naval petroleum reserves prior to July 1, 1921, not to exceed $500,000, are hereby made available for this purpose until July 1, 1922: Provided further, That this appropriation shall be reimbursed from the proper appropriations on account of the oil and gas products from said properties used by the United States at such rate, not in excess of the market value of the oil, as the Secretary of the Navy may direct."

"Question No. 4. Is it a fact that had it been the policy of Secretary Daniels at the time these letters were written to retain the oil in the naval petroleum reserves in the ground, no legislation of this character was necessary?"

Answer. It is obvious from the language of the act that no legislation was necessary in order that the oil might be retained in the ground. The retention of oil in the ground is nowhere referred to in this act.

"Question No. 5. Is it a fact that Secretary Daniels approved the leasing without public advertisement by the Hon. John Barton Payne, then Secretary of the Interior, and drilling of new wells on naval oil reserves?"

Answer. Yes.

Under date of August 21, 1920, the then Secretary of the Navy informed the then Secretary of the Interior that the lease to the Boston-Pacific Oil Co. covering the drilling of five new wells on section 32 of naval petroleum reserve No. 2 was satisfactory to the Navy Department. The correspondence shows that the terms of this lease were agreed upon in conference between the representatives of the oil company and of the Navy Department and that such new drilling was considered necessary because of drainage by owners of contiguous territory. The royalty accruing to the Government under this lease was 25 per cent. Under the so-called Doheny lease of December 11, 1922, the royalty runs from 12½ per cent to 35 per cent, and the actual net royalty received has amounted to 27.14 per cent.

There are inclosed herewith photostatic copies of letter from the then Secretary of the Interior to the then Secretary of the Navy dated August 16, 1920, letter from the then Secretary of the Navy to the then Secretary of the Interior dated August 21, 1920, letter from the then Secretary of the Interior to the then President of the United States dated December 6, 1920, and the lease to the Boston-Pacific Oil Co. covering the drilling of the five new wells.

Under date of January 25, 1921, the then Secretary of the Navy indicated to the then Secretary of the Interior his willingness to lease 120 acres in the eastern part of section 28 of naval oil reserve No. 2 to the Consolidated Mutual Oil Co., and this land was leased without restriction to the number of wells that might be drilled. The correspondence shows that the reason for the leasing of this land was because of water conditions. The Government royalty provided under this lease was from 12½ per cent to 25 per cent, while the royalty provided by the so-called Doheny lease of December 11, 1922, on naval oil reserve No. 1 is from 12½ per cent to 35 per cent, and the actual net royalty so far received is 27.14 per cent.

There are forwarded herewith photostatic copies of letter of February 8, 1921, from the then Secretary of the Interior to the then President of the United States, letter dated February 16, 1921, from the then Secretary of the Interior to the President of the United States, and copy of lease of the 120 acres of land to the Consolidated Mutual Oil Co.

"Question 6. Is it a fact that it has been the practice for many years for one executive department to perform services for another executive department, and that this practice has been recognized by the Congress in the act of May 21, 1920, providing that the funds of one department for which the services are performed may be placed subject to the requisition of the department performing the service?"

Answer. Yes.

The Navy Department has for many years performed services for practically all other Government departments and independent offices and for both Houses of the Congress. It has built and repaired water craft for the Lighthouse Service, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and the Army Engineers. It has docked and repaired water craft for the War Department, Shipping Board, Coast Guard, Bureau of Fisheries, and the Interior Department. The Ordnance Department of the Navy constantly performs services for the Army, as the Ordnance Department of the Army performs similar services for the Navy. As an example of the magnitude of such services, in the year 1913 there was expended by the Navy Department on services performed for other Government departments $844,438.30, and in the year 1922 there was transferred by the Navy Department to other departments $1,952,557.38 for supplies and services furnished by such other departments. These figures represent only transfers through the Treasury Department and do not cover by any means all transactions of this character, for payment is oftentimes made by check for services performed by or for other departments.

The act of May 21, provides:

"That whenever any Government bureau or department procures by purchase or manufacture stores of any kind, or performs any service for another bureau or department, the funds of the bureau or department for which stores or materials are to be procured or the service performed may be placed subject to the requisition of the bureau or department making the procurement or performing the service for direct expenditure."

"Question No. 7. Is it a fact that at the time the 'administration and conservation' of the naval oil reserves were transferred to the Interior Department that department had under lease or permit over 3,500,000 acres of public oil land, and has now under lease or permit over 17,500,000 acres of such land, while the total acreage of the naval oil reserves being operated is less than 52,000 acres?"

Answer. Yes.

These figures are in accordance with the records of the Interior Department.

"Question No. 8. Is it a fact that proposals from three companies were entertained for leasing the Teapot Dome reserve and that five companies were asked to bid on royalty oil from the California naval reserve?"

Answer. (a) The Texas Oil Co. submitted a proposal to lease the Teapot Dome oil reserve (see testimony of Mr. Amos L. Beatty, president of the Texas Co., pp. 733 et seq., of the hearings before the Senate Committee on Public Lands and Surveys).

Mr. Doheny had an opportunity to bid (see p. 1944 of hearings above referred to).

Mr. Harry F. Sinclair was also invited to bid, and did submit a bid, which was accepted.

(b) Five companies were invited to bid on the royalty from naval petroleum reserve No. 1, namely, Standard Oil Co. of California, the Associated Oil Co., Pan American Petroleum & Transport Co., the General Petroleum Co., and the Pacific Oil Co. Three of these five companies submitted bids, namely, the Standard Oil Co., the Associated Oil Co., and the Pan American Petroleum & Transport Co. The bids of these three companies are on file in the Interior Department.

"Question No. 9. Is it a fact that the Government received over $3,000,000 premium on its royalty oil from the Salt Creek district in 1923 as a result of the competition promoted by the leasing of Teapot Dome naval reserve?"

Answer. Yes.

The records of the Department of the Interior show definitely that the excess so far received by the Government from its royalty oil in the Salt Creek district amounts to $3,003,709.74.

"Question No. 10. Is it a fact that under its contract for the leasing of Teapot Dome naval reserve the Navy received, for the calendar year 1923, 41 cents more per barrel for its royalty oil than the selling price of all other producers in that district?"

Answer. Yes.

Under its contract with the Mammoth Oil Co. the Navy received for its royalty oil midcontinent prices. Actual receipts were higher by 41 cents per barrel than the selling price of other producers in the Salt Creek district. Actual receipts were as shown on page 1082 of the hearings before the Senate investigating committee.

"Question No. 11. Is it a fact that had the production from the Teapot Dome naval reserve reached even the minimum of production anticipated the amount received by the Government on its royalty oil above the daily market price would have been more than $16,000,000, and would have exceeded by many millions of dollars all of the cash bonuses ever received from the sale of Government leases in the entire Salt Creek field?"

Answer. Yes.

At the time the Teapot Dome lease was executed it was conservatively estimated that the recoverable content from naval petroleum reserve No. 3 would be not less than 135,000,000 barrels. Had the wells been of the size anticipated the Navy would probably have received, under the terms of the lease, not less than 30 per cent royalty, which would have made the total royalty accruing to the Navy over 40,000,000 barrels of oil, which, at 41 cents, would have exceeded a sum of $16,000,000 accruing to the Navy as an offset to any bonuses which might have been demanded in the making of this contract.

The records of the Department of the Interior show that the total amount received as bonuses from leases in the entire Salt Creek field is $1,687,000, obviously many millions less than $16,000,000.

"Question No. 12. Is it a fact that on the minimum production now anticipated the sum that will be received from the Teapot Dome naval reserve above the daily market price will exceed the cash bonuses received by the Government from the sale of all Salt Creek leases?"

Answer. Yes. The Senate Committee on Public Lands and Surveys has repeatedly used the figure of 25,000,000 barrels as the amount of oil that may ultimately be recovered from the Teapot Dome naval petroleum reserve. The average royalty actually received to date has been about 17 per cent. On this basis the Government can expect an ultimate royalty of 4,250,000 barrels. Applying the premium of 41 cents per barrel actually received to date, the excess amount the Government would receive will be $1,742,500, which exceeds the $1,687,000 total bonus thus far received from the Salt Creek district.

"Question No. 13. Is it a fact that royalties fixed in the Teapot Dome naval reserve lease exceed the ruling royalties for wells of the same size on other Government leases in the same district?"

Answer. The royalties fixed in the Teapot Dome naval reserve are on what is known as the sliding scale basis. That is to say, the royalty rate increases if wells of large production are obtained. If the wells are small a less royalty is paid. Had the average production of wells in Teapot Dome been as anticipated at the time the reserve was leased, royalties accruing to the Government under the terms of that lease would have been higher than the ordinary Government rate in the Salt Creek district; and the Teapot Dome royalty was obtained on territory, a large part of which was unproven.

"Question No. 14. Is it a fact that the Navy received a large bonus for the lease in the California reserve in the form of high royalties, free storage for its royalty oil, free pipe-line transportation, advance supply of fuel oil in storage, option to purchase at a discount all petroleum products, construction of storage facilities without profit, etc?"

Answer. Yes. The contracts made with the Pan American Petroleum & Transport Co. provide:

1. Build and deliver to the Government storage facilities in Hawaii for 4,200,000 barrels of fuel oil and other petroleum products at cost, without profit to the company.

2. Royalties of from 12½ to 35 per cent, as compared with royalties of 12½ to 25 per cent under the leasing act on other Government lands in that district.

3. That the royalty oil be accepted in the field, the company bearing all transportation charges to refinery.

4. The maintenance in storage on the west coast of 1,000,000 barrels of fuel oil belonging to the company for issue to the Navy at cost.

5. The supplying to the Navy of fuel oil and other products at 10 per cent less than the market price at the time of delivery.

6. The maintenance at various points on the Atlantic seaboard, upon demand of the Navy, of 3,000,000 barrels of fuel oil belonging to the company, available for issue to the Navy.

These considerations greatly exceed any cash bonus which might have been obtained at that time or could be reasonably expected in the future.

These contracts may be found in the printed hearings of the Senate committee on pages 296–298, inclusive; 356–361, inclusive; and 413–416, inclusive.

"Question No. 15. Is it a fact that the average royalties so far accruing under the contract and lease of the Pan American Petroleum & Transport Co. on naval oil reserve No. 1 in California amount to over 28.50 per cent, as compared to 18.14 per cent received under the leases in reserve No. 2, where the royalties were established in accordance with the general leasing act passed by the Congress?"

Answer. The actual figures up to December 1, 1923, show that the Navy has actually received as royalties under its contract of December 11, 1922, with the Doheny company 27.14 per cent, nearly 50 per cent greater than the Navy royalties on reserve No. 2, where the leases were made in accordance with the leasing act of February 25, 1920, which only average 18.4 per cent.

"Question No. 16. Is it a fact that the leases and contracts on naval oil reserves Nos. 1, 2, and 3 with the Mammoth Oil Co. and the Pan American Petroleum & Transport Co. provide that oil shall remain in the ground in these reserves in the only large area under naval jurisdiction not subject to drainage?"

Answer. Yes. The contracts with the Pan American Petroleum & Transport Co. specifically exempt from drilling, except by the consent of the Government, nearly all of reserve No. 1 lying to the westward of the range line between ranges 23 and 24. This restriction was included in the contract in the belief that this area was less subject to immediate drainage than the other portions of the reserve. However, it was further provided in the contract that should at any moment this body of oil-bearing land become subject to immediate drainage, such defensive drilling as the Government might direct would be taken immediately and efficiently. This area—that is, the western half of naval reserve No. 1—was the only area lying within naval petroleum reserves Nos. 1, 2, and 3 believed not to require immediate drilling to protect the Government's interests.

"Question No. 17. Is it a fact that in May, 1922, before any development work was undertaken under the contracts with either the Mammoth Oil Co. or the Pan American Petroleum & Transport Co., Secretary Denby informed a committee of the Senate that such leases had been made, and of the transfer of the administration and conservation of the naval oil reserves to the Department of the Interior, and of the storage tanks to be built, so that the Congress had full authority to impose any restrictions or regulations desired before any work was undertaken under these contracts?"

Answer. Yes. At a hearing held before the Subcommittee on Appropriations of the United States Senate on May 4, 1922, within a month after the first leases and agreements with the Mammoth Oil Co. and with the Pan American Petroleum & Transport Co., and long before the Pan American Co.'s lease dated December 11, 1922, in reply to questions by various members of the committee, Secretary Denby stated:

"Now we are planning to get the war reserve oil above ground because we can not keep it below ground."

"The oil was being drained off."

"The contractors build the tanks at points designated by the department—points along the Atlantic coast, on the Pacific coast, and in Hawaii."

"The tanks are not yet built."

"The tanks are to be built out of the royalty to be paid to the Government. They are a part of the contract."

"This is a matter that the Department of the Interior would know about very much better than we, but as soon as it was discovered"—referring to loss of oil by drainage—"that such was the situation I asked the Secretary of the Interior if he would undertake to handle it for the Navy thereafter, and we went to the President and secured the Executive order transferring the naval oil reserves to the Secretary of the Interior to administer in trust for the Navy, the Secretary of the Navy being a party to the policies but not to the actual administrative work. For instance, I signed the Teapot Dome lease, agreeing that it should be opened, because we discovered that that also was being drained off."

The entire hearings from which the above quotations are taken may be found on pages 180–188 of "Hearings in the House and Senate, naval appropriation bill, 1923, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session, March–June, 1922."

No construction work had been begun at the time of this hearing.

"Question No. 18. Is it a fact that by the leasing act of February 25, 1920, the Department of the Interior is charged with the leasing and administration of all then existing producing wells on naval oil reserves?"

Answer. Yes. Under section 18 of the leasing act of February 25, 1920, it is provided that producing wells on naval petroleum reserves shall be leased by the Secretary of the Interior.

"Question No. 19. Is it a fact that there is now actually in the ground more oil in the naval petroleum reserves than there would have been had the leases above referred to not been negotiated?"

Answer. The naval oil reserves being under lease to competent oil producers capable of drilling wells on short notice and of effectively operating wells so drilled, it has been possible to negotiate agreements with neighbors on privately owned land whereby producing wells could be closed on account of like action by Government lessees. Through agreements of this kind, it was possible to close in 43 wells on Government leases within reserves Nos. 1 and 2 and 94 wells on privately owned lands within or adjacent to these reserves.

The very fact that operators on neighboring privately owned lands know that any move to drill wells that might drain naval petroleum reserves will be promptly met by an adequate offsetting campaign, vigorously prosecuted, tends to prevent such drilling.

These two causes have undoubtedly conserved large quantities of oil and gas underground.

"Question No. 20. Is it a fact that up to July 1, 1923, there has been turned into the Treasury from royalties received from the naval oil reserves more than $5,000,000?"

Answer. Yes. As shown by the records of the Interior Department, the actual amount turned into the Treasury up to July 1, 1923, is $5,617,120.82.

"Question No. 21. Is it a fact that no officer of the Navy was retired or ordered away from his station of duty in Washington because of his disagreement with Secretary Denby's policy?"

Answer. Yes.

There follows a list of officers alleged to have been retired or ordered away from Washington because of opposition to Secretary Denby's petroleum policy and the reasons for their assignment to other duty:

Rear Admiral Seaton Schroder, now deceased, was retired August 17, 1911; detached from last active duty March 10, 1919. Has never been on duty during Secretary Denby's administration.

Rear Admiral R. S. Griffin, retired on September 27, 1921, having reached the statutory age of retirement.

Captain John Halligan has never been on duty in Washington during Secretary Denby's administration.

Was on duty at the Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md., from November 17, 1920, to April 6, 1923, when he was ordered to command the U. S. S. Detroit, a very desirable command.

Commander H. A. Stuart was detached from duty in Washington on April 5, 1922, after having served three years and seven months in Washington, seven months beyond the normal length of a tour of duty.

Commander J. O. Richardson has never been on duty in Washington during Secretary Denby's administration. He was detached from the Naval Academy on April 24, 1922, at his own request, in order to command the U. S. S. Asheville.

Commander N. H. Wright was detached from duty in Washington May 19, 1920, before Secretary Denby came into office, after three years and eight months on shore duty. He is now back on duty in Washington.

Lieut. Commander J. F. Shafroth was detached from duty in Washington on April 17, 1922, upon the request of Rear Admiral W. C. Cole that Shafroth be ordered as aide and flag secretary upon his staff.

Lieut. Commander I. F. Landis has never been on duty in Washington during Secretary Denby's administration. He was in charge of the California Oil Reserves, with headquarters at San Francisco, and under the policy to discontinue retired officers on active duty prior to July 1, 1922, he was relieved from this duty on June 30, 1922.

"Question No. 22. Is it a fact that none of the officers ever on duty in connection with the naval petroleum reserves had any prior training or experience in connection with the oil-production industry?"

Answer. Yes. According to the records of the Navy Department, this is true.

"Question No. 23. Is it a fact that important portions of the naval reserves never have been under the control of the Navy?"

Answer. Within the exterior limits of naval oil reserve No. 1, 5,857.5 acres, 15¼ per cent of the total acreage, are owned by private parties. No part of this reserve is further than 2½ miles from privately owned land over which the Government has no control of drilling.

Of the total acreage in naval oil reserve No. 2, 19,680 acres, or 65.4 per cent of the total acreage, is privately owned. Seven thousand three hundred and sixty acres, or 24.5 per cent of the total acreage, was placed under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior by the leasing act of February 25, 1920, and there remain but 3,040 acres, or 10.1 per cent of the total acreage under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Navy. All of the acreage in this reserve under the jurisdiction of the Navy Department was subject to drainage by privately controlled operations.

All of the naval reserve No. 3 is under naval jurisdiction, but at the time of the signing of the lease of this reserve there were a number of unadjudicated claims to oil rights.

Sincerely yours,

EDWIN DENBY,
Secretary of the Navy.

MARCH 5, 1920.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: S. 2775, "An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain," approved by the President on February 24, 1920, contains certain provisions affecting the naval petroleum reserves. The more important are:

"SEC. 18. That upon relinquishment to the United States, filed in the General Land Office within six months after the approval of the act, of all right, title, and interest claimed and possessed prior to July 3, 1910, and continuously since, by the claimant or his predecessor in interest under the pre-existing placer mining law to any oil or gas bearing land upon which there has been drilled one or more oil or gas wells to discovery embraced in the Executive order of withdrawal, issued September 27, 1909, and not within any naval petroleum reserve, and upon payment as royalty to the United States of an amount equal to the value at the time of production of one-eighth of all the oil or gas already produced, except oil or gas used for production purposes on the claim, or unavoidably lost, from such land the claimant, or his successor, if in possession of such land, undisputed by any other claimant prior to July 1, 1919, shall be entitled to a lease thereon from the United States for a period of 20 years, at a royalty of not less than 12½ per cent of all the oil or gas produced, except oil or gas used for production purposes on the claim, or unavoidably lost: Provided, however, That as to all like claims situate within any naval petroleum reserve the producing wells thereon only shall be leased, together with an area of land sufficient for the operation thereof, upon the terms and payment of royalties for past and future production as herein provided for in the leasing of claims. No wells shall be drilled in the land subject to this provision within 660 feet of any such leased well without the consent of the lessee: Provided, however, That the President may, in his discretion, lease the remainder or any part of any such claim upon which such wells have been drilled, and in the event of such leasing said claimant or his successor shall have a preference right to such lease: And provided further, That he may permit the drilling of additional wells by the claimant or his successor within the limited area of 660 feet theretofore provided for upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe.

"SEC. 18a. That whenever the validity of any gas or petroleum placer claim under preexisting law to land embraced in the Executive order of withdrawal issued September 27, 1909, has been or may hereafter be drawn in question on behalf of the United States in any departmental or judicial proceedings, the President is hereby authorized at any time within 12 months after the approval of this act to direct the compromise and settlement of any such controversy upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon, to be carried out by an exchange or division of land or division of the proceeds of operation.

"SEC. 35. * * * Provided, That all moneys which may accrue to the United States under the provisions of this act from lands within the naval petroleum reserves shall be deposited in the Treasury as 'Miscellaneous receipts.'

"SEC. 36. That all royalty accruing to the United States under any oil or gas lease or permit, under this act on demand of the Secretary of the Interior shall be paid in oil or gas. * * *: And provided further, That any royalty, oil, or gas may be sold at not less than the market price at private sale to any department or agency of the United States."

Under the provisions of this act considerable areas of the petroleum reserves will come into the undisputed possession of the Navy. Some of these tracts are drilled to such an extent that it will be necessary for the Government to drill offset wells unless oil to the value of millions of dollars is to be drawn from under the Government lands by private owners.

A considerable amount of royalty oil will be delivered to the Government from the naval reserves, receipts from which all revert to the Government.

A larger amount of oil will be available from lands without the reserves, the Navy in common with other departments of the Government having the right to purchase, as provided by the general provisions of the act.

The recent experience of the Shipping Board and the Navy Department in obtaining bids for fuel oil shows the necessity for the Government to be in a position to furnish its own supply of fuel.

It therefore becomes imperative, even when viewed from an economic standpoint only, that machinery be provided whereby wells may be drilled for protection against drainage from adjacent lands, or to supply oil for the Government's needs. That crude oil, whether from Navy-owned wells, royalties from naval reserves, or royalty oil purchased, may be exchanged for refined products, and that excess oil from protective wells may be sold or storage provided for excess oil if considered advisable.

It is suggested that this may be accomplished by an addition to the provision, "Investigation of fuel oil," as contained in the naval appropriation act approved July 11, 1919, similar to the following:

"Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is directed to take possession of all properties within the naval petroleum reserves as are or may become vested in the United States; to conserve, develop, use, and operate the same in his discretion, directly or by contract, lease, or otherwise, and to use, store, exchange, refine, sell, or otherwise dispose of the oil and gas products thereof, and those from all royalty oil, for the benefit of the United States: And provided, That such sums as have been or may be turned into the Treasury of the United States from royalties on lands within the naval petroleum reserves prior to July 1, 1921, not to exceed $500,000, are hereby made available for this purpose until July 1, 1922: Provided further, That this appropriation shall be reimbursed from the proper appropriations on account of the oil and gas products from said properties used by the United States at such rate, not in excess of the market value of the oil, as the Secretary of the Navy may direct."

Sincerely yours, JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

Hon. THOMAS S. BUTLER,
Chairman House Naval Committee,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MARCH 29, 1920.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Senate bill 2775, "An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain," approved by the President on February 24, 1920, contains certain provisions affecting the naval petroleum reserves. The more important are:

"SEC. 18. That upon relinquishment to the United States, filed in the General Land Office within six months after the approval of the act of all right, title, and interest claimed and possessed prior to July 8, 1919, and continuously since by the claimant or his predecessor in interest under the preexisting placer mining law to any oil or gas bearing land upon which there has been drilled one or more oil or gas wells to discovery embraced in the Executive order of withdrawal issued September 27, 1909, and not within any naval petroleum reserve, and upon payment as royalty to the United States of an amount equal to the value at the time of production of one-eighth of all the oil or gas already produced except oil or gas used for production purposes on the claim, or unavoidably lost, from such land the claimant, or his successor, if in possession of such land, undisputed by any other claimant prior to July 1, 1919, shall be entitled to a lease thereon from the United States for a period of 20 years at a royalty of not less than 12½ per cent of all the oil or gas produced except oil or gas used for production purposes on the claim or unavoidably lost: Provided, however, That as to all like claims situate within any naval petroleum reserve the producing wells thereon only shall be leased, together with an area of land sufficient for the operation thereof upon the terms and payment of royalties for past and future production as herein provided for in the leasing of claims. No wells shall be drilled in the land subject to this provision within 660 feet of any such leased well without the consent of the lessee: Provided, however, That the President may, in his discretion, lease the remainder or any part of any such claim upon which such wells have been drilled, and in the event of such leasing said claimant or his successor shall have a preference right to such lease: And provided further, That he may permit the drilling of additional wells by the claimant or his successor within the limited area of 660 feet theretofore provided for upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe.

"SEC. 18a. That whenever the validity of any gas or petroleum placer claim under preexisting law to land embraced in the Executive order of withdrawal issued September 27, 1909, has been or may hereafter be drawn in question on behalf of the United States in any departmental or judicial proceedings, the President is hereby authorized, at any time within 12 months after the approval of this act, to direct the compromise and settlement of any such controversy upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon, to be carried out by an exchange or division of land or division of the proceeds of operation.

"SEC. 35. * * * Provided, That all moneys which may accrue to the United States under the provisions of this act from lands within the naval petroleum reserves shall be deposited in the Treasury as 'miscellaneous receipts.'

"SEC. 36. That all royalty accruing to the United States under any oil or gas lease or permit under this act, on demand of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be paid in oil or gas, * * *: And provided further, That any royalty oil or gas may be sold at not less than the market price at private sale to any department or agency of the United States."

Under the provisions of this act considerable areas of the petroleum reserves will come into the undisputed possession of the Navy. Some of these tracts are drilled to such an extent that it will be necessary for the Government to drill offset wells unless oil to the value of millions of dollars is to be drawn from under the Government lands by private owners.

A considerable amount of royalty oil will be delivered to the Government from the naval reserves, receipts from which all revert to the Government.

A larger amount of oil will be available from lands without the reserves, the Navy, in common with other departments of the Government, having the right to purchase, as provided by the general provisions of the act.

The recent experience of the Shipping Board and the Navy Department in obtaining bids for fuel oil shows the necessity for the Government to be in a position to furnish its own supply of fuel.

It therefore becomes imperative, even when viewed from an economic standpoint only, that machinery be provided whereby wells may be drilled for protection against drainage from adjacent lands or to supply oil for the Government's needs; that crude oil, whether from Navy-owned wells, royalties from naval reserves, or royalty oil purchased, may be exchanged for refined products; and that excess oil from protective wells may be sold or storage provided for excess oil if considered advisable.

It is suggested that this may be accomplished by an addition to the provision, "Investigation of fuel oil," as contained in the naval appropriation act approved July 11, 1919, similar to the following:

"Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is directed to take possession of all properties within the naval petroleum reserves as are or may become vested in the United States; to conserve, develop, use, and operate the same in his discretion, directly or by contract, lease or otherwise, and to use, store, exchange, refine, sell, or otherwise dispose of the oil and gas products thereof, and those from all royalty oil for the benefit of the United States: And provided, Such sums as have been or may be turned into the Treasury of the United States from royalties on lands within the naval petroleum reserves prior to July 1, 1921, not to exceed $500,000, are hereby made available for this purpose until July 1, 1922: Provided further, That this appropriation shall be reimbursed from the proper appropriations on account of the oil and gas products from said properties used by the United States at such rate, not in excess of the market value of the oil, as the Secretary of the Navy may direct."

Owing to the recent experience of the Navy Department in obtaining bids for fuel oil, or, rather, the failure to obtain bids, it is of the utmost importance that sufficient means be provided for an investigation of the question of fuel oil for naval requirements. It is, therefore, further suggested that the provision, "Investigation of fuel oil," as contained in the naval appropriation act approved July 11, 1919, be changed to read as follows:

"Investigation of fuel oil and other fuel: For an investigation of fuel oil, gasoline, and other fuel adapted to naval requirements, including the question of supply and storage and the availability economically and otherwise of such supply as may be allowed by the naval reserves on the public domain, and for such other expenses for transportation and hire of vehicles in connection with naval petroleum reserves, as the Secretary of the Navy may deem appropriate for the purchase of necessary instruments and appliances, for the extension of the naval fuel-oil testing plant at the navy yard, Philadelphia, Pa., and the employment of civilian experts and assistants at Washington, D. C., and elsewhere, $50,000."

Sincerely yours,

JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, August 16, 1920.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: June 16, 1920, there was transmitted to you the application for compromise, under section 18 of the oil-leasing act, of the Boston-Pacific Oil Co., involving the S. ½ SW. ¼ and S. ½ SE. ¼, sec. 32, T. 31 S., R. 24 E., M. D. M., California, naval reserve No. 2.

I am informally advised that representatives of the oil company have been in conference with your department and that it has been tentatively agreed that a lease shall be given upon two existing oil wells upon the claim upon payment of one-eighth of past production, as provided by law, and upon the payment for future production in the manner and to the amount provided in the regulations issued by this department under the said act; that your department has also agreed to permit the company to drill five additional producing wells upon the claim upon condition that the company shall pay a royalty of 25 per cent upon all oil and 12½ per cent upon all gas produced from the five new wells.

There has been drawn in this department a form of lease covering the existing wells under section 18 of the oil leasing act; also a form of supplemental lease, to permit the drilling of the five additional wells upon a royalty of 25 per cent. I transmit herewith copies of each of said proposed leases, and have to request that you advise me as to whether you have any suggestions to make in connection therewith prior to their final consideration here. Please return copies with your reply.

Cordially yours, JOHN BARTON PAYNE, Secretary.

(Inclosure 3691.)

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, August 21, 1920.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I beg leave to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 16th instant in re the application of the Boston-Pacific Oil Co. for lease of the two existing wells on their claim and their request for drilling five additional wells on this claim.

With respect to the primary lease, a copy of which was inclosed with your letter and which is herewith returned, I am of the opinion that it is satisfactory in so far as the Navy Department is concerned.

As regards the supplementary lease, however, I desire to have incorporated therein the following changes:

On page 3, first line, after words "M. D. B. & M.," insert the following phrase, "and no well shall be drilled within 900 feet of the west line of said S. ½ of the SW. ¼ of said section."

On page 5, second line, after word "herein," omit remainder of paragraph, which reads as follows: "provided that in the event * * * cost of such nonproductive well or wells."

The question of these two changes in the lease has been taken up with representatives of the Boston-Pacific Oil Co., and, in view of my objections to the lease as at present drawn, these changes are considered acceptable to them.

Very truly yours, JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, December 6, 1920.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: The oil leasing act provides that the President may permit "the drilling of additional wells by the claimant or his successor within the limited area of 660 feet theretofore provided for upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe."

The Boston-Pacific Oil Co. is claimant on 160 acres of land in naval reserve No. 1, in California, and to offset the draining of the land by wells drilled upon adjoining tracts the Secretary of the Navy and myself are of the opinion that the company should be allowed to drill five additional wells, paying to the United States a royalty of 25 per cent of the value of all oil and 12½ per cent of the value of all gas produced, or, on demand, to turn over to the Government the percentage named of the products of the wells.

If this suggestion meets with your approval, leases will be issued and delivered accordingly.

Cordially yours,

JOHN BARTON PAYNE, Secretary.

SUPPLEMENTAL LEASE FOR OIL AND GAS LANDS IN NAVAL PETROLEUM RESERVE UNDER THE ACT OF FEBRUARY 25, 1920.

This indenture of lease made and entered into in triplicate this 1st day of July, A. D. 1920, by and between the United States of America, party of the first part, hereinafter called the lessor, acting in this behalf by the President, and Boston-Pacific Oil Co., a corporation, organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of California, party of the second part, hereinafter called the lessee, under, pursuant, and subject to the terms and provisions of the act of Congress approved February 25, 1920 (Public, No. 146).

Witnesseth: That whereas heretofore, to wit, on the ——— day of ———, 1920, the lessor above named, acting by the Secretary of the Interior, executed that certain indenture of oil lease to the lessee herein, to operate and extract oil from those two certain oil wells situated on the S. ½ SW. ¼ and S. ½ SE. ¼, sec. 32, T. 31 S., R. 24 E., California, and more particularly described in said lease, said lease being herein designated and referred to as the primary lease;

And whereas it is the desire of the parties to said primary lease and to this lease that the said lessee be granted the right and privilege to drill, operate, and produce oil from certain additional wells on said S. ½ SW. ¼ and S. ½ SE. ¼ of said sec. 32, under, pursuant, and subject to those certain provisions of section 18 of the act of February 25, 1920, wherein it is provided:

> "That the President may, in his discretion, lease the remainder or any part of any such claim upon which such wells have been drilled, and in the event of such leasing said claimant or his successor shall have a preference right to such lease: And provided further, That he may permit the drilling of additional wells by the claimant or his successor within the limited area of 660 feet theretofore provided for upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe."

SECTION 1. Therefore, in consideration of said primary lease, of the premises to this lease, of the rents and royalties to be paid, and the covenants to be observed as herein set forth, the lessor herein does hereby grant and lease to the lessee the exclusive right and privilege to drill, on the lands above described, five producing oil wells, and to operate, extract, remove, and dispose of all the oil and gas produced from said five wells, together with the right to erect and maintain upon said land all structures and equipment sufficient for the reasonable and economical drilling and operation of said wells; said lease is for a period of 20 years with a preference in the lessee to renew same for successive periods of 10 years, upon such reasonable terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the lessor, unless otherwise provided by law at the time of the expiration of such periods.

SEC. 2. It is agreed and understood that said wells shall be drilled at a distance of not less than 200 feet nor more than 660 feet south of the north line of said S. ½ S. ½ sec. 32, T. 31 S., R. 24 E., M. D. B. and M., and no well shall be drilled within 900 feet of the west line of the said S. ½ SW. ¼ of said section, at such places as the said lessee may deem most advantageous to secure the largest production of oil and gas, provided that during the continuance of this lease the lessor shall grant no other lease or permit to drill, nor on its own account drill, any other wells within a distance of 660 feet from any of the producing wells drilled and operated under this lease; that the lessee shall within 30 days from the date hereof commence the erection on said lands of a complete standard or rotary drilling outfit with all necessary tools, machinery, and equipment for the drilling of a well on said lands to a depth of 3,500 feet in accordance with approved methods of drilling oil wells in the State of California; that the installation of said well-drilling outfit shall proceed with diligence and a proper force of men, and the installation thereof shall be completed and in condition for operation within 90 days from the expiration of said 30-day period; that immediately on the completion of the installation of said well-drilling outfit the lessee shall commence the drilling of a well for oil on said land and such work shall be prosecuted with diligence and a sufficient force until a depth of 3,500 feet shall be reached, or until oil shall be discovered in paying quantities, which is hereby defined to mean an initial production of not less than 50 barrels per day; that as soon as said well is completed to production as aforesaid the lessee shall thereupon commence the drilling of a second well and prosecute the drilling thereof with diligence, and shall continue the same to completion in like manner, and the lessee shall thereafter keep one complete standard string of tools or rotary equipment in continuous operation until the full number of five producing wells herein provided for shall have been completed.

SEC. 3. The lessee agrees to pay the lessor a royalty of 25 per cent of the value of all oil produced and 12½ per cent of the value of all gas produced (the value of the gas to be computed in accordance with the existing operating regulations) from the wells leased herein (except oil or gas used for production purposes on said lands or unavoidably lost) or, on demand of the lessor, 25 per cent of the oil or gas produced, or both, said royalty when paid in value to be due and payable monthly on the 15th of each month following the month in which produced, to the receiver of public moneys of the land district in which the land is situated. When such royalty is paid in kind, the royalty oil shall be delivered in tanks provided by the lessee on the premises where produced at such times as may be required by the lessor: Provided, That the lessee shall not be required to hold such royalty oil in storage longer than 30 days after the end of the calendar month in which said oil is produced; And provided further, That the said lessee shall be in no manner responsible or held liable for the loss or destruction of such oil in storage from causes over which it has no control; royalty gas shall be delivered by the lessee on the premises, but no storage thereof shall be required; such royalty, whether in value or kind, will be subject to reduction whenever the average daily production of any oil well shall not exceed 10 barrels per day and if in the judgment of the lessor the wells can not be successfully operated upon the royalties fixed herein.

SEC. 4. That as to all matters and things not herein specifically otherwise provided for the provisions of said primary lease shall be deemed controlling as to this lease; and said primary lease, to the extent not inconsistent with this lease, is hereby adopted and made a part hereof to the same extent and with the same effect as if herein set out at length.

In witness whereof,

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
City and County of San Francisco, ss:

On this 29th day of October, in the year 1920, before me, Henrietta Harper, a notary public in and for the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, residing therein, duly commissioned and sworn, personally appeared Fred G. King and E. B. Cushman, known to me to be the president and secretary, respectively, of Boston-Pacific Oil Co., the corporation described in and that executed the within and annexed instrument, and also known to me to be the persons who executed said within instrument on behalf of the corporation therein named, and they acknowledged to me that such corporation executed the same.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal at my office in the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, the day and year in this certificate first above written.

[SEAL.] HENRIETTA HARPER,
Notary Public in and for the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, 858 Mills Building.

My commission expires September 21, 1922.

On motion of Director Early, seconded by Director Armstrong, it was unanimously—

"Resolved, That the Boston-Pacific Oil Co. do enter into and execute a certain supplemental lease of oil and gas lands in the naval petroleum reserve under the act of February 25, 1920, which said supplemental lease is to be dated the 1st day of July, A. D. 1920, and to be executed by the United States of America, as lessor, and the Boston-Pacific Oil Co., a corporation, as lessee, under, pursuant, and subject to those certain provisions of section 18 of the act of Congress approved February 25, 1920, Public No. 146, entitled: 'An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain,' wherein it is provided:

"'That the President may, in his discretion, lease the remainder or any part of any such claim upon which such wells have been drilled, and in the event of such leasing said claimant or his successor shall have a preference right to such lease: And provided further, That he may permit the drilling of additional wells by the claimant or his successor within the limited area of 660 feet theretofore provided for upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe.'"

Under the terms of said lease the United States of America, as lessor, does grant and lease to the Boston-Pacific Oil Co., as lessee, the exclusive right and privilege to drill on the south half of the southwest quarter and the south half of the southeast quarter of section 32, township 31 south, range 24 east, M. D. B. & M., five producing oil wells, together with the right to operate, extract, remove, and dispose of all of the oil and gas produced from said five wells.

Said supplemental lease is for a period of 20 years, with a preference right in the lessee to renew said lease for successive periods of 10 years upon such reasonable terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the lessor, unless otherwise provided by law, at the time of the expiration of such periods.

The said proposed supplemental lease has been read in full at this meeting of the board of directors of said Boston-Pacific Oil Co., and a copy thereof is hereby ordered to be inserted in the minutes of this meeting.

"Resolved further, That Fred G. King, president, and E. B. Cushman, secretary of this corporation, be, and they are hereby, authorized, directed, and empowered to execute the aforesaid supplemental lease under the corporate name and seal of this corporation and as its corporate act and deed and to deliver the same to the proper official of the lessor."

I, E. B. Cushman, secretary of the Boston-Pacific Oil Co., a corporation, hereby certify that the foregoing is a full, true, and correct copy of a resolution unanimously adopted at a meeting of the board of directors of said corporation, at which meeting a quorum of said directors was present and acting, and which meeting was regularly called and held on the 21st day of October, 1920, at the office of said corporation in San Francisco, State of California, and that the supplemental lease to which this certified copy of the foregoing resolution is attached is the identical instrument which was presented to the board and read at said meeting.

In witness whereof, on the 29th day of October, 1920, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of said corporation.

E. B. CUSHMAN, Secretary.

FEBRUARY 8, 1921.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: This is an application for a lease on 200 acres by the Consolidated Mutual Oil Co.; J. M. McLeod, 80 acres; United Oil Co., 80 acres; California Amalgamated Oil Co., 80 acres; Caribou Oil Co., 80 acres; Record Oil Co., 40 acres—a total of 560 acres—section 28, township 31 south, range 23 east, Visalia land district, Kern County, Calif. The remaining 80 acres of the section are claimed by the Standard Oil Co., whose application for release, I am advised, has been made but has not reached this office.

This section was located by McMurtry and others in 1908, and applicants for a lease pressed vigorously claims for patent, which I denied on the ground that the original locations were fraudulent. Claimants were not parties to the fraud, and have made substantial investments in acquiring the land and in the sinking of wells. The section is surrounded by lands owned in fee by the Southern Pacific Railroad, acquired in its original grant from the Government. Twenty-four wells have been drilled on these 560 acres by one or another of the claimants. About half of the wells, we are advised by the Geological Survey and by the California State Mining Bureau, are filling with water, and it is probable that serious loss will occur unless the spread of the water is prevented by the repair of existing wells and the drilling of additional wells.

Since the decision denying the claim for patent claimants offer to waive this claim and accept a lease under the leasing law. This involves the payment of royalty to the Government ranging from 12½ per cent to 25 per cent, according to the amount of production. Under sections 18 and 18–A of the leasing act it is necessary that your authority be obtained in order to make the leases except on flowing wells. About 8 of the 24 are flowing; the others are either filling with water or have been abandoned.

I presented the matter to the Secretary of the Navy as per my letter of January 20 herewith. He replied, objecting (letter of January 25 herewith); but indicating a willingness to lease 120 acres in the eastern part of the section. This is a part of the land applied for by the Consolidated Mutual Oil Co., and is badly affected by the water.

I bring the matter to your attention because it is probable that unless leases are made the water will spread over the section and destroy the oil. For instance, in November, 1920, the operating wells produced 18,858 barrels of oil and 22,881 barrels of water. In view of this situation I have felt that it would be wise to lease the entire section. This is accentuated by the fact that the adjacent sections are owned by the Southern Pacific. The Secretary of the Navy is properly very jealous of any leases in the naval reserve; but it seemed to me this was a physical situation which justified an exception.

Cordially and faithfully yours,

JOHN BARTON PAYNE, Secretary.

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 16, 1921.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: J. M. McLeod, the Consolidated Mutual Oil Co., and others, claiming under mining locations covering sec. 28, T. 31 S., R. 23 E., California naval reserve No. 2, are entitled by section 18 of the act of February 25, 1920, to leases on the producing wells, but asked because of alleged equities that you give them leases to develop the remaining oil deposits. Because of representations by the State mining bureau and our experts that intrusion of water threatens damage and that drilling of additional wells is desirable, I submitted the matter to you by letter of February 8, 1921. The Secretary of the Navy stated in letter which accompanied mine that he did not favor leasing all the lands but would agree to leasing 120 acres in the eastern part of section 28 where water conditions are most serious. If you do not feel warranted in authorizing lease of the entire section, I suggest you direct the lease under section 18–A of the 120 acres referred to by the Secretary of the Navy which is in the claim of the Consolidated Mutual Oil Co., viz, S. ½ NE.¼ and S. ½ N. ½ NE. ¼, Sec. 28, T. 31 S., R. 23 E., M. D. M.

This department will then lease the producing wells only on the remainder of the section.

Cordially yours, JOHN BARTON PAYNE, Secretary.

LEASE OF OIL AND GAS LANDS UNDER THE ACT OF FEBRUARY 25, 1920.

This indenture of lease, entered into, in triplicate, as of the 16th day of February, A. D. 1921, by and between the United States of America, party of the first part, hereinafter called the lessor, acting in this behalf by the Secretary of the Interior, and Consolidated Mutual Oil Co., a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of California, party of the second part, hereinafter called the lessee, under, pursuant, and subject to the terms and provisions of the act of Congress approved February 25, 1920 (Public No. 146), entitled "An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain," hereinafter referred to as the act, which is made a part hereof, witnesseth:

"SECTION 1. Purposes.—That the lessor, in consideration of rents and royalties to be paid and the covenants to be observed as herein set forth, does hereby grant and lease to the lessee the exclusive right and privilege to drill for, mine, extract, remove, and dispose of all the oil and gas deposits in or under the following-described tract of land situated in the county of Kern, State of California, and more particularly described as follows: The S. ½ NE. ¼ and the S. ½ N. ½ NE. ¼, sec. 28, T. 31 S., R. 23 E., Mount Diablo meridian, containing 120 acres, together with the right to construct and maintain thereupon all works, buildings, plants, waterways, roads, telegraph or telephone lines, pipe lines, reservoirs, tanks, pumping stations, or other structures necessary to the full enjoyment thereof, for a period of 20 years, with the preferential right in the lessee to renew this lease for successive periods of 10 years, upon such reasonable terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the lessor, unless otherwise provided by law at the time of the expiration of such periods.

"SEC. 2. In consideration of the foregoing, the lessee hereby agrees:

"(a) Bond: To furnish a bond with approved corporate surety in the penal sum of $5,000, conditioned upon compliance with the terms of the lease.

"(b) Wells: To maintain in a state of production wells equal in number to the number of the now-existing producing wells on the leased land until the oil deposits are exhausted or until the proven territory has been drilled, and in case such existing wells are less than the number of 40-acre tracts or lots embraced in the lease, to proceed with reasonable diligence within three months of delivery hereof to install on the leased land a standard or other efficient drilling outfit and equipment, and to commence drilling at least one well and to continue such drilling with reasonable diligence to production or to a point where the well is demonstrated unsuccessful, and thereafter to continue drilling with reasonable diligence at least one well at a time until the lessee shall have drilled producing wells which, with any producing wells now on the land, equal in number the number the 40-acre tracts or lots embraced in the leased premises, unless the lessor shall for any reason deemed sufficient consent in writing to the drilling of a less number of wells; the lessee further agrees to drill all necessary wells to offset the wells of others on adjoining land or deposits not the property of the United States, and on adjoining land operated under Government lease at 5 per cent royalty.

"(c) Royalty and rents: To pay the lessor in advance, beginning with the date of the execution of this lease, a rental of $1 per acre per annum during the continuance hereof, the rental so paid for any one year to be credited on the royalty for that year, together with a royalty on all oil and gas produced from the land leased herein (except oil or gas used for production purposes on said land or unavoidably lost), as follows:

	Per cent.
(1) For all oil produced of 30° Baumé or over:
On that portion of the average production per well not exceeding 20 barrels per day for the calendar month	12½
On that portion of the average production per well of more than 20 barrels and not more than 50 barrels per day for the calendar month	16⅔
On that portion of the average production per well of more than 50 barrels and not more than 100 barrels per day for the calendar month	20
On that portion of the average production per well of more than 100 barrels per day for the calendar month	25
(2) For all oil produced of less than 30° Baumé:
On that portion of the average production per well not exceeding 20 barrels per day for the calendar month	12½
On that portion of the average production per well of more than 20 barrels and not more than 50 barrels per day for the calendar month	14⅔
On that portion of the average production per well of more than 50 barrels and not more than 100 barrels per day for the calendar month	16⅔
On that portion of the average production per well of more than 100 barrels per day for the calendar month	20

"Only wells which have a commercial production during at least part of the month shall be considered in ascertaining the average production above provided for; and the Secretary of the Interior shall determine what are commercially productive wells under this provision.

"(3) On gas and casing-head gasoline:

"On gas, whether same shall be gas from which the casing-head gasoline has been extracted or otherwise, 12½ per cent of the value thereof in the field where produced where the average production per day for the calendar month from the land leased is less than 3,000,000 cubic feet, and 16⅔ per cent where the average daily production is 3,000,000 cubic feet or over.

"On casing-head gasoline, 16⅔ per cent of the value of the casing-head gasoline extracted from the gas produced and sold, computed on the basis provided for in the operating regulations.

"The value in the field where produced of gas and casing-head gasoline for royalty purposes, unless such gas or casing-head gasoline is disposed of under an approved sales contract or other method as provided in subdivision (d) of this section, shall be as fixed by the Secretary of the Interior.

"In cases where the gas produced and sold has a value both for casing-head gasoline content and as dry gas from which the casing-head gasoline has been extracted, then the royalties above provided shall be paid on both of such values.

"When paid in value, such royalties shall be due and payable monthly on the 15th of each calendar month following the calendar month in which produced to the receiver of public moneys of the land district in which the land is situated; when paid in kind, such royalty oil shall be delivered in tanks provided by the lessee on the premises where produced, unless otherwise agreed to by the parties hereto, at such times as may be required by the lessor; Provided, That the lessee shall not be required to hold such royalty oil in storage longer than 30 days after the end of the calendar month in which said oil is produced: And provided further, That the said lessee shall be in no manner responsible or held liable for the loss or destruction of such oil in storage from causes over which the lessee has no control; such royalties, whether in value or kind, shall be subject to reduction whenever the average daily production of any oil well shall not exceed 10 barrels per day, if in the judgment of the lessor the wells can not be successfully operated upon the royalties fixed herein.

"(d) Sales contracts: To file with the Secretary of the Interior copies of all sales contracts for the disposition of oil and gas produced hereunder except for production purposes on the land leased, and in the event the United States shall elect to take its royalties in money instead of in oil or gas, not to sell or otherwise dispose of the products of the land leased except in accordance with a sales contract or other method first approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

"(e) Monthly statements: To furnish monthly statements in detail in such form as may be prescribed by the lessor, showing the amount, quality, and value of all oil and gas produced and saved during the preceding calendar month as the basis for computing the royalty due the lessor. The leased premises and all wells, improvements, machinery, and fixtures thereon or connected therewith and all books and accounts of the lessee shall be open at all times for the inspection of any duly authorized officer of the department.

"(f) Plats and reports: To furnish annually and at such times as the Secretary shall require, in the manner and form prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, a plat showing all development work and improvements on the leased lands, and other related information, with a report as to all buildings, structures, or other works placed in or upon said leased lands, accompanied by a report in detail as to the stockholders, investment, depreciation, and cost of operation, together with a statement as to the amount and grade of oil and gas produced and sold and the amount received therefor by operations hereunder.

"(g) Log of wells: To keep a log in the form prescribed by the Secretary of all the wells drilled by the lessee, showing the strata and character of the ground passed through by the drill, which log, or copy thereof, shall be furnished to said lessor on demand.

"(h) Diligence; prevention of waste; health and safety of workmen: To exercise reasonable diligence in drilling and operating wells for the oil and gas on the lands covered hereby, while such products can be secured in paying quantities, unless consent to suspend operations temporarily is granted by the Secretary of the Interior; to carry on all operations hereunder in a good and workmanlike manner in accordance with approved methods and practice, having due regard for the prevention of waste of oil or gas developed on the land, or the entrance of water through wells drilled by the lessee to the oil sands or oil-bearing strata to the destruction or injury of the oil deposits, the preservation and conservation of the property for future productive operations, and to the health and safety of workmen and employees; to plug securely any well before abandoning the same so as to effectually shut off all water from the oil or gas bearing strata; not to drill any well within 200 feet of any of the outer boundaries of the lands covered hereby, unless the adjoining lands have been patented or the title thereto otherwise vested in private owners; to conduct all mining, drilling, and related productive operations subject to the inspection of the lessor; to carry out at expense of the lessee all reasonable orders and requirements of lessor relative to prevention of waste and preservation of the property and the health and safety of workmen, and on failure so to do the lessor shall have the right to enter on the property to repair damage or prevent waste at the lessee's cost; to abide by and conform to regulations in force at the time the lease is granted covering the matters referred to in this paragraph: Provided, That the lessee shall not be held responsible for delays or casualties occasioned by causes beyond lessee's control.

"(i) Taxes and wages—Freedom of purchase: To pay, when due, all taxes lawfully assessed and levied under the laws of the State upon improvements, oil, and gas produced from the lands hereunder, or other rights, property, or assets of the lessee; to accord all workmen and employees complete freedom of purchase, and to pay all wages due workmen and employees at least twice each month in the lawful money of the United States.

"(j) Reserved deposits: To comply with all statutory requirements and regulations thereunder, if the lands embraced herein have been or shall hereafter be disposed of under the laws reserving to the United States the deposits of oil and gas therein, subject to such conditions as are or may hereafter be provided by the laws reserving such oil or gas.

"(k) Assignment of lease: Not to assign this lease or any interest therein, nor sublet any portion of the leased premises, except with the consent in writing of the Secretary of the Interior first had and obtained.

"(l) Deliver premises in cases of forfeiture: To deliver up the premises leased, with all permanent improvements thereon, in good order and condition in case of forfeiture of this lease; but this shall not be construed to prevent the removal, alteration, or renewal of equipment and improvements in the ordinary course of operations.

"SEC. 3. The lessor expressly reserves:

"(a) Rights reserved—Easements and rights of way: The right to permit for joint or several use easements or rights of way, including easements in tunnels upon, through, or in the lands leased, occupied, or used as may be necessary or appropriate to the working of the same or of other lands containing the deposits described in said act, and the treatment and shipment of products thereof by or under authority of the Government, its lessees, or permittees, and for other public purposes.

"(b) Disposition of surface: The right to lease, sell, or otherwise dispose of the surface of the lands embraced within this lease under existing law or laws hereafter enacted, in so far as said surface is not necessary for the use of the lessee in the extraction and removal of the oil and gas therein.

"(c) Pipe lines to convey at reasonable rates: The right to require the lessee, his assignees or beneficiary, if owner or operator of, or owner of a controlling interest in, any pipe line, or any company operating the same which may be operated accessible to the oil derived from lands under such lease, to accept and convey at reasonable rates and without discrimination the oil of the Government or of any citizen or company, not the owner of any pipe line, operating a lease or purchasing oil or gas under the provisions of this act.

"(d) Monopoly and fair prices: Full power and authority to carry out and enforce all the provisions of section 30 of the act to insure the sale of the production of such leased lands to the United States and to the public at reasonable prices, to prevent monopoly, and to safeguard the public welfare.

"(e) Helium: Pursuant to section 1 of the act, the lessor reserves the right to take all helium from any gas produced under this lease, but the lessee shall not be requried to extract and save the helium for the lessor; in case the lessor elects to take the helium, the lessee shall deliver all gas containing same, or portion thereof desired, to the lessor in the manner required by the lessor, for the extraction of the helium in such plant or reduction works for that purpose as the lessor may provide, whereupon the residue shall be returned to the lessee with no substantial delay in the delivery of gas produced from the well to the purchaser thereof: Provided, That the lessee shall not, as a result of the operation in this section provided for, suffer a diminution of value of the gas from which the helium has been extracted, or loss otherwise, for which the lessee is not reasonably compensated, save for the value of the helium extracted; the lessor further reserves the right to erect, maintain, and operate any and all reduction works and other equipment necessary for the extraction of helium on the premises leased.

"SEC. 4. Surrender and termination of lease: The lessee may, on consent of the Secretary of the Interior first had and obtained in writing, surrender and terminate this lease upon payment of all rents, royalties, and other obligations due and payable to the lessor, and upon payment of all wages and moneys due and payable to the workmen employed by the lessee, and upon a satisfactory showing to the Secretary that the public interest will not be impaired; but in no case shall such termination be effective until the lessee shall have made full provision for conservation and protection of the property; upon like consent had and obtained the lessee may surrender any legal subdivisions of the area included herein.

"SEC. 5. Purchase of materials, etc., on termination of lease: Upon the expiration of this lease, or the earlier termination thereof pursuant to the last preceding section, the lessor or another lessee may, if the lessor shall so elect within six months from the termination of the lease, purchase all materials, tools, machinery, appliances, structures, and equipment placed in or upon the land by the lessee, and in use thereon as a necessary or useful part of an operating or producing plant, on the payment to the lessee of such sum as may be fixed as a reasonable price therefor by a board of three appraisers, one of whom shall be chosen by the lessor, one by the lessee, and the other by the two so chosen; pending such election all equipment shall remain in normal position. If the lessor, or another lessee, shall not, within six months, elect to purchase all or any part of such materials, tools, machinery, appliances, structures, and equipment, the lessee shall have the right at any time within 90 days to remove from the premises all the materials, tools, machinery, appliances, structures, and equipment which the lessor shall not have elected to purchase, save and except casing in wells and other equipment or apparatus necessary for the preservation of the well or wells.

"SEC. 6. Judicial proceedings in case of default: If the lessee shall fail to comply with the provisions of the act, or make default in the performance or observance of any of the terms, covenants, and stipulations hereof, or of the general regulations promulgated and in force at the date hereof, and such default shall continue after service of written notice thereof by the lessor, then the lessor may institute appropriate judicial proceedings for the forfeiture and cancellation of this lease in accordance with the provisions of section 31 of said act; but this provision shall not be construed to prevent the exercise by the lessor of any legal or equitable remedy which the lessor might otherwise have. A waiver of any particular cause of forfeiture shall not prevent the cancellation and forfeiture of this lease for any other cause of forfeiture, or for the same cause occurring at any other time.

"SEC. 7. Heirs and successors in interest: It is further covenanted and agreed that each obligation hereunder shall extend to and be binding upon, and every benefit hereof shall inure to, the heirs, executors, administrators, successors of, or assigns of the respective parties hereto.

"SEC. 8. Unlawful interest: It is also further agreed that no Member of or Delegate to Congress, or Resident Commissioner, after his election or appointment, or either before or after he has qualified, and during his continuance in office, and that no officer, agent, or employee of the Department of the Interior, shall be admitted to any share or part in this lease or derive any benefit that may arise therefrom; and the provisions of section 3741 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and sections 114, 115, and 116 of the Codification of the Penal Laws of the United States, approved March 4, 1919 (35 Stat. 1109), relating to contracts, enter into and form a part of this lease, so far as the same may be applicable."

THE GRADUATED CORPORATION INCOME TAX.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

In the great diversity of opinion and argument in this tax-reduction debate there seems to be an agreement on two propositions: (1) Taxes ought to be reduced; (2) the principle of the progressive graduated income tax should be preserved in the revenue bill. I subscribe to both of these propositions.

Republicans and Democrats have united, very properly, in extolling the virtues of the graduated income tax as a sound means of raising revenue. This method of taxation conforms to the principle accepted by the authorities as being both sound and just, namely, that each individual should help support the Government in accordance with his ability to pay. His ability to bear the burden is measured by the size of his income. According to this principle, each dollar of income is supposed to surrender to the Government a proportionately larger amount as the income increases. It is on this principle that, under the present law, a dollar of income of the $3,000 man pays 4 cents to the Government and the man with a $1,000,000 income pays 58 cents. Although there have been differences of opinion as to the justice and adequacy of the rates, both Republicans and Democrats have accepted this as a sound theory and method of taxation, and it is preserved in the pending revenue bill.

The question naturally arises, If this is a sound and fair method of levying taxes, why should it not be applied to corporation income? Indeed, it was so applied in the five-year period from 1917 to 1921, inclusive. It took the form of the excess-profits tax, which, however, was a very crude and not altogether fair application of the sound principle of the progressively graduated corporation tax.

In 1921, as is well known, the excess-profits tax, with its rates varying from 10 to 40 per cent, was repealed, and a flat uniform rate of 12½ per cent on net profits of corporations was substituted.

I question whether the method used in securing the repeal of this tax would stand the searchlight of investigation. Its repeal was effected by a very subtle and successful propaganda. By its repeal a comparatively small number of business corporations earning high rates of profits were benefited at the expense of a still larger number of business corporations earning low rates of profits.

It must be remembered that while the excess-profits tax law was in effect corporations earning a normal rate of profit were only taxed 10 per cent on their net profits, whereas under the new law, with the excess-profits tax schedules repealed, the new rate of 12½ per cent applied to all corporations, regardless of rates of profit. It is apparent, therefore, on the face of it, that those corporations that had been paying 10 per cent had their tax bills increased to 12½ per cent; that is, an increase of 25 per cent.

That the repeal of the excess-profits tax of 1921 played into the hands of corporations earning high rates of profits and worked to the disadvantage of all legitimate business corporations earning moderate rates of profit is proven conclusively by the following table:

Net income on invested capital of $1,000,000.	Rate of profit.	Tax paid under excess profits law repealed in 1921.	Tax paid under present law of 12½ per cent rate.
	Per cent.
$50,000	5	$4,800	$6,250
$60,000	6	5,800	7,500
$70,000	7	6,800	8,750
$80,000	8	7,800	10,000
$90,000	9	10,200	11,250
$100,000	10	13,200	12,500
$110,000	11	16,200	13,750
$120,000	12	19,200	15,000
$130,000	13	22,200	16,250
$140,000	14	25,200	17,500
$150,000	15	28,200	18,750
$250,000	25	58,200	31,250

Is there any reason on earth why a business corporation earning 10 per cent on its invested capital should pay a 12½ per cent rate on its profits, while a corporation earning 100 per cent rate of profits is paying the same rate of taxes, namely, 12½ per cent?

There is every reason in the world why corporations earning high rates of profits should pay higher rates of taxes on net income as related to invested capital. High rates of profit are usually earned because of some monopoly power or because of disorganized and chaotic conditions in our economic society. In either case, whether it is due to monopoly or to lack of organization, society is justified in taking a higher rate of revenue from such favored and fortunate corporations as against those who earn only normal rates, let us say from 5 to 10 per cent, on invested capital.

There is an additional reason why we ought to capture some of these abnormal profits. Having declared stock dividends nontaxable income, the decision of the United States Supreme Court now permits corporations to pass on to their wealthy stockholders their large profits in such a way as to enable them to escape the tax. The corporations that issue stock dividends are likely to be those that have earned and are earning high rates of profit. Corporations that have hidden their real profits, and have not been taxed on their undistributed profits, pass along to their stockholders wealth in such a form as to escape the tax which was originally intended to reach just this class of stockholders. This being so, and until the situation is remedied, the Government ought to be resourceful and courageous enough at this time to impose a graduated tax high enough to capture some of these large profits before they are distributed in the form of stock dividends.

The evil is still further aggravated by the situation which permits a stockholder to receive these high profits in the form of stock dividends and, after holding them for two years, dispose of them and invest in tax-exempt securities. The only tax levied on this income is at the time of the transfer of the tax-free securities, namely, 12½ per cent, this being a tax on the capital gain. I repeat, therefore, that there is every reason why our democratic Government is justified in applying a progressively graduated income tax to business corporations. In saying this I wish to be understood that I do not have in mind attacking big business as such. A progressively graduated corporations-income tax might hit a small corporation much harder than some very large ones. It is not the size of the corporation, not the volume of business, not the size of the income, but the rate of income as related to invested capital that I have in mind as the real and fair basis of the tax. This being so, no business corporation doing a legitimate business and earning a legitimate rate of profit need have any fear of the effect of such a tax, assuming the rates to be fair.

Let us assume, for the sake of argument, that the Federal Government should desire to raise no more revenue than is now raised by the 12½ per cent tax. In this event a schedule of rates could be so graduated as to spread the burden more equitably over all business. We could so graduate the rates as to lower the tax for corporations earning less than 10 per cent and increase the tax for those earning more than 10 per cent on invested capital.

The following table illustrates how the law would operate if we had a graduated schedule of rates ranging from 5 to 25 per cent on net income:

Net income on $1,000,000 capital.	Per cent of return on invested capital.	Rate of tax.	Tax paid under graduated scale.	Tax paid under present 12½ per cent rate.
$25,000	2.5	5	$1,250	$3,125
$70,000	7	7	4,700	8,750
$130,000	13	13	16,100	16,250
$180,000	18	18	31,100	22,500

You will observe that the corporation that is earning to-day only 7 per cent on its invested capital would be decidedly favored, whereas those earning 13 per cent and more would be taxed more heavily. This is as it should be. On the other hand, if it is desired to increase our revenues from this source, all we have to do is to lift the schedule of rates, let us say, from 8 per cent to 30 per cent, or from 10 per cent to 35 per cent, depending, of course, on how large an increase of revenue it is desired to secure. The point I wish to make, however, is this: That we could raise the same amount of revenue which we raise to-day, and more equitably, if our rates were graduated progressively as against the flat rate now in force and retained also in the pending bill.

To put into operation the progressive graduated corporation income-tax schedule which I have in mind, I shall offer the following amendment as a substitute for the flat rate provided for in the pending bill:

In lieu of taxes paid by corporations provided for in section 230 of this act there shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the net income of every corporation the following rates of taxation:

A tax of 5 per cent on net incomes not in excess of $10,000.

On earnings in excess of $10,000 the following rates shall be applied:

On all earnings up to 5 per cent of invested capital, a tax of 5 per cent.

On earnings of 25 per cent of invested capital or under, the rate on the entire income in excess of $10,000 shall be that percentage which the total income is of the invested capital: Provided, That the minimum rate so applied shall be 5 per cent.

On earnings in excess of 25 per cent of invested capital the rate of tax shall be 25 per cent of the net income: Provided, That $10,000 thereof shall be subject to a tax of 5 per cent.

I must confess frankly that my schedule of rates has been drawn in a rather arbitrary fashion. This must of necessity be so, because of the lack of information available relating to earnings and net profits of corporations. Until we have such data carefully and comprehensively tabulated it will be impossible to formulate a scientific schedule of rates. The only data that I am able to find on this subject is in a report of the Treasury Department under date of July 5, 1918, which covers the corporate earnings for some 30,000 corporations, all of which had earned 15 per cent or more on their invested capital. This was for the period 1916–17.

I hope that the new revenue bill will contain a section providing for larger publicity of income-tax returns of this character. Without it we must flounder in a sea of guesses.

I should like to call attention to another phase of this subject which has been entirely overlooked. Under the present law the 12½ per cent rate operates against partnerships and in favor of corporations. A partnership is subjected to a graduated income tax, and the net profits may be taxed to each partner as high as the surtax rates will go, namely, 58 per cent, whereas this same concern if it were incorporated would only pay a 12½ per cent tax on the same net income. This unfair discrimination against partnerships through the operation of the flat rate on corporate income is brought out in the following table:

(1) Illustration showing how the income tax law operates in favor of the corporation and against the partnership.

ASSUME.

A corporation having $1,000,000 invested capital.
Earnings, $150,000, or 15 per cent on capital.
Salaries of two officers, $10,000 each, married, no dependents:

Tax paid by corporation, at 12½ per cent, on $150,000	$18,750
Tax paid by each officer, $520; two officers	1,040
Total tax	19,790

ASSUME.

A partnership having $1,000,000 invested capital.
Earnings, $150,000, or 15 per cent on invested capital.
Salaries of two partners, $10,000 each, married, no dependents:

Tax paid by partnership
Tax paid by each partner on:
Salary of	$10,000
Profit	75,000
	85,000	$22,880
Total tax paid by two partners		44,760

Corporation pays $19,790; partnership pays $44,760.

ASSUME.

A corporation having $1,000,000 capital.
Earnings, $50,000, or 5 per cent on invested capital.
Salaries of two officers, $10,000 each, married, no dependents:

Tax paid by corporation, at 12½ per cent, on $50,000	$6,250
Tax paid by each officer, $520; two officers	1,040
Total tax	7,290

ASSUME.

A partnership having $1,000,000 capital.
Earnings, $50,000, or 5 per cent on invested capital.
Salaries of two officers, at $10,000:

Tax paid by partnership on profits
Tax paid by each officer on salary of $10,000 plus undistributed profit of $25,000	$4,630
Tax paid by two partners	9,260

Corporation pays $7,290; partnership pays $9,260.

The theory of the progressive graduated corporation income tax which I am advocating has been indorsed by many of the great American economists and tax experts. Prof. T. S. Adams, of the department of political economy at Yale University, is reported to have been advising the Treasury Department in framing tax legislation. Professor Adams has been quoted by our Republican friends as one of the greatest experts in this country on the income tax. In a letter which I received from Professor Adams recently in reply to an inquiry of mine he has this to say of the graduated corporation income tax:

The principal form of the graduated corporation income tax is the excess-profits tax. Experts are divided in their opinions about the principle or theory of this tax. Personally I approve of it, and I believe that the majority of the experts may be said to approve of the theory of the graduated excess-profits tax.

Prof. E. R. A. Seligman, of Columbia University, who is recognized, I presume, as the best informed economist in America on fiscal matters, has for many years advocated this method of taxation.

There is but one substantial objection that has been offered against this method of taxation. It is contended that while it is sound in principle it is difficult to administer. The practical difficulties in the administration of the law have, to my mind, been grossly exaggerated in the minds of those who oppose this method of taxation.

I realize, of course, that the crucial point in the administration of the law is the securing of honest returns as to invested capital. By inflating dishonestly the invested capital the rate of net return appears unduly small and enables the corporation thereby to escape its share of taxation. My reply to this is, first, that the corporation that is zealous in beating the law can do so under the flat rate by juggling book accounts. By adding undue amounts for depreciation and depletion, and so forth, the net return is reduced from a tax point of view and high salaries are paid to evade the taxes. Still we must operate on the assumption that men are honest and that the tax evader is the exception rather than the rule.

Nor must we overlook the fact that when for over five years the Government had been at work collecting and auditing data as to invested capital, and we had just reached the point where we felt that we had solved the problem, the excess-profits tax law was repealed in 1921 and the Government lost the benefit of the years of experience in this matter. For the new corporations there is no serious problem, and for the old corporations the matter has been pretty well settled as a result of the experience from 1917 to 1921, during which period the excess-profits tax was in vogue.

This method of taxation is not altogether new. Wisconsin adopted it in 1911. Norway has accepted it. Great Britain has used it very effectively for raising revenues. The time will come when business men will regard it as a very fair method of raising revenues.

MUSCLE SHOALS.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 518, relating to Muscle Shoals.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. MAPES in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read the title, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 518) to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to sell to Henry Ford nitrate plant No. 1, at Sheffield, Ala.; nitrate plant No. 2, at Muscle Shoals, Ala.; Waco Quarry, near Russellville, Ala.; and to lease to the corporation to be incorporated by him Dam No. 2 and Dam No. 3 (as designated in H. Doc. No. 1262, 64th Cong., 1st sess.), including power stations when constructed as provided herein, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose last night an amendment was pending offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a perfecting amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, where a Member offers an amendment, he can not offer an additional perfecting amendment to perfect his own amendment, but that must be done by unanimous consent. A modification of his own amendment must be done by unanimous cosent, and not by motion.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, a perfecting amendment is in order at any time, offered either by the original mover of the amendment or any other Member.

Mr. BLANTON. That is, as to the text; but any amendment to his own amendment must be done by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. A perfecting amendment is in order under the rules, and there is nothing to prevent a Member from offering an amendment to his first amendment. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the original amendment be first read, and then that the perfecting amendment be read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the original amendment, and then the perfecting amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BURTON: Page 8, in section 4, strike out lines 18 to 25, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "The company during the period of this lease shall, at its own expense, provide for the necessary repairs, maintenance, and operation of Dam No. 2, its gates, and locks."

Amendment to the proposed amendment by Mr. BURTON: After the word "repairs" include the word "replacements."

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, when this amendment was pending last evening General Beach, the Chief of Engineers, was quoted as saying that $25,000 would be sufficient for repairs and operation for this Dam No. 2. That figure very much surprised me. I have the greatest confidence in General Beach, and for years was in very close association with the Corps of Engineers. I thought there must be some mistake about it, and I have investigated. The explanation is this: There is not a clearly defined line between replacements and repairs. What General Beach meant was that to provide the number of men necessary to take care of the gates and of the structures on the top of the dam, as well as the repairs and ordinary maintenance, would require $25,000 a year. But in the popular mind repairs include the replacement of pieces that fail, the keeping of the plant in the general condition in which it was originally constructed, and making it efficient for service at any time. So I have obtained the figures since that time. There are 58 steel gates for the discharge of water on this dam. The ordinary life of one of those steel gates under the best of conditions is from 25 to 50 years. They are of ordinary structural steel, and an engineer in making computations would compute that the deterioration upon those would be 2 per cent per annum, and that they would have to be replaced at an indefinite period between 25 and 50 years.

The cost of those gates is $2,619,000. Now, merely for providing men to take care of them, and there are mechanical devices so that in two hours the whole 58 can be raised, and for grease and for oil and for paint, the estimate of General Beach would be correct. Figured more accurately, this would be $26,180; but when you take into account the necessary replacement of the machinery for the spillways—that is, the steel gates—there is an additional amount of twice that, or $52,360, making $78,540 for all. This is a mere beginning, however. This entirely leaves out of consideration any deterioration in the dam. It ignores any deterioration in the 18 units required for transmitting the water to the water wheels and to the generators. The water comes out from the pool into the power house, goes by pipes to the water wheels, above which are the generators. Those installations cost $14,400,000, according to the best estimate I can obtain; and the deterioration upon those, the diminished value, and the necessity for replacement at the end of 50 or 100 years would involve a diminished value of 25 to 50 per cent, or from $3,600,000 to $7,200,000. Again, I am not able to believe that in such an enormous installation, costing $60,000,000, a dam which has more concrete in it perhaps than any in the world, with all its appliances and its machinery, that there will not be a very much larger deterioration.

It is said that Mr. Ford—and there is a great blare of trumpets about this—proposes to pay $19,868 per annum to go into a sinking fund, and it is stated what that amount will be in 50 or 100 years; and that is very large. I have not been able to verify the figures, but you have at the outset the actual necessity for maintenance and repairs, because repair ordinarily includes replacements, $78,560 a year, and your $35,000 plus that $19,868 makes $54,000, which leaves the Government a loser by $24,000 a year for just ordinary and necessary repair and replacement and wipes out your much-boasted sinking fund.

Mr. Chairman, I have included the word "replacement" to remove any ambiguity.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the gentleman's original amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers a substitute, which the Clark will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 3, line 20, strike out all of line 20 and insert in lieu thereof "all expense necessary"; and in line 24, after the word "direction," strike out the words "care and responsibility"; and in line 25, after the word "States," insert the words "but at the expense of said company," so, as amended, it will read:

"SEC. 4. The company will further pay to the United States during the period of the lease of Dam No. 2 all expenses necessary for repairs, maintenance, and operation of Dam No. 2, its gates and locks, it being understood that all necessary repairs, maintenance, and operation thereof shall be under the direction of the United States but at the expense of said company during the said 100-year lease period."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the only difference between the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] and my substitute is that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio does not leave these repairs and replacements and the maintenance under the direction of the United States, but leaves it entirely to Mr. Ford. If you adopt the substitute you properly safeguard the bill, which requires the Government of the United States for 100 years to make the repairs, to maintain and operate this dam, locks, and gates at the expense of the Government; but if you adopt my substitute, while the United States Government, through its engineers, has direction of all repairs and replacements and the maintenance, yet the actual expense will be borne by the Ford Co.

Mr. KEARNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I have but a few minutes, but I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KEARNS. What will Wilson Dam cost—Dam No. 2?

Mr. BLANTON. I understand, with all the machinery and everything complete, about $60,000,000.

Mr. KEARNS. All of the engineers before the Military Affairs Committee testified that the upkeep of that dam would be a minimum of 1 per cent of the cost of construction and the maximum would be 3 per cent of the cost of construction.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and we are proposing for 100 years, for a measly little old sum of $35,000 a year, to bind the United States to repair, replace, maintain, and operate Dam No. 2 and all of its locks and gates at its own expense, and I am not in favor of it.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment. The gentleman has had an hour on this matter and I have only had about 10 minutes.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. I just want to ask a question, and I will say that I am with the gentleman and am going to ask for more time for the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not know whether the gentleman will be able to obtain additional time, but I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. I just want to say to the gentleman that the engineers have reported that the condition of the bed of the river, both at the base of the dam and at each end of the dam, is such that they fear there might be underwashing.

Mr. BLANTON. That is exactly what should be safeguarded. I want to repeat to my friends from Alabama what I said yesterday. I am just as anxious for Henry Ford to get this project as you are, but I will tell you a good reason for placing this project under the direction of the United States and at the expense of the company during the 100 years.

There could be a little trickling of water running around either end of this dam which would start in the next hundred years which, if detected in time by the use of ordinary, diligent inquiry, could be stopped with very little harm and cost; but if parties know that the great Government of the United States, with its big Treasury at Washington, is going to replace whenever damage comes, they become a little careless, and steps might not be taken to stop it. There could be a little undermining underneath this dam from time to time or a little seepage which, if detected by proper care, could be stopped with very little damage and expense, but if allowed to go on and on without care and diligence in detecting it and in promptly repairing it could undermine the dam and it could be washed out not once in a hundred years but it could be washed out a dozen times, and it could cost the Government $60,000,000 every time in order to replace it. I am not willing by my vote to bind the Government in such a proposition that will place a burden of that kind upon the people of the United States for 100 years, and I am not going to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas have three minutes more.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, and I am not going to object, I trust that we may at least have a tacit understanding, because we are all very anxious to try to finish this bill to-day and as speedily as possible, and the matter has been very thoroughly discussed.

Mr. BLANTON. I would not ask for additional time, I will say to my friend from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am not going to object, but I just wanted to see if we could not get along faster with the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take up the time of the House uselessly, but I am deeply interested in this matter in behalf of the 110,000,000 people of the United States. This is the only time that we are ever going to have a chance to safeguard the people and their Treasury. When you pass this bill it goes beyond the reach of Congress. You can not change it in any particular hereafter, I do not care how many defects you may find in it or how anxious you may be to change it in the interest of the people. You will not be able to do it. It would be an impairment of an existing contract, and it would be illegal as to these people if you tried to change it hereafter after we entered into this contract, because the very minute this bill is passed by the House and the Senate and signed by the President it becomes a binding contract if Henry Ford accepts it. Now is the time to properly write it. Why should we not make these safeguards? We are the only ones here to look after the rights of the people. Why should we not take time here and be diligent in looking at it with care to safeguard the rights of a hundred and ten million people?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman use the word "replacements" in his amendment instead of the word "repairs"?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, repairs mean replacements.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. There is some doubt about that.

Mr. BLANTON. This Congress has so held in rebuilding buildings destroyed. Let me say to the gentleman that Henry Ford has not overlooked any bets in this contract. If the best attorneys in the United States, who represented Henry Ford, had not known that repairs mean replacements there would have been the word "replacements" in this bill. No such word is found in the bill. Repairs cover replacements. There is no question about that. I suggest that the gentleman get his dictionary. I am satisfied on that point, but I am not satisfied to leave the section as it is now written. Why do you gentlemen from Alabama oppose changing it? If Henry Ford is sincere, if he is willing to be fair to the people, do you think that he would object to this change? No. Show me a man who is to get such very valuable property for 100 years who will not agree to keep it up and keep it in repair. You ought to adopt the amendment to safeguard the rights of the people.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I am very much interested in what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] said and also in what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] has said. I say to the gentlemen who are interested in this bill that we are all interested in passing it. It is a very important matter, and I hope that when we have under consideration matters like this which are unquestionably important there should be no disposition on the part of anyone to shut off debate when we are trying to make this bill what it should be and protect the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, yes; for a question, if the gentleman will get me a little more time.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Oh, I would give the gentleman a year and a half as far as I am concerned. The gentleman helped to draft this section and perfect it. Has he ever objected to it in its present form?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, I have found a great deal of new light since then; I have progressed. The trouble with the gentleman from Texas is that he has not progressed. If I had lived for two years and had not learned anything new, I would want to die.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Oh, there are a lot of things to be discovered in two years.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Suppose the amendment of the gentleman from Texas were to be adopted, then that would leave the company, or whoever controlled it, obligated to make whatever repairs the Government said should be made. In a private business, between man and man, would the gentleman from Iowa plan a contract where the other party had the right to say what repairs he should make?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I certainly would, if I were getting the great value that Henry Ford is in this. I would not question it at all.

Mr. BEGG. If the gentleman will permit, I do not think the value has anything to do with it. Would it be good business for a man to obligate himself to make repairs that might run up, as the gentleman from Texas says, to $60,000,000?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I want to answer the question. The gentleman makes a very amazing statement. He says that the value of the contract has nothing to do with it. The value of the contract has everything to do with it, and the gentleman ought to know that. Sixty million dollars! Think of this! And under this contract the United States Treasury is to pay it for the benefit of Henry Ford and his company.

Mr. BEGG. I would not think the value of the contract had anything to do with it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. In making a contract, the value of the contract has everything to do with what you will expend in repairs.

Mr. BEGG. The contract has no value if the man making the contract kills the value of it by making repairs unnecessarily, and the gentleman knows that.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I want to say just a few words in regard to that. You will find this to be true if you ever make this contract. There will be erosion on that dam. That is not provided for. There will be many repairs and replacements necessary, and you have not allowed for that. I do not think you have allowed one-fifth enough to take care of repairs and replacements, let alone the great erosion that would take place upon the dam itself.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I call attention to the fact that in this contract, as we passed it last night, you give to Henry Ford $680,000 a year in actual value, less what you are offered from other sources. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. On the other hand, should not the Government that is to build this dam at an expense of millions of dollars be in a condition to require the lessee to take care of it?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly. There is no question about that. This company ought to take care of it. We have offers from others who are reputable people—and I am not advocating their contracts—and I call attention to the fact that last night you gave to Henry Ford this property by denying the amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. WILLIAMSON]. His amendment would have compelled Henry Ford to pay $680,000 more a year, or the same as you were offered.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, it seems to me that we have had pretty nearly all of the debate that we want on this proposition. We have been listening to debate for five days, and I believe the membership of the House has made up its mind to what it wants to do about this bill. I serve notice now that I am going to object to extensions from now on to men who have spoken several times on the proposition. I think this bill should be finished to-night.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman is exercising his right; he can object.

Mr. SNYDER. I want to say this: That there are other important matters to come before the House. We have been five days on this, which is ample time, and this bill ought to be finished to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I object.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the argument by my good friend from Iowa, who lives across the Mississippi River from my district, is perfectly absurd in view of the statement he made when we had the hearings before our committee. When Hugh L. Cooper appeared before our committee the last time—and, by the way, he was at that time against the Ford offer, but has seen light, like my friend from Iowa—he was asked this question: "If proper precautions are taken in the building and upkeep of the dam there is no danger of the dam going out?" Mr. Cooper said, "No; I do not think there is any danger at all. I would be willing to have my family live under the dam when you get through with it so far as safety is concerned, but if proper precautions are not taken in the building, and after, it will not be sufficient." Mr. HULL then asked, "You think they will take proper precautions?" Mr. Cooper said, "There is no doubt of that."

Mr. Cooper is down there now helping to build the dam. These amendments are offered in the attempt by these gentlemen to write the proposal of another man in his absence, and without even submitting them to the members of the committee first. I said last evening that I relied on the judgment of the Chief of the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army, and while I respect my friend from Ohio, with his long experience, and while I have a friendly feeling for the gentleman from Iowa, I say that it is simply trifling with this matter now for those gentlemen to come in with amendments of this character. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote, and I hope the substitute and the amendment both will be voted down.

Mr. BURTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. Does the gentleman realize that under my amendment there is no provision made for restoration of the dam?

Mr. McKENZIE. I understand.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the perfecting amendment by the gentleman from Ohio to his own amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Texas to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer to the substitute of the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA to the substitute offered by Mr. BLANTON: After the word "repairs" in the Blanton substitute insert the word "replacements."

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, as stated by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] the practice of accountancy is to keep the item of replacements separate from the item of repairs, and in a construction of this kind it will not be many years before you will have to make replacements costing large amounts of money which, under the strict construction of the contract, would be excluded from the provision for repairs.

Now, gentlemen of the committee, the intention of this contract is that the lessee shall pay for the repairs. This intent is weakened, if not destroyed, by limiting the amount for repairs to $35,000. If the amount of $35,000 will cover all the repairs and maintenance and replacement, then the lessee can not object to the amendment or to the substitute which provides exactly the same conditions but does not limit it to the amount of $35,000. If, on the other hand, the proponents of the bill know that $35,000 is not enough, then they are endeavoring to mislead the House by saying that the lessee shall pay for the repairs, and then limit his liability on this obligation to $35,000.

I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] that it is not trifling, and the members of this committee should not be charged with trifling, because we seek to protect the interest of the Government. We are trying to perfect a contract which the committee has had for two years and was brought before the House under a special rule. We are getting startling information daily, and if the gentleman from Illinois will give us the opportunity, we will get a contract through the House which may be presented to Mr. Ford protecting the interest of the people, and Mr. Ford can take it or leave it.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Mr. Chairman, we have been almost two days on a bill of 19 pages, and here we are only on the third page, at section 4, and some gentlemen of this House come here with dilatory tactics that are being used to defeat the measure. I charge that they are dilatory tactics absolutely.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLGOOD. No; I decline to yield. The gentleman from Texas said the other day that if they did not adopt his amendment he was going to vote against the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. But that is not dilatory.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Henry Ford's offer for Muscle Shoals is a question of so much moment and interest to the citizens of this Nation that it has more and more during the past three years become the subject of thought and conversation by people in every walk of life and from every section of our great country.

Muscle Shoals is one of the best-known places in the Nation today, because it represents power to the manufacturer, light and heat to the home owners, and fertilizer to the farmers.

One hundred million dollars was spent by Congress to develop Muscle Shoals as a war measure. The war is over, and God in heaven knows that the people of this world need to have some good come to them to help recompense them for the fearful losses of life and property during the war; therefore Congress is now seeking to convert a war-time agency which was intended for the destruction of human life into an agency which will make human existence possible. In fact, consummation of this contract will be the erecting of a monument by this Congress to the memory of plenty, peace, and prosperity.

During the war our Government spent $25,000,000,000 for the defense of this country, and here you are raising a question on an expenditure of a few thousand dollars when in the expenditure of the $25,000,000,000 Congress was almost unanimous in making those expenditures. We have practically nothing to show for that $25,000,000,000 in any material way except debt, debt, debt, which this Congress is being called upon to levy taxes upon the backs of the people of this Government to pay.

In Alabama we have the great Muscle Shoals plant to show for the money that was spent there. The acceptance of Henry Ford's offer and the carrying out of his contract will cause the nitrate plants to be operated and bring a revenue of more than $344,000,000 to the United States Treasury.

Gentlemen, I have been for the Ford offer from its very beginning, for at that time I had the honor to be serving my State as commissioner of agriculture and industries and thereby knew the needs of the farmers for cheaper and better fertilizers. Mr. Ford's offer stated that he would use a part of this great natural resource for the manufacture of fertilizers to be sold to farmers at reduced costs. In order that you may know what Henry Ford proposes to do along this line I will quote direct from his proposal, which says:

Since the manufacture, sale, and distribution of commercial fertilizers to farmers and other users thereof constitutes one of the principal considerations of this offer, the company expressly agrees that, continuously throughout the lease period, except as it may be prevented by reconstruction of the plant itself or by war, strikes, accident, fires, or other causes beyond its control, it will manufacture nitrogen and other commercial fertilizers, mixed or unmixed, and with or without filler, according to demand, at nitrate plant No. 2 or its equivalent, or at such other plant or plants adjacent or near thereto as it may construct, using the most economical source of power available. The annual production of these fertilizers shall have a nitrogen content of at least 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen, which is the present annual capacity of nitrate plant No. 2. If during the lease period said nitrate plant No. 2 is destroyed or damaged from any cause the company agrees to restore such plant within a reasonable time to its former capacity, and further agrees:

(a) To determine by research whether by means of electric furnace methods and industrial chemistry there may be produced on a commercial scale fertilizer compounds of higher grade and at lower prices than farmers and other users of commercial fertilizers have in the past been able to obtain, and to determine whether in a broad way the application of electricity and industrial chemistry may accomplish for the agricultural industry of the country what they have economically accomplished for other industries, and if so found and determined to reasonably employ such improved methods.

(b) To maintain nitrate plant No. 2 in its present state of readiness or its equivalent for immediate operation in the manufacture of materials necessary in time of war for the production of explosives.

In order that farmers and other users of fertilizers may be supplied with fertilizers at fair prices and without excessive profits the company agrees that the maximum net profit which it shall make in the manufacture and sale of fertilizer products shall not exceed 8 per cent of the fair actual annual cost of production thereof.

The fertilizer bill is one of the heaviest that the farmer pays. In the year 1880 the farmers of the United States spent only $28,000,000 for fertilizer; in the year 1920 the farmers of North Carolina spent twice as much as all the farmers of the United States spent in 1880. Our national fertilizer bill in 1920 was more than $300,000,000. The farmers were the first to pay this heavy burden, but finally some of it had to be borne by the consumers of farm products, who live in our towns and cities. Thus you see this is a question that has to do with the cost of living of practically every family in the Nation. The fertilizer question is not a sectional one. Formerly the southern farmer was the only one to buy commercial fertilizer, but to-day the farmers of Ohio buy more fertilizer than do the farmers of Florida. Missouri buys more than Louisiana, and Michigan more than Tennessee. From 1909 to 1919 Alabama farmers increased their expenditures for fertilizers 80 per cent, while the farmers of Iowa increased 400 per cent; Oregon, 600 per cent; Montana, 900 per cent; North Dakota, 1,000 per cent; and Oklahoma, 1,400 per cent. It is estimated that, if the increase for the country during the next 10 years is only 80 per cent of what it was for the last decade, our annual fertilizer bill will amount to more than $800,000,000 by 1930.

It is no wonder the farmers of the country want Henry Ford's offer accepted. They wanted relief three years ago, when the offer was first made, and if accepted now it will possibly be some years yet before they will get relief from the Fertilizer Trust. It is no wonder that thousands of people who live in towns and cities, and who buy farm products, want their living costs reduced, and therefore favor Ford's offer. It is no wonder to me, nor to any farmer in the country, that the fertilizer manufacturers and Fertilizer Trust, which have been reaping such rich rewards, have joined hands with other interests to prevent the acceptance of Ford's offer by the last Congress, and now by this Congress, or by any Congress in the future.

Two years ago expert chemists who opposed the Ford offer testified before the Military Affairs Committee of Congress that it was impossible to produce fertilizers by hydroelectricity at one-half the price for which it was being sold. Mr. Ford's experts stated it could be done. In 1922, when the American people had elected a Congress more favorable to Ford's offer, the same companies that made bids formerly, together with other companies, included fertilizer contracts in their bids and produced expert witnesses who testified that fertilizers could be produced at Muscle Shoals at one-half the cost for which it is now manufactured, thereby corroborating Mr. Ford's contention made two years ago.

The use of fertilizer is an economic one. The farmers in each section of our country have troubles which are peculiar to their own section. In the South, where our main crop is cotton, we are confronted with the boll weevil. In Alabama, my native State, in the year 1912 we produced on four and one-half million acres of land 1,700,000 bales of cotton and paid $8,000,000 for fertilizer. In 1923 Alabama planted 3,000,000 acres in cotton and produced only one-third as much cotton as in 1912, but our fertilizer bills had climbed to $15,000,000, and it is safe to say that if our farmers had been deprived of the use of fertilizers they could not have made 300,000 bales of cotton in 1923, because not only is the fertility of the soil greatly depleted but under boll-weevil conditions it is absolutely necessary to use increased quantities of fertilizers which run high in nitrogen content, and remember, gentlemen, that nitrogen is the product which Henry Ford proposes to take from the air and convert into fertilizer at the big fertilizer plant at Muscle Shoals. Over every acre of ground there are 33,000 tons of pure nitrogen in the air, and why should we continue to pay tribute to Chile when we can produce within our own borders and at a much cheaper rate a product of equal value, and why should we continue the extravagant use of cottonseed meal as a fertilizer?

Cottonseed meal is one of the very best feeds that we have for livestock production as well as the production of dairy products, and it usually brings $40 or $50 a ton for this purpose.

We are annually using 700,000 tons of cottonseed meal as fertilizers, which is an enormous waste, as only about 8 pounds in each 100 pounds has any plant-food value, therefore 92 pounds out of each hundred is lost by the farmer. If the farmer pays $50 a ton for his cottonseed meal at this rate he is paying 35 cents a pound for his nitrogen. Mr. Ford's experts, as well as the other experts before the Military Affairs Committee, before this Congress, testified that similar plant food could be manufactured at Muscle Shoals at a cost not exceeding 10 cents a pound.

I think it nothing but justice to the farmers of this country that they have some of the benefits of the development of our national resources returned to them, for they are the ones who buy, improve, work, and pay taxes upon lands which form watersheds for the streams that produce the hydroelectric power. These streams have also washed millions of tons of plant food from the farms, and these same streams should by justice and by right be used to help restore the fertility which their waters washed away.

Since the Civil War the farmers of the world have paid more than $3,000,000,000 for Chilean nitrates, and the American farmers have paid almost one billion of this amount. Are you surprised at them crying out for relief? In 1920 in my State, with deflation and heavy boll-weevil infestation, there were thousands of farmers who did not make enough cotton to pay their fertilizer bills, and as a result many of them became discouraged, left the farms to become competitors with those engaged in industry.

Agriculture is the basic industry of the Nation, but taken as a whole the condition of the American farmer is worse than ever before in history. You can search the mortgage records of your county seat and you will find more farm mortgages, and that more interest is being paid by farmers than at any previous time. Farm conditions are not good.

When war was declared you people know that the farmers hearkened to the cry of Congress; that they hearkened to the cry of the President; that they hearkened to the cry of our soldiers; they went forth early in the morning and toiled all day long in the fields, laboring in order that our soldiers might have subsistence with which to win the war. Not only that, but after the war when the foreign countries had been devastated and the Macedonian cry came across the waters that those peoples were starving, again our farmers were called to go into the fields, and they produced and produced at a great loss.

Go with me into the farm homes and I will show you that the old people are the ones that are staying with the farms; with but few exceptions the farmers' sons and the farmers' daughters have left the old homestead and gone to the towns and cities, where they engage in occupations which are far more remunerative than agriculture.

I plead with you here to-day to pass this bill as a farm-relief measure. If the life of this Government is to be perpetuated, the farmer must have laws enacted that are favorable, and that will enable him to prosper, and to you people who live in the great cities like New York, Baltimore, Philadelphia, and San Francisco I want to state that the acceptance of Henry Ford's offer is not sectional but is national, for in time of peace it will enable us to a greater extent to make living conditions more tolerable, so that we can keep more of our sons and daughters on the farms who will help us produce, to feed and clothe not only the 50,000,000 people who live on the farms but in addition to feed and clothe 50,000,000 people who live in our towns and cities, who, when they pray "Give us this day our daily bread," are expecting a kind Providence to answer their prayers through the industry and sweat of the farmer and his family. Yes, we are willing to work in order that we may have a great, happy, and prosperous people. Standing in my place to-day I can vouchsafe that if in the years to come a foreign foe should attempt to invade the New England coast or the Pacific coast, the sons of the farmers of the South would be found leaving their homes to join hands with your sons in defense of a common country, and in that event, which I pray to high heaven will never come, but if it should come there would be at Muscle Shoals, Ala., the great nitrate plants intact and ready to produce the sinews of war for the protection of the greatest people that ever lived. Aye, sirs, I not only deem it my duty, but I think it a rare privilege to have an opportunity to vote for a measure that means so much to the people of this entire Nation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ALLGOOD. I would like to have three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and this section close in 12 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves that all debate on this amendment and section close in 12 minutes.

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask the Clerk to read the following letter in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the letter will be read in the time of the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

LETTER FROM GOVERNOR SHAW TO CONGRESSMAN BURTON.

MARCH 6, 1924.

Hon. THEODORE E. BURTON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN BURTON: I have just read and reread parts of your masterful speech of yesterday on the Muscle Shoals proposition. I can but think that, if there be consciousness beyond, how delighted my once great chief and our mutual friend must be. I was of his official family at the time of the three Roosevelt vetoes of water power bills you mention.

Mr. Roosevelt's idea of conservation of water power did not contemplate their perpetual nondevelopment. No one more than he loved to see "the wheels go round" or rejoiced more in industrial activity. What he hated, with all the intensity of his intense nature, was monopoly and special privilege, such as the pending measure contemplates. If it shall pass with the support of his once political friends, he will surely seek—and I hope not in vain—a reincarnation. Think of it! The greatest special privilege ever contemplated by any government, the greatest possible monopoly ever conceived by man, plus a gratuity of nearly $100,000,000 in present development, being turned over by his country to a pacifist and the father of a slacker, with no assurance that the beneficiary will change his policy of a lifetime and do something calculated to benefit others, further than a promise to experiment in fertilizer production to ascertain whether it can be made more profitable than the manufacture of cars.

I was particularly interested as you traced the evolution in water-power legislation, covering nearly 20 years and culminating in the act of 1920, enacted by the first Republican Congress after some years of its minority experience, and approved by President Wilson. I have always believed that act embodied Mr. Roosevelt's conception as nearly as legislation can be expected to express the wishes of one statesman. Certainly the result has justified it. I did not know until I read your speech that under that great constructive measure six times as much contemplated power has sought licenses and permits, three times as much has been granted by the Government, and twice as much actually developed as in the preceding 20 years. The public, having had less experience with legislative inconsistencies than some of us, will have difficulty in understanding why 20 years should have been spent in developing a law that admittedly works admirably, only to be ignored by the body that passed it, no Member of which would have the temerity to suggest its repeal.

You are right, Mr. Statesman; the oil scandals which are now occupying the attention of Congress to a degree that disgusts every sane American are of small import compared with the gift of property costing practically $100,000,000, the obligation on the part of the Government to expend other millions, the conveyance by the Government of a modernly equipped city, with paved streets, housing for thousands of people, with no Government supervision except in case of actual war. There is, however, this marked distinction: Some evidence that one man of high rank in one political party has been influenced by an unsecured loan and that several of high rank in the other party have been bought by unearned fees seems to be the sole cause of existing congressional hysteria. While what you seek to prevent would prove far more harmful than the loss of all the oil embraced in disputed leases, it would not be as exciting. This country meekly suffers annually vastly more from legislative asininity than it has lost in all its history from bipartisan cupidity.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HERSEY. I ask that the balance of the letter be inserted as an extension of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent that the balance of the letter be inserted in his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas objected.

Mr. HERSEY. Under general leave to extend remarks upon this bill, I wish to say further that I greatly regret that the House could not have the full letter, but I must submit. In addition to my remarks on this bill on March 6 I wish to add this statement from the chairman of the board of governors, International Farm Congress of America:

The National Grange has never indorsed the Ford offer. At its last annual meeting a resolution to do so was rejected. The grange reported a paid membership of 601,086 last year.

The National Board of Farm Organizations, which met in Washington only three weeks ago, refused to consider a resolution indorsing the Ford offer. This group includes the Farmers' Union, a strong association of milk producers, and some others, with a total membership in excess of 600,000.

The National Council of Cooperative Marketing Associations, which also met in Washington within the past month, ignored the entire Muscle Shoals proposition. The paid membership of the associations composing this group is officially reported to exceed 560,000.

The Farm Congress has rejected every effort to approve the Ford offer in its present form, holding it to be in violation of sound economic and conservation principles. The Farm Congress, including affiliated bodies and delegate feature, represents a very large number of farmers, possibly larger than any other group.

In the report filed by Senator NORRIS, in which the majority of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry reject all private bills for Muscle Shoals, the following is the general position taken:

Mr. Ford makes no guaranty of any kind to reduce the cost of fertilizer.

He does not pay the Government 4 per cent on its investment in the dams.

He does not repay the cost of the dams.

He actually repays nothing on this principal and pays a wholly inadequate rate of interest.

His offer will not reduce the price of electricity to the general consumer.

The Ford offer implies the greatest gift ever bestowed upon mortal man since salvation was made free to the human race.

Mr. Ford is between 60 and 70 years of age. If the Government should turn this property over to his corporation, it would probably be from four to six years before the dams would be completed, and by the time the corporation got into active operation Mr. Ford would be in the neighborhood of 70 years of age. It is quite evident, therefore, that his connection with Muscle Shoals would be but a small fraction of the time included in his bid of 100 years.

The Alabama Power Co. is willing to pay $2,500,000 for the Gorgas plant and the transmission lines. If the Ford corporation secured all the property at Muscle Shoals for $5,000,000, it could sell the Gorgas plant for $2,500,000. The personal property could be sold for another $2,500,000. Thus Ford could have, without cost to him, properties that cost the Government in excess of $80,000,000.

During the first six years Mr. Ford's interest payments will be less than one-half of 1 per cent on Dam No. 2. During the first three years the interest payments will be less than 1 per cent upon the cost of Dam No. 3.

Figuring all of the costs and all of the conditions of his offer, Mr. Ford will pay only 2.79 per cent upon the cost of Dams No. 2 and No. 3. The taxpayers will thus finance Mr. Ford's corporation for 100 years and receive less than 3 per cent upon the money so advanced. The Ford offer will cost the taxpayers more than $500,000 a year in interest charges alone.

The Ford proposal violates every provision of the Federal water power act.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HERSEY. I ask that the balance of the letter be inserted as an extension of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent that the balance of the letter be inserted in his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to give unanimous consent for any lecture of the House of Representatives on a public measure and I shall object to the letter being extended. It is a reflection upon the House.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman has that right. The right has been granted to all to extend. Let us have an understanding in regard to it. A Member does not have to have unanimous consent to extend his remarks on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has a right to extend his own remarks, but not the remarks of anyone else. These are statements by other parties.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Are not they his own remarks?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it does seem to me as we go along with the passage of this bill, which it is very plain is to be passed by the Democratic side of the House assisted by a few Republicans on our side, that we ought to give some careful attention to the provisions that will affect the Public Treasury. Now section 4 reads as follows:

SEC. 4. The company will further pay to the United States, during the period of the lease of Dam No. 2, $35,000 annually, in installments quarterly in advance, for repairs, maintenance, and operation of Dam No. 2, its gates and locks; it being understood that all necessary repairs, maintenance, and operation thereof shall be under the direction, care, and responsibility of the United States during the said 100-year lease period.

Now, that means that for the consideration of $35,000 a year the Government is to operate these locks and repair and maintain Dam No. 2 for a century. Now, let us look into that. There are two locks at Dam No. 2. Those two locks are 60 feet wide and 300 feet long. How many men will it take to operate them? The answer of the proponents of the bill is that the engineers say this is all the money they require, but I have had some experience with reference to water-power propositions and estimates of engineers. Let us apply our own common sense to this proposition. Can less than 5 men put a boat through a lock 60 feet wide and 300 feet long? And if there are two locks, will it not take 10 men, and will it not take three shifts of men, each shift working eight hours a day, making a total of 30 men; and can you employ 30 men to do the work for less than $35,000 a year? It will take the whole $35,000 to operate these locks, and you have not got a dime for maintenance and upkeep.

Mr. BLANTON. Or the gates.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Or the gates, or any expense necessary to the operation of the locks and the maintenance of the dam.

Now, we have a small water-power proposition out in Kansas and it had been there for years, and we thought it had a firm foundation. It was thought safe and to be a good buy, and the company bought it. When flood waters came, driftwood piled up on the dam and affected the foundation, and they had to spend $300,000 on that small proposition to replace the dam. What might happen at Muscle Shoals with a dam costing millions of dollars? Remember, this is not our money but the money of the taxpayers we are pledging, a proposition costing millions of dollars, and surely we ought to require that it be maintained properly and without expense to the Government. I hope that some of these amendments looking to the protection of the Public Treasury will be adopted.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I will.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I trust the gentleman understands that the maintenance of the lock is for the purposes of navigation——

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The Government is under obligation, as it is on other navigable rivers, to give these people and the people upon the upper Tennessee the benefits of navigation.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. But this places a charge upon the people, the taxpayers of the whole country.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. But this is the first instance. I will say to the gentleman, in all the history of river navigation where the Government is about to adopt an economic policy whereby the cost of the dam will be amortized in 100 years.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. But this bill purports to appropriate enough money, to be supplied by the Ford corporation, to cover the expense of operating the locks and maintaining the dams for 100 years, but it does not do so.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is the estimate of the engineers.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes; but the gentleman himself does not believe that $35,000 a year will cover the cost of the repairs and maintenance of the dams and the cost of the operation of the locks, and the gentleman would not believe it even if all the engineers in the United States were to say so.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it is perhaps illogical for me to speak at this time, because I desire to speak upon an amendment which I shall offer only in the event that the Burton amendment fails, but as this is the only opportunity I shall have, on account of the limitation of debate, I will proceed. I am in favor of the Burton amendment because, as to this particular section, it brings the bill in line with the provisions of the Federal water power act. I believe the Burton amendment should be adopted by this House. But in the event it should not be, I shall offer an amendment to this section which provides that in the event it is found that the sums provided for in this section are not sufficient to maintain the dam the Congress shall have the right to modify the section by appropriate legislation.

We are told by the advocates of this bill that Henry Ford intends to pay a sum sufficient to care for the repair, maintenance, and operation of the gates and locks of the dam. Now, if that is what is intended to be expressed by this section and if it is Mr. Ford's intention, then the Burton amendment will accomplish that very thing, and certainly no injustice will be done to Henry Ford. That amendment, in fairness to this Government and to the American taxpayer, ought to be adopted. But in the event it is not adopted I shall offer an amendment which will permit Congress to take such action as it may deem necessary in order to carry out what is claimed to be the agreement.

Mr. BURTNESS. In other words, the Burton amendment simply does what the proponents of the bill claim that $35,000 will do?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. That is my understanding.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is asked for.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 33, noes 74.

So the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. BURTON. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is asked for.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 48, noes 82.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WILLIAMSON: Page 4, line 4, at the end of section 4, add: "In the event that the sums provided for shall not prove sufficient for the purposes specified herein, Congress reserves the right to modify this section by appropriate legislation."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 38, noes 81.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. At all times during the period of the lease of Dam No. 2 the company will furnish to the United States free of charge, to be delivered at any point on the lock grounds designated by the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, electric power to an amount necessary for the operation of the locks, but not in excess of 200 horsepower.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland, a member of the committee, offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HILL of Maryland: Page 4, line 10, after the word "locks," strike out the words "but not in excess of 200 horsepower."

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, section 5 puts upon the Ford corporation the obligation of furnishing the amount of electric power "necessary" for the operation of the locks. It then puts a limitation on the amount. The two clauses are inconsistent. If the Ford corporation is obliged to furnish an amount necessary for the operation of the locks, it is entirely incompatible to put a limitation upon it. It is absurd to say that it should not be in excess of 200 horsepower. In the interest, then, of fairness to the Government, I suggest that those last words, "but not in excess of 200 horsepower," be eliminated. Let the Ford corporation furnish all the "amount necessary," as it purports to do.

There has been much talk of what the minority views of June 20, 1922, were. I therefore ask you to read that report carefully, as follows:

MUSCLE SHOALS PROPOSITION.

Mr. KEARNS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following minority views, to accompany H. R. 11903:

What shall be done with Muscle Shoals is one of the big questions that is now confronting Congress. There have been several proposals made through the Secretary of War for the purchase of the Government's interests and the lease of the water power at this place. Only one of these propositions is now before the House. This is the one that has been submitted by Mr. Henry Ford. This proposal on the part of Mr. Ford has received wide publicity. Seldom has any question pending before the American people been so broadly heralded as has this offer to take over the Government activities at Muscle Shoals. We feel that this publicity has grown into one of the most insidious propagandas that the Nation has witnessed for many a day. Notwithstanding the wide publicity that has been given to the Ford offer, we feel, because of the unfair and unreliable statements that have been sent broadcast throughout the United States, that the country little understands what it is that Mr. Ford is offering to do or what, if anything, he is offering for this great plant that has been erected at Government expense at Muscle Shoals, Ala. The people have a right to know and we are determined that they shall know the real facts about Muscle Shoals and the so-called Ford offer.

We are not satisfied with the report filed by the so-called majority membership of the House Military Affairs Committee. Neither are we in harmony with the views expressed by the Wright minority. Without undertaking to criticize adversely either of these documents, we feel that neither of them has given to the Congress or to the country a clear, fair, and unbiased statement of the facts.

TRUTH ABOUT FORD OFFER.

There are a great many men throughout the United States who are strong advocates of the Ford offer without having any true understanding of what his proposition contains. These men are honest and conscientious, but they have been misled as to facts. They have read this propaganda, much of which is false in its every detail, and they have been led to believe that Mr. Ford will manufacture fertilizer in such large quantities that it will compel the exorbitant prices that are now being asked for this much-needed commodity to fall materially. The persistent report is that he will compel the fertilizer manufacturers of the country to sell their product at one-half of what they are now selling it. This is a welcome message to the users of fertilizers and indeed would be worthy of the efforts of every man in Congress should this be accomplished. But Mr. Ford, in the contract that he submits to the Secretary of War, qualified by his statements and the testimony of his agents, does not agree to make fertilizers during entire lease period unless he can make them with profit to himself.

FERTILIZERS.

Mr. Ford has always refused to allow himself or his company to be bound without qualification to the continuous manufacture of fertilizer at Muscle Shoals, provided this plant is turned over to him. Secretary Weeks appeared before the Military Affairs Committee of the House, and the following testimony that is illuminating indeed upon the subject of fertilizer is taken from page 29 of the records of the hearings:

"Mr. WEEKS. I said to him [Mr. Ford]: 'Will you guarantee to continue to manufacture fertilizer during the life of the contract' [the 100-year period]? He replied that he would not.

* * * * * * *

"Mr. WEEKS. I said in effect: 'You might stop the manufacture of fertilizer in five years, or in any time, to the great disappointment of the people down there.' He said: 'Of course, I am going to stop if I can not manufacture it profitably.'"

Because of this frank admission and many kindred statements Secretary Weeks was entirely displeased with the language in the so-called fertilizer clause in the Ford offer. Later testimony in support of the fertilizer clause in last offer does not change his attitude.

Mr. Mayo, who represented Mr. Ford before the committee and who was Mr. Ford's accredited representative, on numerous occasions testified that the Ford company would not make fertilizer at Muscle Shoals if it were found to be unprofitable and what they mean by "unprofitable" no one knows. Surely the contract does not contain any specific clause that would render it an enforcible agreement to manufacture fertilizer. Mr. Ford has at all times steadfastly refused to bind his proposed company in the contract to make fertilizer if certain contingencies should happen. The contract does not give the Secretary of War, or any other agency of the Government, power to compel him to make fertilizer in all circumstances. Even if it develops that he can make fertilizer at a profit, then he only agrees to manufacture it at about the present annual capacity of nitrate plant No. 2. The proponents of the Ford offer who are scattering propaganda throughout the country that is often void of truth, gain support because they promise the farmer the much-needed fertilizer. The farmer often believes this and, of course, becomes at once a very partisan proponent of Mr. Ford.

We realize and appreciate that a great part of the farm lands of the United States is in great need of plant food, and Congress would be justified in departing from its old policies and traveling a long way to assist in getting fertilizers cheaply for the farmers. Our position is that this is a hollow promise made to enlist the support of the farmers and not absolutely binding on any fact contained in the contract or existing outside of the contract. These statements are made and sent broadcast throughout the country without regard to truth. The bold declaration is made that Mr. Ford will manufacture fertilizer at the Muscle Shoals plant and bring down the price one-half. Nothing is ever said that the principal business of Mr. Ford—should he get this gigantic plant—would be the manufacturing of other articles which he would be allowed to sell at any price that he might see fit. The only thing that is kept before the public is that he is to make fertilizer and sell it cheaply to the farmer, only charging for himself a profit of 8 per cent on the production. No one has ever suggested how he could make fertilizers and sell them cheaply or what means he would employ. The bold claim is made and Congress and the country must take the statement as absolute truth or be forever condemned by this crowd of wicked propagandists.

Of course the price of fertilizer to-day is high. So is the cost of shoes and clothing and plows and wagons and practically everything that the farmer buys, or anyone else buys. We are all hoping that in this aftermath of war business will soon get back to a firm and legitimate basis. These men do not only try to thus gain the sympathy of the farmer but they try to elicit the attention of the unemployed by painting a rosy picture of the great activity that is to be started overnight at Muscle Shoals where they promise a million men will be given employment. They say when this is in operation there can be no such condition in all this country as idleness, because they claim that Muscle Shoals will offer work at a high wage to everyone. This is very appealing and alluring, indeed, to the man who is out of work. They do not tell him how they are going to do this, but he is flattered by this promise into the belief that a new and better day is dawning for him. Many of these men, on the bare promise that a million men will be put to work as if by magic, have become Ford enthusiasts.

If this dream were true then Congress would not be justified in withholding from men with this magic power this project. But these statements that are made by these propagandists will not bear the calcium light of real publicity. These assertions will not stand up under the searching gaze of men endowed with real business acumen. This is why we prepare this report in order that the country may know the truth about Muscle Shoals. If we were believers in fables, or had faith to believe in the pranks of fairies, then we might also think that Mr. Ford is the reincarnation of Aladdin plus his lamp. But we can not have such childlike faith. We therefore view the entire proposition from a business standpoint, trying to do the thing that is best for the country.

If this company that is to be formed to take over Muscle Shoals is, indeed, in earnest about making fertilizers, why is it that Mr. Ford's representatives have always refused to accept a clause in the contract written by the members of the Military Affairs Committee that would make it binding upon him to make fertilizers in all circumstances whatever else he might do with the Muscle Shoals plant? Such a clause was three times prepared by the committee and it was three times rejected, and the proposal of Mr. Ford that is now before the House was written by his lawyers and contains no clause whatever that would compel his company throughout this 100-year period to manufacture fertilizer unconditionally.

HONESTY OF MR. FORD.

All agree that Mr. Ford is honest and that he has said he wants to make fertilizer, and some are willing to take him at his word, whether it is in the contract or not, but we can not help but remember that Mr. Ford is not endowed with a perpetual life, although some members of the Military Affairs Committee would give him this water-power lease in perpetuity. Mr. Ford can not live throughout any considerable part of the term of this water-power leasehold, and when he is gone and all the men that he may have surrounding him will have passed away we do not know in what unconscionable hands this plant will fall and neither does any man know who is living to-day.

HISTORY OF MUSCLE SHOALS.

When we got into war in 1917 two sites of lands were purchased near Sheffield, Ala., on each of which was constructed an immense nitrate plant. This nitrate was to be used in the manufacture of explosives. One of these tracts of land contains 1,900 acres and the other something over 2,000 acres of land. These two tracts were practically covered with expensive dwelling houses and immense steel and concrete buildings in which were installed the most expensive machinery. Railroad beds were constructed and tracks laid, many miles in all. Large and expensive steam railroad engines were purchased. Steel freight cars of the most costly character were built by the Government for these plants. Steel shovels, concrete mixers, and other machinery of this character that cost the Government many million dollars were purchased and are now at these nitrate plants. These plants are known as nitrate plant No. 1 and nitrate plant No. 2. They are on the bank of the Tennessee River near by Muscle Shoals. At nitrate plant No. 2 there is an immense steam power plant capable of generating 90,000 horsepower. At nitrate plant No. 1 there is a steam power plant that will develop 5,000 horsepower. Nitrate plant No. 1 cost the Government $12,887,941. The other plant cost the Government $66,252,393.

The War Department at that time also purchased what is known as the Waco Quarry in that immediate neighborhood. This includes nearly 500 acres of land upon which is constructed many miles of railroad. This quarry cost the Government $1,302,962. At this place is located a rock deposit that is very necessary in carrying on the activities that the Government had in mind at Muscle Shoals.

ALABAMA POWER CO.

The country at that time was in immediate need of power. The Alabama Power Co. had a steam power plant located at Gorgas on the Warrior River. As the interests of the Alabama Power Co. are vitally affected by this so-called Ford offer, a brief history of this concern is necessary to a perfect understanding of the question.

The Alabama Power Co. is a public-service corporation organized under the laws of Alabama, and in 1914 had five customers, consisting of two municipalities, one cotton mill, one brick plant, and one cement plant, according to the testimony of its president. But since that time it has increased its business to the extent that last year its plant had a connected load of 370,000 horsepower, with an electrical output of 500,000,000 kilowatt-hours annually. It furnishes light and power to 158 of the greatest industries of that section of the country. Its customers consist of brick and cement plants, coal mines, cotton mills, foundries and machine shops, ice plants, public utilities, steel plants, and many other factories of different kinds.

These industries, that are scattered throughout that section of the country, consume about 70 per cent of its power. This company furnishes light for lighting houses and streets and furnishes power for street railways. It supplies light for 63 municipalities and the power for practically every industry in these towns and cities. It has 18,500 direct subscribers for its light and power, and these companies in turn furnish 58,500 consumers with this service. These facts, gleaned from the testimony or hearings before the House and Senate committees, are set forth in this report in order that the Congress and the country may know of the extensive business that is being done by the Alabama Power Co. and the number of consumers that would be adversely affected should the so-called Ford offer be accepted. The Alabama Power Co. is a public-service corporation doing business for and in behalf of the people. The company to be organized by Mr. Ford would be a private company doing business for itself and uncontrolled and unhampered in any way by any utility commission, either State or Federal, except that if this company makes fertilizer it must make it at a profit not to exceed 8 per cent.

The Alabama Power Co. has invested in its business $40,000,000. Sixteen million dollars of this amount is represented in two dams that were built by this company on the Coosa River. One of them has long since been completed and the second is nearing completion at this time. The State of Alabama, in order to induce this company to build dams to create this hydroelectric power for the use of the people, absolved it from the payment of taxes on the cost of these dams for a period of 10 years. At the expiration of the 10-year period, of course the company will be compelled to pay taxes on the tax value of these dams. If this Muscle Shoals project is turned over to Mr. Ford he would not have to pay taxes on the cost of the dams at any time during his 100-year period. This is a big subsidy.

WARRIOR EXTENSION.

As we said before, when the project at Muscle Shoals was commenced by the Government it needed power. The agents of the Government commenced negotiations with the Alabama Power Co. to build an extension to the company's Gorgas steam plant and build transmission lines from this plant to Muscle Shoals, a distance of 88 miles. At that time the Alabama Power Co. was in great need of more power for itself, as its business had been growing rapidly. For this reason it had just prior to the commencing of these negotiations started the construction of an addition to its Gorgas steam plant. It had already built the foundations for this extension of its power plant and constructed its intakes and outlets for the water necessary in the operation of the plant. The agents of the Government entered into a contract with the Alabama Power Co., by the terms of which the United States was to complete this addition to the Gorgas plant. Acting under this contract, the Government did build this addition or extension on the foundations already constructed over these water intakes and outlets, and built these transmission lines on the lands of the Alabama Power Co. from Gorgas to Muscle Shoals, and the Government paid the cost of said transmission lines and Gorgas plant extension. The cost was $4,000,000. In this contract with the Alabama Power Co. it was agreed that when the Government was through with the plant and the transmission lines these holdings were to be sold to the Alabama Power Co. at "a fair value." Acting under its contract with the United States, the Alabama Power Co. has recently offered $2,500,000 for said property.

In view of the disgracefully low prices, that have often amounted to scandal, at which war properties have been sold, ranging from practically nothing to 10 and 12 per cent of the original cost, this price of $2,500,000 would seem to us to be one of the best bargains that the Government has ever been offered for any of its war property, and yet some men condemn this transaction as being unconscionable. Such men are greatly biased or else they do not comprehend or know the facts.

FORD OFFER.

We want the country to know that Mr. Ford offers to pay to the United States Government a million dollars per year for five years for all of this property we have just enumerated and the Government in turn is to give him a warranty deed for said holdings, with only two restrictions or conditions. One of these conditions, to wit, the manufacture of fertilizer under certain conditions, and the other condition is that he will keep nitrate plant No. 2 in a stand-by condition for the manufacture of nitrates in case of war, and to be turned over to the Government in that event. Of course, the Government could commandeer this plant in case of war, the same as it can take over any property that is needed in the prosecution of war when war is on. Therefore this part of the contract is surplusage.

This property, for which Mr. Ford offers this $5,000,000, as has already been stated, consists of:

Cost to Government:
Waco Quarry	$1,302,962
Gorgas steam plant	4,900,000
Nitrate plant No. 1	12,887,941
Nitrate plant No. 2	66,252,393
Total cost of Government without interest	85,343,296

The above table of figures does not include the interest on these huge sums that has accrued, which now amounts to many million dollars.

Five million dollars for $85,343,296 worth of property to us seems wholly inadequate when it is remembered that Mr. Ford could immediately dispose of the Gorgas plant to the Alabama Power Co. for $2,500,000. This would then leave him paying only $2,500,000 for the Waco Quarry, nitrate plants Nos. 1 and 2, with all their innumerable railroad engines and steam freight cars, steam shovels, concrete mixers, and other surplus property there, that could be readily sold for several additional millions. It would be seen, therefore, should this offer be accepted, that all of this vast amount of property will be given away and not a cent be realized by the Government.

OVERFLOW RIGHTS.

Out of this $5,000,000, too, Mr. Ford demands that the Government shall furnish to him the overflow rights at Dam No. 3, the cost of which has been estimated at from $1,500,000 to $2,000,000. So it can be readily seen that Mr. Ford has practically offered nothing for all this vast amount of property, but, on the other hand, has asked the Government to make him a warranty deed for it with the two provisos mentioned. This price, therefore, would seem wholly inadequate for the vast amount of property that he asks be turned over to him.

In view of all these facts, why should Congress be asked to take from the Alabama Power Co. its Gorgas plant, to which it is entitled under the contract, and turn it over to Mr. Ford? It will be remembered that the Alabama Power Co. needs this plant in order to serve its great clientele. It belongs to this company, it is built on the lands of the Alabama Power Co. as a part of its power plant, and the addition that the Government built is made a part of the original plant of the company, and there is no way to separate it. The Alabama Power Co. has always dealt fairly with the Government and is now offering $2,500,000 and possibly will pay $3,000,000 for the addition the Government built to the company's plant and on the company's land.

DAMS AND WATER POWER.

When nitrate plants No. 1 and No. 2 were being built the Government commenced the building of a dam at Muscle Shoals, known as No. 2 or the Wilson Dam. There has been expended by the Government on this project up to date $17,000,000. If the Ford offer is accepted, the Government will be required to complete the construction of this dam, together with its locks, power house, and the machinery equipment that will be necessary to the generation of 600,000 horsepower, at the people's expense and at an estimated cost to the Government of $25,000,000. The amount may be more; it may be less.

In order to accept the Ford offer Dam No. 3 must be constructed. It is located a few miles above Dam No. 2 on the Tennessee River. There has been no work done yet on this dam. Neither have the overflow rights been purchased by the Government. It is estimated that the construction of Dam No. 3, together with the necessary power house, locks, and generating machinery to develop 250,000 hydroelectric horsepower, would cost the Government an additional $25,000,000. This estimate does not include the cost of overflow rights. It is thought, too, by engineers that it will require about six years to complete Dam No. 2 and build Dam No. 3. He does not pay full interest until six years after completion of Dam No. 2 and three years after the completion of Dam No. 3. During the six years on Dam No. 2 he pays $200,000 per year and during the three years on Dam No. 3 he pays $160,000 per year. But this in comparison is practically nothing to the Government on account of these dams. He only commences to pay the full amount of interest, as above stated. Then he only agrees to pay 4 per cent interest on the cost of construction, which will be about $50,000,000. Therefore it will be seen that the Government in making these vast expenditures of money throughout this period will have lost in interest the enormous sum of $13,350,000. This amount represents the difference between the interest that will accrue in this time and the rental that Ford pays during these six years. In this one item the Government loses more than two and one-half times his $5,000,000 that he agrees to pay the Government. In other words, the Government is returning to Mr. Ford in this one item of interest his $5,000,000 and $8,350,000 besides.

We call the attention of the membership of the House and the country to the fact that Mr. Ford's offer only contemplates the payment of 4 per cent interest on the cost of completing Dam No. 2 and building Dam No. 3, taking no account whatever of the $17,000,000 that has already been spent on Dam No. 2. He is to get the use of this vast sum of money throughout the entire lease period of 100 years gratis.

FEDERAL WATER POWER ACT.

We desire to direct the attention of the House to the fact that only a short while ago the Congress of the United States passed a water power act that provided, among other things, that no lessee after the passage of said act could be given a water-power privilege in any of the waters of the United States for a lease period covering more than 50 years. The Federal water power act further provides that all lessees of water power shall be surrounded by certain governmental restrictions as set forth in said act. It even goes so far as to restrict the profits the lessee can make on whatever his product may be. It will be noticed that if Mr. Ford's offer is accepted he will be given a lease covering a period of 100 years, commencing from the day of the finishing of the work of said dams and said power houses and the installing of the machinery therein. He is restricted only in two things, namely, if he can make fertilizers at a profit he will not charge a benefit for himself to exceed 8 per cent per annum on the cost of production. It must, however, be remembered that this company is not to engage in the manufacture of fertilizer except as a side issue. The other restriction is that he shall keep nitrate plant No. 2 in a stand-by condition, ready to be turned over to the Government in case of war.

According to the statements of his own representatives, the manufacturing of fertilizer will be a small part of his activities there provided this gigantic plant is turned over to him. These representatives say that he will engage in the general manufacturing business and all through their testimony let it be remembered they say that he will only make fertilizer provided he finds it to be profitable to his concern. He will manufacture, perhaps, automobiles, surely parts for automobiles, plows, harrows, and other farm implements.

FORD NEVER APPEARED.

It will be noted that we have used the term "representatives." Mr. Ford never appeared before the Military Affairs Committee of either the House or Senate to throw the light on his offer to which the country is entitled. He was often invited to come, the entire membership of the Military Affairs Committee of the House joining in the invitation, but he never appeared at any time.

SUBSIDY FOR THE FORD CO.

From a reading of the Ford offer and the water power act it will be seen that Mr. Ford, if his contract is accepted, will be given privileges and rights that are to be denied to every other man or group of men in the United States. Just why he should be selected for these privileges or these rights that are not to be bestowed upon any other man or group of men is more than we can understand. It is not right and we believe that all fair minds will agree with us.

If this proposal is accepted, this company at Muscle Shoals will be given the use of two dams and power houses fully equipped for a period of 100 years, and it will only be required to pay as rental therefor 4 per cent on $50,000,000, although the dams will have cost the taxpayers $67,000,000. The company will not be required to pay anything on the use of $17,000,000 already invested at Dam No. 2. We have seen also that the Government will lose $85,252,393, besides an enormous amount of accumulated interest, when it turns over to Mr. Ford, Waco, Gorgas, and the two nitrate plants.

MAINTENANCE AND REPAIRS.

It is recognized in this proposal that these dams will need some repairs throughout this lease period of 100 years, because there is a clause in the proposition that proposes that the company shall pay to the United States Government $55,000 per annum to be used for repairs when necessary on either or both of Dams No. 2 and No. 3. It will be noticed that this company does not agree to pay for all repairs or rebuilding that may be necessary throughout the lease period provided these repairs exceed $55,000 per annum. All repairs or rebuilding in excess of that amount must be undertaken by the Government itself, although the Government gets no advantage therefrom. If heavy floods should come and wash away any part or all of these dams, or, if foundations should settle, cracking the cement work in the dams, regardless of how expensive, the Government agrees, if it accepts this proposal, to rebuild these locks and dams and repair them as the needs may arise from time to time throughout this 100-year lease period. Other companies are required to build dams at their own expense, and if they wash out repair them at their own expense. It seems to us that Mr. Ford is asking too much. It appears to our minds that his company at least could keep up the repairs on this property provided the Government builds his establishment, equips it for him, and turns it over to him or his company for a period of 100 years to be used by this company in any way it may see fit. If Mr. Ford's proposition is accepted, no one knows the amount of repairs that will be required to be made by the Government in the course of 100 years. But following in the light of experience, we are led to know that these repairs will amount to many million dollars. No man can say how many. Engineers who are well versed in this class of work universally agree that the minimum cost of repairs will be 1 per cent per annum of the original cost of construction, and the maximum cost will be 3 per cent of the cost of construction. If we take the minimum estimate of the cost of repairs, we will find that 1 per cent of $67,000,000 is $670,000. Therefore, this vast amount of money would be required in maintenance of these dams each year during the lease period. It will be remembered that Mr. Ford only agrees to pay $55,000 per annum of this amount. The Government will therefore lose, if only the minimum repairs are required, on maintenance alone $615,000 per annum. If the maximum amount is required, it will be just three times this amount per annum for 100 years.

FEDERAL LIABILITY.

It must be remembered that Mr. Ford does not own these dams, but he is given the use of them. Hence, if the dams should break the Government must stand not only the cost of rebuilding but must pay any damage that arises in consequence of the escape of this impounded water. If great loss of life and property should result thereby, Mr. Ford's company does not stand the loss, the Government would. How many millions or even billions this is going to amount to in the course of 100 years we do not know, and neither do you. We do know, however, that Mr. Ford has studiously guarded against making himself or company liable for any of these great sums of money.

TAX SUBSIDY.

Another item that should be mentioned in this connection is the matter of taxes. These dams that will have cost when finished the taxpayers of this country $67,000,000 will remain the property of the United States throughout the life of this lease. Therefore the company will be free of taxes on this gigantic outlay of money, to wit, $67,000,000 for all that time. Competing companies all this while will be required to build their own dams at enormous cost. They will be required to pay taxes on the taxable value of the dams. This is another subsidy that will be handed to this company provided this proposal is accepted.

$50,000,000 EXPENDITURE REQUIRED.

At the expense of repetition let us again impress upon the public mind that in order to accept the Ford proposition the taxpayers of this country must put up $50,000,000 additional money to complete the two dams. It is claimed by the proponents of the Ford offer that this $50,000,000, or practically that sum, will be returned to the Government at the end of 100 years.

FRENZIED FINANCE.

His scheme is this and we give it prominence because it is something new to the financial world:

He will agree to pay to the Secretary of War for the use of the Government, semiannually, during the lease period, the sum of $23,363 to be used in retiring at the end of 100 years the $50,000,000, the additional cost of the two dams. Let us analyze this a little further.

The total amount of annual payments for this purpose would be $46,726. This company would therefore pay in cash to the Government throughout the period of 100 years only $4,672,600. This offer about which you have all heard so much proposes that the Government shall accept these semiannual payments and at once invest them at 4 per cent interest and by compounding the interest and principal the $4,672,600 that the company will pay in cash will amount in 100 years to $49,071,935. This is indeed a very shrewd if not an entirely unique way of paying a debt of $50,000,000 with the comparatively insignificant sum of $4,672,600. If there should be a bad loan made, or anything at all should happen to the loan, the Government would then lose both its principal and interest. It will be noticed that the Ford company does not concern itself about the investment of these semiannual payments, but that small detail is left to the Government itself. If this should be done and precedent in governmental affairs should be followed, we are justified in the fear that it would require the creation of an extra bureau with an army of clerks to follow this Ford fund throughout this 100-year period.

If debts can be legally discharged in this way, it will be a happy and welcome revelation. We are only calling the attention of the House and the country to this scheme of frenzied finance in order to direct attention to the absurdities contained in this very remarkable document known as the Ford proposal for Muscle Shoals that has seemingly swept the unthinking class of our citizenship off its feet. We say again that many men have been "swept off their feet" by reason of this proposal, because they little understood the contents of this very remarkable document that Mr. Ford has submitted to the Congress of the United States through the Secretary of War.

Men everywhere who understand this proposition condemn it in unmistakable terms. The entire people will sometime know what is being attempted, and then the condemnation will be universal. This problem is of too great importance for us to allow ourselves to be persuaded by the unsound reasoning of theorists or the willfully false statements of paid propagandists. Therefore, we can not allow ourselves to be influenced by threats of dire punishment, political or otherwise, provided we do not follow the lead of men who are seeking to control for 100 years one of the great water-power sites of the East.

The problem is too big, and the results of a wrong solution are too far reaching and too vital to the entire country to permit such conduct upon our part.

When the country is already laboring under a heavy weight of taxes and Congress has assessed to the limit everything taxable, it would seem that this Ford company should itself raise this $50,000,000 needed in the completion of these two dams and not ask the already overburdened taxpayers to finance it to the extent of another $50,000,000. The taxpayers are now required to raise billions of dollars in order to pay the running expenses of the Government and they will revolt against raising this gigantic sum to place in the hands of a private corporation to carry on a private business for profit.

IF NOT FORD, WHAT THEN?

While we are only concerned at the moment with the Ford offer, yet briefly we want to suggest that it is our opinion that the Government ought to continue work on Dam No. 2, and the Army appropriation bill now in conference carries an appropriation of $7,500,000 for work to be done as a Government activity on Dam No. 2 for the year commencing July 1, 1922. This appropriation ought to be authorized. This work ought to go on. The Secretary of War should be authorized and directed to ask for further propositions for Muscle Shoals. Neither nitrate plants No. 1 or No. 2 should be sold. They cost the taxpayers of this country too much money. They ought to be leased, together with the hydroelectric power created by Dam No. 2, but this lease ought to be made under the Federal water power act. The Government would then have absolute authority and control over the lessees and their products. In this way no one man or set of men could have the entire benefit of this great project at that place. Then the Government could regulate the production of fertilizer on the part of the lessee or any other manufactured articles that the lessee would see fit to make.

Dam No. 3 is in no sense a part of the Muscle Shoals project, and there is no excuse for its construction. It has not been commenced and it ought not to be built.

RECAPITULATION.

The following is a recapitulation of the entire cost to the taxpayers of the United States of the Muscle Shoals project up to the present time:

1. Waco quarry, cost to Government	$1,302,962
2. Addition to Gorgas steam plant, cost to Government	4,900,000
3. Nitrate plant No. 2, cost to Government	66,252,393
4. Nitrate plant No. 1, cost to Government	12,887,941
5. Dam No. 2, cost already to Government	17,000,000
6. Dam No. 2, additional money required to complete	25,000,000
7. Dam No. 3, estimated cost to Government to build	25,000,000
8. Dam No. 3, overflow rights, estimated cost to Government (minimum)	1,500,000
9. Interest on new money required at Dams Nos. 2 and 3	18,320,000
Total cost to Government	167,163,296

JOHN M. MORIN.
HARRY C. RANSLEY.
JOHN PHILIP HILL.

I have already signed a dissenting report on the Muscle Shoals proposition but agree substantially with this one.

LOUIS A. FROTHINGHAM.

In general I agree with the conclusions expressed in this report.

THOMAS S. CRAGO.

I have already filed minority views as to Muscle Shoals, which are printed on pages 54 to 57 of the report, and come to the same conclusion.

RICHARD WAYNE PARKER.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. The amendment I offer is entirely fair. "Necessary" should mean "necessary" and not "200 horsepower." I hope you will adopt my pending amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I seriously doubt if this bill, providing for the acceptance of Henry Ford's offer for Muscle Shoals, could be amended in any way that would gain for it the approval and support of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL], the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], or those other gentlemen who seem to be attempting in every possible way to defeat the Ford offer.

They are not fooling Members of Congress. They may deceive a few people over the country, but we understand their tactics. They are merely playing the same old game they have played relative to this great project from the very beginning. When I first entered the House in 1921, I came here a few days before my term of service began, and one of the first debates I heard was on the question whether or not we would continue the appropriations for the completion of this great project, or whether we would "scrap" it, lose what money we had put into it, and abandon it for all time to come. I heard on the floor of the House at that time many of the same gentlemen who are to-day attacking the Ford offer from every angle, fighting the proposition for the completion of the dam. They denounced as worthless this great project, which they now say is too valuable to lease to Henry Ford, under what, I submit, is the best offer by far we have ever had or ever expect to get from any individual or any firm that is able to comply with its terms and guarantee that they will be carried out.

The appropriation was defeated, largely through the efforts and activities of some of the very gentlemen who are leading the fight against the Ford offer now. The work stopped, and it looked as if that great project was going to ruin. Months passed, and no one seemed willing to make us a bid on it. But suddenly there came, like a clap of thunder from a clear sky, this offer of Henry Ford's, which, if accepted, would mean more to that section of the country than any other measure that has passed this body for the last 100 years. It would perhaps mean more to our suffering agricultural interests than any other measure this Congress or any other Congress has ever passed.

When that offer was made, the friends of the proposition took heart. They saw that there was yet a chance to save this great power development from waste, and at the same time to do a wonderful service to the American people. But the power interests, and the fertilizer interests that have been fighting for the destruction of Muscle Shoals, or to get control of it, awoke to a realization of the fact that they were about to be defeated in their iniquitous designs. They got busy, and began to attempt to poison the public mind against the Ford offer in every insidious manner known to their crafty ingenuity. They have imposed upon practically every chamber of commerce in the South that would listen to them, sent speakers through that country, run paid advertisements camouflaged as news items, and resorted to every method imaginable to try to prejudice the people against the Ford offer. But their efforts have been in vain, so far as the South is concerned. The southern people, as well as their representatives in Congress, know that the acceptance of the Ford offer would be the best thing for all concerned.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that it is one of the few rays of hope that has been held out to the agricultural interests of this country during the last few years.

The wheat, corn, and cotton fields of the South, the West, and the North, as well as the East, are being depleted; the lands are being worn out, and the farmers are looking for some way to rehabilitate them. We are buying nitrate for fertilizers from Chile at about twice what it would cost if manufactured in the United States; we are paying the Chilean Government an export duty of $24,000,000 a year, and yet when this proposition comes up, when there is an opportunity for the development of this project, which will mean more to the agricultural interests of this country than any bill that has been passed by this Congress in years, we find the supposed friends of the farmers coming up here and mysteriously changing their minds overnight and opposing it from every angle. [Applause.]

It may not mean anything to the Power Trust when you tell them that the American farmers are paying $80,000,000 a year for Chilean nitrates to be used as fertilizer, and that $24,000,000 of that amount is paid as an export duty to the Chilean Government for the mere privilege of bringing it out of the country; it may not mean so much to the fertilizer interests so long as they reap their profits; but it means a great deal to the American farmers who have these great burdens to bear, as well as to all the other people in the agricultural States whose prosperity depends on the prosperity of those who till the soil. And when they realize that the Ford offer proposes to manufacture fixed nitrates to the amount of 40,000 tons a year, or about 40 per cent of the amount we have been importing from Chile, to be sold to the farmers of this country for a profit not exceeding 8 per cent on the cost of production, thereby furnishing this material to our farmers at a price they can afford to pay—when they understand these facts they are going to resent the attitude of those pretended friends of the farmers who are opposing this measure and will manifest their resentment in no uncertain terms. [Applause.]

But they tell you that Ford will not distribute any power. If the power interests knew that he would not distribute this power, they would withdraw their objections at once. They are afraid he will distribute this power and force the Alabama Power Co. and other competitors to reduce their rates and give the people of that section of the country some of the benefits derived from our southern resources.

Gentlemen, I live within 75 miles of Muscle Shoals. Every foot of the district I represent is within less than 200 miles of that place. I have tried to estimate the great benefits that would come to those people as a result of the acceptance of the Ford offer, and the more I study the proposition the more thoroughly I become convinced that it would be the greatest economic benefit they have ever known.

Mr. Ford says that he would run his wires 200 miles in every direction, transmit this surplus power, and develop the industrial interests of the country. No wonder the Alabama Power Co. does not want such competition.

Let us vote down the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL] and pass this bill accepting the Ford offer. By doing so we will dispose of this much-mooted question in the most profitable way. We will render it possible for the American farmers to get cheap fertilizer of the very best variety with which to build up their worn-out lands; we will be planting industries in our Southland that will furnish work for the unemployed at living wages; we will be maintaining this great plant to be used by the Government for the manufacture of explosives should our country again become involved in war; we will make it possible for Mr. Ford to build up that country for hundreds of miles around, bringing to those people an era of prosperity possibly greater than any they have ever enjoyed. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HILL of Maryland) there were—ayes 22, noes 74.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] is recognized.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I am going to take five minutes of the time of this committee which, I think, will be the last time I shall take from it on this bill, and I have spoken only once before.

A great deal has been said about this being a gratuity to Ford and about the people getting nothing from it.

I have contracted to pay and I will pay—if I can borrow the money—within the next few weeks, $51 a ton for 12 per cent nitrate to use on cotton this year—$51 at the ports. That is 12 per cent nitrate. Multiply that by 8 and it would be a little over $400 if we got fixed nitrates such as are provided for without the filler. There were 2,600,000 acres of cotton in South Carolina last year. Last year the average of nitrates was 200 pounds to the acre, or an average of 10 acres to a ton of nitrates. In other words, 260,000 tons last year cost the farmers of South Carolina at that price—and a great many of them had to pay more, as some of it was higher last year—$1,560,000. If this process is put into effect it will cost them just about half that, and that will be a clear saving to the people of South Carolina.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Will the gentleman tell us what reason he has for believing we will get it for half?

Mr. STEVENSON. Because that is the statement made by everybody called as an expert, experts called on both sides; they say it will cost about half as much to produce it as the cost of production at the present time.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Will the gentleman tell us all about that?

Mr. STEVENSON. I am not a chemist.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. No; I will not yield any more. I want to make some statements here, and I will not yield any further. A vast quantity of nitrates is used on cotton in the United States, to say nothing of the amount that is used on corn and grain, and it is even more valuable on corn and oats than it is on cotton. About 18,000,000 acres were in cotton in the region where fertilizers were used.

Now, take 200 pounds to the acre. How much will that amount to? It amounts to 1,800,000 tons. If you buy that at $51 a ton, it amounts to $10,800,000 at the present figure of $51 a ton. If you can cut that in two, you will save the cotton farmers—and the grain farmers use almost as much as cotton farmers, and they will be using more as time goes on—$5,400,000 in one year. You will save that much to the cotton farmers of the South annually, and you will save an equal amount to the others.

You capitalize that at 6 per cent, and you will save the cotton farmers alone the interest on $90,000,000 annually. You are thereby getting that sum for the plant on that one item. Yet it is said nothing is to be gained from the Ford offer but that it is a gratuity. Gentlemen make all of these claims, but they say nothing about the actual saving to the cotton farmers, to the grain farmers, to the truck farmers, and other farmers.

It is said that 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen is the total amount provided for in the bill and that will not help the farmers to any extent. But you must remember that means 40,000 tons of pure nitrate, while the stuff we buy is 12 per cent nitrate. Multiply that 40,000 tons by 8, and you have 320,000 tons of the stuff we buy and for which we pay $50 and more a ton.

Whenever you fix it so you can save the agricultural people of this country the interest on from $90,000,000 to $180,000,000 a year you are not giving any gratuity to anybody; you are getting value received for the benefit of the bone and sinew of this country, which is the mudsill of all creation, as the gentleman from Kansas would say; and while he could not get a good foundation for a dam out in Kansas, it will be a mighty good foundation for a political party and for a politician when he runs in an agricultural district.

Mr. KEARNS and Mr. McKENZIE rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] is recognized.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I respectfully suggest that there is not anything before the House, and I will ask my friend from Ohio to wait until we read the next section.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment. On page 4, line 10, strike out the word "two" and insert "nine."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. LAGUARDIA: On page 4, line 10, strike out the word "two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "nine."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I desire to point out that in limiting the amount of power to operate these locks you are also giving Mr. Ford the control of navigation on this river. The gentleman who just had the floor referred to the improved methods of manufacturing fertilizer. Permit me to call your attention to the testimony of Dr. Louis C. Jones, the greatest authority on nitrates in this country. When he was before the committee the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] stated to him:

It is not a question of the best method of producing fertilizer, or whether there will be improvements in the various methods now known, but it is simply a question of disposing of a tract or a site of governmental property * * *.

That was the attitude of the gentleman from Illinois, and it is found on page 144 of the hearings.

Let me for a moment call the attention of my colleagues from the State of Alabama to the fact that on the 26th of January, 1924, the mayor of Mobile, Ala., R. V. Taylor, appeared before the committee, and this is what he said:

The distinguished chairman of this great committee—

Referring to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House—was reported in a dispatch published in a paper the day I left Mobile which said he had addressed a public inquiry to Mr. W. B. Mayo, as representing Mr. Ford, and asked him what Mr. Ford would do with this power if he got control of Muscle Shoals, and Mr. Mayo said, "He would use all of it for his own industrial plants." Therefore—

Says the mayor of Mobile, Ala.—

I say that Mr. Ford wishes to harness the falling waters of the Tennessee River for his own purposes and not disseminate some of it to the people generally.

And this is from the mayor of Mobile.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. This gentleman, whose testimony you are now reading, is the same gentleman who wanted all of this power transmitted down to Mobile, is he not?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, no; the mayor said, "I hold no brief for the Alabama Power Co. or any of its associated companies." That is from the mayor of Mobile.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Will the gentleman yield? They held a referendum vote on that question in Mobile after this mayor came up here, and 16 votes out of about 4,016 were with the mayor and about 4,000 were against the mayor.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Well, he is your mayor; he is not mine.

Mr. ALLGOOD. He is not mine.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. But he is your witness and not ours. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. JEFFERS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, on Wednesday, the 5th, in his able and comprehensive speech here on the floor of the House the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES], a member of the committee which has had the Muscle Shoals propositions under consideration, paid his respects in no uncertain terms to the minority report of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] and the associates of Mr. HULL who signed the minority report with him, styling the minority report the report of the power companies.

In part, Mr. JAMES said:

My guess is that the report was written by Thomas W. Martin, president of the Alabama Power Co. International financiers, through the Alabama Power Co., are attempting to get a grip on Muscle Shoals. This is not a fight between Members of Congress as to the future of Muscle Shoals but a fight between the power and fertilizer trusts and those who believe in furnishing the farmers cheap fertilizer and in being prepared to manufacture nitrates for explosives in time of war.

This quotation is from the New York Times of March 6, 1924.

Then, on yesterday, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL] stated that at the end of the last Congress the views of the minority were expressed in a very able report by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEARNS]. Now, that Kearns report referred to by Mr. HILL goes after the Ford proposal very sharply. But it may be illuminating and explanatory for Members of the House to know that the Kearns report, dated June 20, 1922, was circulated all over Alabama by the Alabama Power Co., sent out from the office of the Alabama Power Co., at Birmingham, Ala., under date of July 8, 1922. The Alabama Power Co. distributed the Kearns report because it stated the position of the Alabama Power Co.

Now our friend from Maryland [Mr. HILL] states that the Kearns report of 1922 represented the views of the minority at that time, and he further stated on yesterday that the views of the present minority are practically the same to-day.

Now, we know that the minority report of 1922—the Kearns report—did state the position of the Alabama Power Co., because the Alabama Power Co. itself, over the signature of R. A. Mitchell, vice president, saw fit to circularize the State with that Kearns report. The significance of that needs no further comment.

Now comes the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL], a member of the committee, who signed the Kearns report in 1922, and who also signed this present minority report of 1924, and he states that the minority views as expressed in the Kearns report, which was distributed by the Alabama Power Co., are practically the same as the views of the minority who signed this present 1924 minority report.

That connection, my friends, verifies and substantiates the statements made here a few days ago by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES], which I have just quoted, to the effect that the present minority report, signed by Mr. HULL and others, may well be considered as a report defining the views and the position of the Alabama Power Co.

Upon different occasions heretofore I have been permitted to express myself here in the House regarding the adoption by Congress of a policy relative to the great development at Muscle Shoals.

I am not desirous of speaking at any length upon the subject at this time, as the members of the committee who have had the subject under consideration have presented all necessary figures and detailed statements covering various phases of the proposition.

The matter has been before Congress for a long time. It has been given thorough study and very, very careful consideration by the committee. A great many individual Members of Congress have done all that they could to press for action. I am glad that the matter is at last before the Congress, and I trust that Congress will without further delay adopt a definite plan and policy regarding the disposition and development of the great governmental project at Muscle Shoals.

Nearly two years ago I stated here that I was in favor of the approval by Congress of the contract between the United States Government and Henry Ford. I feel the same way about it now. I stated then that I believed that, if given a chance to express itself on the Ford proposal, the House would go on record as favoring its approval. I believe that the House in now about to go on record in that way, and I am glad that the House at last has that opportunity before it.

In this short time which I have to address the House I wish to emphasize one particular point. This phase of the matter appeals to me very strongly.

I believe that it is undeniable that the Ford offer has been all the time since it was first presented and is now the only comprehensive and all-inclusive offer that has yet been made to the Government. Other proposals that have been made would split the great project by means of separate offers for the water-power project and for the nitrate plants. In my opinion, it would be a very serious and fatal mistake to split the project. The first and foremost and primary objects of power development at Muscle Shoals are that we may have a supply of nitrogen for national defense in time of war and nitrates for fertilizers in peace time, and it appears to me that the nitrate plants should certainly be linked inseparably with the water-power development under some one reliable contract, because the power development there on the Tennessee River is primarily intended for the operation of the nitrate plants and should not be separated from the nitrate plants by the leasing of the water-power project under a separate contract than that which would cover the nitrate plants.

I believe this is a fundamental principle in connection with this great question, and it is what was intended by the national defense act, under which all of this great project was created and started.

The Ford proposal aims to carry out the real purposes of the Muscle Shoals project, and I think it is the safest proposal before Congress looking to national protection in time of any trouble and a source of nitrates for fertilizer for our farmers in time of peace.

As the only comprehensive and all-embracing proposal before Congress, the Henry Ford offer is more desirable and would undoubtedly be a better business deal for the Government than any piecemeal or combination proposals submitted by different interests with separate responsibilities to cover separate parts of the project at Muscle Shoals. [Applause.]

The farmers of every agricultural section of the United States have told us in unmistakable terms that they are in favor of the approval of a contract with Henry Ford. As for the farmers in my part of the country, and as for the whole people of the entire South, I believe that it could be said in all fairness that a large majority of the people of my country want Congress to make a deal on this proposition with Henry Ford without further delay.

They believe that the great power, fertilizer, and aluminum interests are bringing their influence to bear upon Congress to prevent its acceptance of the Ford proposal.

Will Congress ignore the prayer of the people and give way to the powerful pressure of the influence of the Fertilizer Trust, Aluminum Trust, and power monopoly? I believe not. I hope and believe that Congress will act favorably upon this reliable and responsible offer which has been before us for such a long time and which has received such careful consideration at the hands of a great committee of this House.

I think the Government should not delay further about this matter. Using the language of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee of this House, Mr. MADDEN, of Illinois, I will say that I feel and believe that it would be the wise course to accept Mr. Ford's offer, put only enough additional money in the venture to complete both dams, and sell and lease under the terms that he has proposed. My conviction is that we should accept the Ford offer and get the Government out of the business. I feel that by so doing we will have acted so as to better provide for the common defense and for the promotion of the general welfare. [Applause.]

I am for this McKenzie bill which embraces the Ford proposal. [Applause.]

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and all amendments to this section do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. As soon as the release of suitable construction equipment and labor forces at Dam No. 2 will permit, or at an earlier date if desired by the company, the company shall construct and complete, subject to the approval of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, for the United States, Dam No. 3, its lock, power house, and all necessary equipment, all in accordance with plans and specifications prepared and to be prepared by the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, or by the company, at its option, and approved by the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, and progressively install the hydro-electric equipment in said power house adequate for generating approximately 250,000 horsepower, all the work aforesaid to be performed as speedily as possible at actual cost and without profit to the company, it being understood that the necessary lands, flowage rights, and rights of way shall be acquired by the United States through an agent to be named by the company.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, Mr. KEARNS, and Mr. SPROUL of Kansas rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEARNS] is recognized.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Is there an amendment pending?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not heard of any.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

In June, 1922, I spent several days in the preparation of the report to which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. JEFFERS] has just made reference, and I want to say here that neither Tom Martin nor any other member of any power company or any other company helped to write that report. I do not know whether the Alabama Power Co. circulated that report throughout that section of the State or not and I do not care. The gentleman says many thousands were sent into that State. I know that every word contained in that report is my language and my thought on this subject. Men get up here on the floor of this House and in order to create a prejudice in the minds of the country will refer to the insidious influences of trusts, and for no honest purpose do they make that statement but for the single purpose of creating prejudice in the minds not only of the membership of this House but the entire country.

I oppose the Ford offer because I do not believe it safeguards in one single instance the rights of the American people. I would like to be able to vote for this offer. The fertilizer clause is not binding and I want to compel the manufacture of fertilizer. I would like for Mr. Ford to get this great project down there. I would like for the Begg amendment to be written into this bill, because it makes the manufacturing of fertilizer mandatory. I would like to have seen the Burton amendment, which has just been voted down by this House, adopted, because it safeguarded the interests of the United States. The proponents of this bill say that $35,000 per annum will take care of the repairs to Dam No. 2. Then if it will, why do they object to writing that into the law? I think it will cost as much as $600,000 per year for repairs, but if the Ford people and his proponents say it will cost only $35,000 then why did they unanimously vote down the Burton amendment? These are some of the reasons I object to this proposal. I also object to this proposal because Henry Ford's representatives told us that he did not intend to sell one kilowatt of electricity to the inhabitants of that country. As I have said on prior occasions, I believe that Muscle Shoals is God's great gift to the inhabitants of that section of the United States. Personally, this sale of power or refusal to sell it is of no personal concern to me, but we ought not to legislate under false pretenses.

If you write in here, as I said in the report back in 1922, that that company must sell electricity to inhabitants of that country, then the bill has merit. Why not write it into the bill if you say that is what he is going to do? It seems to me the membership of this House is willing to-day to barter away the rights of the people in order that Henry Ford and his company which he is to form shall benefit and be benefited for 100 years, beyond the reach of the power of this great Government. These are some of the reasons I object to the bill. Before I leave the floor—and this may be the last time I shall occupy it on this bill—I want to say again with emphasis, because of the statements that have been made here, that Tom Martin nor any other man outside of this House ever made one suggestion as to what should go into this report. [Applause.] No man with truth can say so. [Applause.] My chief wish, however, is that before we quit this bill must contain a clause that will make the manufacturing of fertilizer mandatory. That is the expectation of the farmers.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have no quarrel with any Member upon the floor of this House that is opposed fundamentally to the Ford offer. I have no quarrel with any Member upon the floor of this House if he believes in his heart in Government ownership and control of Muscle Shoals and putting the Government into the business of the manufacture of fertilizer. If that is his conviction, I have no quarrel with him. But if you are going to consider the Ford proposition that is before you sincerely and conscientiously as lawyers, as most of you are, you know that this is a proposition made to the Government by Henry Ford which you must vote up or vote down. Amendments changing the contract fundamentally will destroy it; when you do that and Mr. Ford rejects it, which he has a right to do and which he has said he would do, where are you?

I want to reply to a remark made by my friend from Kansas in regard to the political aspect of this matter. He referred to the fact that a few Republicans and a good many Democrats seemed to be for the bill. If I wanted an excuse to vote against the Ford proposition as a party question I have all the evidence at hand to do it. I say if I wanted to change my position on the Ford proposition I would not have anything to do but to read President Calvin Coolidge's message to this Congress indorsing the taking over of Muscle Shoals by Ford, and would have nothing further to do than to read Ford's indorsement of Coolidge for President immediately following the message. That would be all the political thunder I should want if I wanted to change my position on this proposition. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I want to say to the gentleman from Kansas that when Henry Ford came out for Calvin Coolidge for President he got him more votes in the United States than all the fertilizer trusts or all the automobile trusts or every other trust and combine that is fighting this proposition.

Mr. Chairman, I am for this proposition because I confidently believe it means much cheaper fertilizer for the farmers of our country, and the fact that the company Ford is to organize will maintain in stand-by condition plant No. 2 for 100 years at an estimated cost of $200,000 per annum for the manufacture of nitrates in time of war is benefit inuring to the Government of vast importance.

I am not so much concerned about the water-power end of it, because it has been fully demonstrated during this debate that there is now developed in that section of the country ample water power with even greater developments now going on. I want to say to the House that the fear that has been expressed here that Henry Ford will sell power is not because they think that if he does sell the power he will sell it higher than all the allied power companies, but they fear he will sell it lower. [Applause.] The Alabama Power Co. had no objection to Mr. Ford two years ago having this proposition if they could only have the Gorgas steam plant.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I said on yesterday that I was opposed to any material, fundamental amendments that would be offered to this bill. I do not think that those who are opposed to the legislation ought to kill it by legislation. This proposal is based on an offer of contract by Henry Ford, and we should accept it or reject it. If we are for it, we ought to vote for it; and if we are against it, we have the privilege and right to vote against it. Therefore I repeat that I do not believe that any material or fundamental amendments which may be offered to the legislation and which may result in its defeat ought to be accepted by its friends.

I want to refer briefly to a statement made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] on yesterday. As I recall, the gentleman stated in response to a question that the more he studied this big question the more nearly he was coming to the idea that no private individual or company ought to control it, leaving, therefore, the inference that he was coming to the opinion that the Government ought to maintain and operate it. I may say that I am much gratified to see the gentleman from Iowa in the process of one of his changes on this proposition, because, if you recollect, two years ago he was for the Ford offer; then he became favorable to the offer of the associated power companies and offered a bill carrying their contract, and now he has about come to the idea that Government ownership is really the best, and he thinks the people want it. The people of all communities form opinions through somewhat the same mental processes. The people of the South are like the people of the North on many matters, and the people of the East are like the people of the West, and they usually come to conclusions by the same sort of mental processes. I want to show you what the people of the South in the immediate proximity of this great power think of the question of the associated powers controlling it and also the question of Government ownership. I hold in my hand a telegram from Maj. E. B. Stahlman, owner and publisher of one of the greatest newspapers in the entire South, which has been taking a referendum of the citizens in Nashville and surrounding towns relative to the disposition of Muscle Shoals.

I received this telegram yesterday. It reads:

NASHVILLE, TENN., March 7, 1924.

Hon. JOSEPH W. BYRNS, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

Vote counted up to 11 o'clock in the Banner's referendum stands: Ford, 27,900; associated power companies, 38; Government ownership, 10. People deeply aroused, with a unanimity of sentiment never before seen in the history of Tennessee on any question. May God help you and the Tennessee delegation to save Muscle Shoals to the people of this country.

E. B. STAHLMAN.

[Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, that is expressive of the sentiments of the South with reference to the disposition of Muscle Shoals. That is also an answer to my friend from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] and other gentlemen who in their opposition to this proposition have expressed solicitude lest the South should not receive the benefit of the distribution of the power. Those people live there. If power is distributed, they will get the benefit; but they know what it means if that power shall be given over to the associated power companies of the South, who through these years have been standing by hoping to get this power. They do not want this Congress to create a monopoly in the South with reference to water power. They are willing to trust Henry Ford. They are willing to trust him to carry out the contract. They know, and they believe, that he will do what he says he will do with reference to fertilizer and all these other promises and agreements that he makes with reference to running power lines 200 miles. They are opposed to Government ownership, because they believe that Henry Ford in taking over that power will develop it in the interest of the public of the entire country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. HERSEY rose.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I shall not object to the gentleman from Maine proceeding for five minutes, but I shall object to any further debate without something being before the House.

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk read in my time the balance of the letter that I sent to the Clerk's desk this morning.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is not in order. The gentleman can not even read it in his own time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas objects.

Mr. HERSEY. Then I shall read it myself.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I object to the gentleman reading it in his own time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas objects to the gentleman from Maine reading it in his own time.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SPROUL of Kansas: Page 5, lines 3 and 4, after the word "States" in line 3, strike out the words "through an agent to be named by the company."

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am in a quandary to know just why we are deliberating upon this bill. We have been advised by the members of the committee that we are to accept this bill in its entirety or not accept it at all. The statements can not mean anything other than that Mr. Ford himself has prepared this bill and submitted it to us to accept as drawn by him or to repudiate it.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. No; I can not. Those of us who have been business men and those of us who have been attorneys practicing law know that it is not customary for one party to be authorized to name the agent of the other party in carrying out the terms of a contract. Beginning with the word "it," in the first line on page 5, we find the following language:

it being understood that the necessary lands, flowage rights, and rights of way shall be acquired by the United States through an agent to be named by the company.

I submit that it is an insult to ask us to vote for that. But you say, "Swallow it." You tell us to submit ourselves to this mighty man who is brainier and wiser and bigger and greater than even the whole United States.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman looks at me. Will he yield?

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. The gentleman is a member of the committee?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; I am not.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. The gentleman is a prominent lawyer, and yet he says that this bill should not be amended.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. Not at this time. It seems to me that if Mr. Ford is to be permitted to name all of the terms of this contract, and we are to be forced to accept them just as he names them, then we cease to be a legislative body; we cease to be the United States. The big man in this country is Mr. Ford, a man who is bigger than our country. We admit by allowing him to tell us what to do that we do not know anything. We do not even know enough to name our own agent, our own representative, and the proponents of the bill, so called, must swallow that.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. HOCH. Does the gentleman have any estimate of the cost of this land and the flowage rights and the rights of way which are to be bought and paid for by the United States and which are to be bought through an agency of the company?

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. I do not.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is correct. Our friends say that we have to vote this bill up or down. A contract is a meeting of the minds of the two contracting parties. If this proposition does not suit us, what is wrong in our sending back to Mr. Ford a proposition that does suit us, and then if that suits him let him accept. It seems to me that even though we may be opposed to this bill, opposed to this proposition, opposed to dealing with Mr. Ford, that as the representatives of this Government it is our duty to see that the Government is given a fair, square kind of a contract.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SPROUL of Kansas) there were—ayes 31, noes 73.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HILL of Maryland: Page 5, line 1, after the word "company," insert "or any other person or corporation."

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, the latter portion of section 6 now provides that the work on Dam No. 2 shall be constructed by the Ford Co., and then we find the following language:

all the work aforesaid to be performed as speedily as possible at actual cost without profit to the company.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] yesterday offered an amendment in reference to the second paragraph of the McKenzie bill making it impossible for any subcontractor to make a profit. After the defeat of that amendment I offered a similar amendment to that I now offer to this section, which appears on page 3780 of the RECORD.

We are told that there will be no profit to those Ford interests making this construction for which the people of the Nation are to pay, and for which the consumers of fertilizers must ultimately pay in the total cost on which the 8 per cent profit may be made by the Ford corporation. If the Ford interests are entirely sincere and serious in their desire to make this construction without any profit to the company they should be glad of the opportunity to make it perfectly clear in the fundamental law that there can be no profit to any particular company as a subcontractor.

I wish to say one more word in reference to the remarks of my friends and colleagues, Mr. RANKIN and Mr. JEFFERS, and I desire to call their attention to the minority report of two years ago, which on page 12 says:

The Army appropriation now in conference carries an appropriation of $7,500,000 for work to be done and Government activity on Dam No. 2 for the year commencing July 1, 1922. This appropriation ought to be authorized.

We who opposed the Ford offer two years ago and who oppose it now were in favor of the continuance of this work two years ago, and I speak of that because gentlemen seem to indicate that we are not. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 3, after the word "agent," strike out the remainder of line 3 and all of line 4.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That has already been voted on.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, from the very beginning or, at least, from the time that Mr. Ford's offer was first made to the country I have been disposed to favor the acceptance thereof. I do not claim I have made any profound study of this proposition, but during the past week I have given it as careful attention as I have been able to do, and while at times I have felt I ought to change my mind, yet to-day I still feel that the Ford offer is the best proposition before us and that it is probably advisable for the country to accept it. In arriving at that conclusion, I feel that the water-power feature of it is not the one of primary importance, but rather that feature which deals with the national defense. I feel that it is cheap insurance for the country to have the corporation that will be formed to maintain in proper stand-by condition a plant that can be immediately utilized for the manufacture of explosives in time of war. I regard the fertilizer feature as second in order of importance, and I regard the water-power feature as third in such order. In other words, in accordance with the original intent of the Government, this resource should be used for the protection of our Nation in time of war and harnessed for the benefit of agriculture and incidentally to all others in time of peace.

Frankly, I do not like the idea of granting the use of the water power to anyone for a period of 100 years. I should much prefer a compliance with the general provisions of the water power act. But let me say this: If anyone will be adversely affected by this acceptance, in so far as the power feature is concerned, then it is particularly the people in that section of the country. I find, however, unanimous sentiment for the hundred years among Representatives from such communities, and when they do not see any danger in granting these rights for 100 years I am willing to yield in so far as my judgment is concerned and vote for the bill, even though you rejected the amendment for which I voted to limit the time to 50 years.

But, gentlemen, this is the particular point I want to draw to your attention at this time. I can not help but feel disgusted, or at least disappointed, with the procedure in the House this afternoon in considering this bill, in passing upon the different amendments proposed to this bill, you have voted down one by one these amendments regardless of their merits. You have, in fact, blindly refused to consider them upon their merits. I regret to say that if you take this bill and read it from the beginning to the end it seems to me every unprejudiced person must form the conclusion that, in so far as details are concerned, in so far as technicalities are concerned, every technicality has been written in here in favor of the Ford company and against the Government. That situation could have been remedied with honest consideration, but you have proceeded to turn down amendments here, such as the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] to section 4 of the bill, which simply would have assured to the country by way of reimbursement for cost of repairs, maintenance, and operation the full amount thereof, the very thing which the proponents of this bill say is already contained in the bill, and you retain a limitation of $35,000 to be paid by the company, allowing the taxpayers of the country to hold the bag for any difference. You turned down an amendment proposed by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL] to change section 5 of the bill, which would have struck out in the same way the limitation upon the power to be furnished by the company for the operation of the locks, absolutely no justification for such action. The limitation in the bill technically protects the Ford company and not the people of the country. You turned down the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SPROUL], which is similar in substance, it is true, to the amendment which I have just now proposed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURTNESS. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. BURTNESS. Under the right of general extension granted, I desire simply to add that if such tactics are persisted in, you may find many voting against the bill who are in favor of its general purposes but who deem it proper to protect the interests of the American people. I shall watch with interest your action on amendments, perfectly proper, to be submitted later to insure the manufacture of fertilizer as well as to protect the people against unfair or extortionate charges for power. I hope you will not force us to hold our nose when we vote for the bill.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MAPES, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 518, the Muscle Shoals bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE TO SIT DURING THE SESSIONS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary may meet during the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary may meet during the sessions of the House. Is there objection?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, that is a temporary request and not a permanent request?

Mr. DYER. I think it is probably only temporary.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

MUSCLE SHOALS.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 518, the Muscle Shoals bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 518, with Mr. MAPES in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 518, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 518) to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to sell to Henry Ford nitrate plant No. 1, at Sheffield, Ala.; nitrate plant No. 2, at Muscle Shoals, Ala., Waco Quarry, near Russellville, Ala.; and to lease to the corporation to be incorporated by him Dam No. 2 and Dam No. 3 (as designated in H. Doc. 1262, 64th Cong., 1st sess.), including power stations when constructed as provided herein, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 5, line 4, after the word "company," insert: "It is understood and agreed that all labor employed in the construction and completion of the work herein provided for shall not work more than eight hours a day."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I would like to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I withdraw it, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. The company will lease from the United States Dam No. 3, its power house, and all of its hydroelectric and operating appurtenances, except the lock, together with all lands and buildings owned or to be acquired by the United States connected with or adjacent to either end of the said dam, for a period equal to the lease term of Dam No. 2 and its hydroelectric power equipment thereat as stated in paragraph 3 hereof, in order that said respective lease terms of the two dams and the hydroelectric equipment thereat shall expire at the same time, the said period to begin from the date when structures and equipment of a capacity of 80,000 horsepower are constructed and installed and ready for service, and will pay to the United States as annual rental therefor 4 per cent of the actual cost of acquiring lands and flowage rights, and of constructing the lock, dam, and power-house facilities, payable annually at the end of each lease year, except that during and for the first three years of the lease period the rentals shall be in the following amounts and payable at the following times, to wit: One hundred and sixty thousand dollars one year from the date when 80,000 horsepower is installed and ready for service, and thereafter $160,000 annually at the end of each year for two years. Dams Nos. 2 and 3 shall be included in the lease.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOCH: At the end of line 3, page 6, strike out the period, insert a comma, and add the following: "and said lease shall provide that all rates and charges for power sold and services furnished in connection therewith by the company shall be reasonable, nondiscriminatory, and just to the customers, and shall provide further that all power sold by the company within the State of Alabama shall be subject to regulation by the State as to rates and charges therefor and services furnished in connection therewith, and that all power sold by the company outside the State of Alabama shall be subject to regulation by the Federal Power Commission as to rates and charges therefor and services furnished in connection therewith."

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman begins will he yield for a question?

Mr. HOCH. If it is very brief.

Mr. McKENZIE. Is this a copy of the amendment put in the RECORD by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN]?

Mr. HOCH. No; it is not. I have not seen the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOCH. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I introduced an amendment for the information of the House and submitted it to gentlemen on this side who are much interested in the matter, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] and I to-day got together and agreed on an amendment covering this proposition which he says is satisfactory.

Mr. HOCH. Perhaps the House is unfortunately in no mood now to consider amendments. But I want in good faith to urge an amendment of this sort. I do not care what the wording is.

What do we propose to do with reference to this water power? I want to say that I have come to the consideration of this whole proposition in a friendly spirit. Let me go directly to the issue here, because my time is so short. What do we propose to do with reference to this power? We propose to turn over to a company organized by Mr. Henry Ford, for a period of 100 years, this vast water power without the slightest regulation of rates and charges.

Now, it is said that in the absence of any regulation provision in the bill the State of Alabama will have power to regulate the rates and charges in case the power is sold.

If that is true—though there is grave doubt about it—the first part of my amendment should meet no objection, because I provide that if any power is sold in the State of Alabama, the State of Alabama shall have supervision over the rates and charges, and I have followed the language of the Federal power act in that regard. But does anyone contend that when this current is sent over the State line into Tennessee, or the State line into Georgia, or the State line into Mississippi—does any lawyer here contend that there is any power in Tennessee or Georgia or Mississippi to regulate these rates and charges? Gentlemen, it is an amazing proposal that we retain nowhere the power to regulate these rates and charges. Why, we propose to turn this vast water power over for 100 years. How much water power is there there? It is estimated all the way up to 800,000 and 900,000 horsepower. Yet it is proposed to turn it over to one corporation—not Henry Ford—for 100 years without any regulation. It is an indefensible violation of all principles of conservation of natural resources for utilization in the interests of the public.

Why, gentlemen, you may possibly justify the sale of this property at this price—a property, intact, which has cost the Government about $85,000,000—for $5,000,000, although, personally, I doubt it. You may possibly justify the lease of these dams and power houses costing a hundred millions at a rental which figures less than 3 per cent on the investment; you may possibly justify other provisions in this bill, such as the one that involves the amendment we have just turned down, whereby we do the amazing thing of declaring that the United States shall go out and buy these lands, flowage rights, and rights of way at vast expense and pay for it out of the Treasury of the United States and permit an agent named by the company to make all the purchases—a most amazing proposition. You may justify that; but I say to you that while I am in sympathy with the purposes of this bill and have come to the consideration of the proposition, hoping to be able to vote for it, yet in the cool understanding of history the American people will never justify the turning over to one corporation for a period of 100 years one of the greatest water powers in the country without any regulation of rates and charges. The country will never approve it.

Now, remember that there is no agreement to use anything but a small part of this vast power for producing fertilizer, and that what is produced is to be produced at a profit to Henry Ford of 8 per cent, and that there is no guaranty of any sort in this bill that the fertilizer will be produced at any specified cost—no limitation of any sort as to price, except that Henry Ford is to have a profit of 8 per cent upon what he does produce. But, even with all of those defects, we might simply trust blindly to Henry Ford and to this corporation which is to exist for a hundred years, long after Henry Ford is gone, and as to whose future control we can only speculate. That would be a very questionable exercise of faith, without protection under the contract, but how can we shut our eyes to this vital question of the conservation of this vast water power—one of the very greatest power projects in America?

One of two things is true: Either this Henry Ford corporation proposes to use all of the power at Muscle Shoals itself—in which case it is an unconscionable monopoly—or it proposes to sell this power to other users; and if he does sell it to other users, then certainly—at least with reference to the interstate sale of power—it is wholly indefensible to provide no regulation at all of rates, charges, and service. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I have not had time to examine the amendment offered by the gentleman who has just spoken, but evidently it seeks to accomplish in some way the purpose which the amendment I offered yesterday, if adopted, will accomplish. My amendment attracted the attention—favorable attention, I believe—of the proponents of this measure, and I have conferred with several of them. This morning the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] and I prepared—with some changes in my amendment—an amendment which I am to offer at the proper place in this bill. It is, as I say, approved by Mr. OLIVER, has been approved by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE], and, I understand, has the approval of others who are taking active interest in securing the passage of this bill. We believe, and have reason to believe, that my amendment will be better and more satisfactory to the friends of this measure than is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOCH].

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Why not have the gentleman's amendment read now, so that we may have it in our minds?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. If this is the proper place, I might offer it as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOCH]. I have prepared it to be offered at another place, but with the consent of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] I will offer it now as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOCH], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. HOCH: On page 6, after line 3, add a new section as follows:

"SEC. 8. Whenever the company shall render or supply any public service by way of distributing or supplying electric current or power for any use or purpose for sale to customers or consumers thereof, it shall abide by such laws and regulations as may from time to time be enacted or prescribed by the State or its duly constituted authorities in which the service is rendered or the rate charged. Whenever any service herein mentioned shall enter into interstate or foreign commerce, the company shall abide by the joint action of the duly constituted authorities of the States directly concerned, and if such States are unable to agree through their properly constituted authorities on the service to be rendered in interstate or foreign commerce or on the rates or charges of payment therefor, jurisdiction, during the time the authorities of such States may be in disagreement, is hereby conferred upon the Interstate Commerce Commission to enforce the provisions of this section to regulate and control so much of such service rendered and of the rates and charges of payment therefor as constitute interstate or foreign commerce. The administration of the provisions of this section by the Interstate Commerce Commission, as far as applicable, shall be according to the procedure and practice in fixing and regulating the rates, charges, and practices of railroad companies as provided in the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and the parties subject to such regulation and control shall have the same rights of hearing, defense, and review as said companies in such cases."

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I am one of those who agree with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOCH] that there ought to be some provision in this act for the regulation and control of the service and of rates and charges that may be made therefor. A sharp difference of opinion has arisen here as to whether or not power and authority to exercise such regulation and control now exists or will exist independently of this act and whether that power if it exists is or will be in the States or in the Congress. It has been said that the States have the authority now and will have it after this bill becomes law. That opinion, confidently expressed by some, has been seriously questioned by many Members of the House. Therefore I may say it is in doubt, and it is a matter of such great importance that there should be no doubt. This act ought to be so framed as to remove all possibility of doubt or chance for difference of opinion.

If there is a question as to which authority, State or Federal Government, should control, we should, I believe, declare it to be the policy that the States shall be permitted to control, as far as they are able to do so. And as to interstate matters the better judgment, as I believe it to be better, is that the Interstate Commerce Commission should control rather than the Federal Power Commission, which exists and functions under the Federal water power act. That, I believe, will better meet the wishes and opinions of those who have interested themselves in and are giving attention to this particular feature of the bill.

Mr. HOCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. HOCH. I would be interested in getting the gentleman's reason—and, as far as I am concerned, I have no pride in the amendment I have offered as to form—for preferring the Interstate Commerce Commission to the Federal Power Commission. Everyone knows the Interstate Commerce Commission is already burdened.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman is making an argument while I yielded for a question.

Mr. HOCH. I will ask the gentleman a question. What are the gentleman's reasons as to why this control should not be given to the Federal Power Commission?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman must have taken notice of the fact that every amendment offered to this bill which in any way suggested that authority be given in respect to anything of which this bill treats to the Federal Power Commission has been rejected.

Mr. HOCH. A lot of amendments have been rejected.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. And, in my judgment, the feeling here is not such as will permit of an amendment which will give control of matters we are now considering into the hands of that commission. Further than that, it has seemed to those who have interested themselves in this matter and taken part in the drafting of the amendment that the Interstate Commerce Commission is the more suitable body in that it is a continuing body.

It has the machinery for examining into and administering a matter of this kind, whereas the Federal Power Commission is composed, as we all know, of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of Agriculture, a changing commission, a political commission, a commission not organized, as is the Interstate Commerce Commission, to investigate and administer a matter of this kind. In short, it is our view that the Interstate Commerce Commission is much to be preferred to the Federal Power Commission.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have been insisting as a member of the committee that in case Mr. Ford should undertake to distribute power from this plant located in the State of Alabama, he would come automatically under the law of the State of Alabama. There is some question, however, as I understand, if he undertakes to distribute this power into other States, as interstate business, and the gentleman from Michigan and a few others felt that there should be something put in the bill that would control Mr. Ford or the corporation that will succeed Mr. Ford, in such distribution, and I feel, and I think everyone does, that no special privileges should be extended to Mr. Ford or to this corporation, and it has not been the purpose of the committee so to do. Therefore I feel that it is not a question of whether it shall be just this way or that way or under the Interstate Commerce Commission or the Federal Water Power Commission, and if there is some provision in here regulating that matter, that ought to satisfy everyone.

Mr. BURTON. Is it not perfectly obvious from this provision beginning "whenever the company shall supply" that it is optional with the company to furnish or not to furnish power outside? In other words, Mr. Ford can use all of that power for himself and for his own company, and only in case he graciously permits the sale of part of it must he submit himself to the regulation.

Mr. McKENZIE. I have no quarrel with him on that point.

Mr. BURTON. The gentleman concedes that Mr. Ford, under that provision, could use all the power, aside from that used for fertilizer, for himself?

Mr. McKENZIE. Absolutely; and if I was undertaking what Mr. Ford is undertaking, I would want that right.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. Does the gentleman think Mr. Ford would permit the United States Government to authorize the Interstate Commerce Commission to regulate the rates for the sale of electricity throughout the different States?

Mr. McKENZIE. Well, I do not know that I could make that any plainer.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question in regard to this amendment. I heard it read but I could not understand it fully. Does this amendment seek to fix the maximum rate or does it give to the Interstate Commerce Commission the right to fix the rates?

Mr. McKENZIE. It does not fix any rates. It gives them the right to fix the rates.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. But does it give them the right to fix the maximum rate or does it give them the right to fix the rate at which the power shall be sold?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The first paragraph of my amendment practically, in effect, simply recognizes the right of the State through its duly constituted authorities, to regulate and control these matters the same as any other company furnishing electric current or power; and as to interstate commerce, it recognizes the right of the States that are directly concerned to exercise the same measure of control, and if they can not agree, and only while they are in disagreement, the Interstate Commerce Commission shall take jurisdiction of the matter. There is nothing in this amendment in regard to maximum or minimum rates.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Why not fix the maximum rate in the interest of the consumer?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. This leaves the matter to your State to determine. It recognizes the rights of the State.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Why not give to Mr. Ford, or to anybody else the right to reduce rates? I think they ought to be the maximum rates.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and the substitute close in five minutes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the amendment and the substitute to the amendment close in 10 minutes.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I submit a preferential motion. I move that all debate close now on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Maryland, amending the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion as amended.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Is this a vote on the McLaughlin amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The vote is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] to close debate in 10 minutes, which was amended by the motion of the gentleman from Maryland to close the debate at once, which was carried, and the question now is on the original motion as amended by the motion of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL] to close debate.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. QUIN) there were—ayes 80, noes 70.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my amendment may be again reported.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is upon the substitute of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] for the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOCH].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee) there were—ayes 68, noes 86.

So the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the original amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOCH].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HOCH) there were—ayes 61, noes 95.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

The question was taken, and tellers were ordered. The Chair appointed as tellers Mr. HOCH and Mr. McKENZIE.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 67 ayes and 117 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, on line 3, page 6, there is a misprint. I ask unanimous consent that the word "and," following the figure 3 in said line, be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. The company will further pay to the United States during the period of the lease of Dam No. 3, $20,000 annually, in installments, quarterly in advance, for repairs, maintenance, and operation of Dam No. 3, its gates and lock; it being understood that all necessary repairs, maintenance, and operation thereof shall be under the direction, care, and responsibility of the United States during the said 100-year period; and the company, at its own expense, will make all necessary renewals and repairs incident to the efficient maintenance of the power house, substructures, superstructures, machinery, and appliances appurtenant to said power house and will maintain the same in efficient operating condition.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment. It is similar to the one I offered before, and, as far as I am concerned, I am willing to submit it without discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment proposed by Mr. BURTON: On page 6, in section 8, strike out lines 4 to and including the word "period," in line 11, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "The company during the period of this lease shall, at its own expense, provide for the necessary repairs, replacements, maintenance, and operation of Dam No. 2, its gates, and locks."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. BURTON.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BURTON) there were 54 ayes and 90 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. At all times during the period of the lease of Dam No. 3 the company will furnish to the United States, free of charge, to be delivered at any point on the lock grounds designated by the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, electric power necessary for the operation of the said lock, but not in excess of 100 horsepower.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 22, after the word "lock," strike out the words "but not in excess of 100 horsepower."

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, section 9 purports to require the Ford company to furnish electric power necessary for the operation of the lock. It then qualifies that language by the insertion of the following entirely irrelevant and limiting words, "but not in excess of 100 horsepower."

Section 9 would be construed by any court to mean that the sole obligation of the Ford corporation was to furnish 100 horsepower. It does not say whether the 100 horsepower shall be furnished every time a lock is open; it does not say whether that 100 horsepower shall be furnished every week, or whether that 100 horsepower shall be furnished every year or only during the 100 years of the contract. If the Ford proposition means what it is advertised to mean and what the people at large believe it to mean, that section 9 provides the Ford corporation shall actually furnish the actual "necessary" horsepower these words of limitation "not in excess of 100 horsepower" should be stricken out.

I hope you will adopt my pending amendment, to which no one can object who wants necessary power furnished. [Applause.]

Mr. BOWLING. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the Alabama Power Co. have covered my district like the dew. There is not an important town in it in which it does not either own an electric-light plant or furnish the power. The two great rivers of Alabama that furnish the water power of the State run through my district. One of the largest counties in my district is Tallapoosa and is on the Tallapoosa River, one of the greatest water powers in the State. The Alabama Power Co. is building on that river a $7,000,000 dam. They have many friends there and have done much to develop that section of Alabama. At the same time, my attitude with respect to this Ford offer is well known both in Alabama and in Washington. I have told those who are sufficiently interested and who have asked me that I thought the Ford offer was a good one and I desired to support it and that I am in favor of this bill. To-day I am in receipt of a telegram from gentlemen of my district whom I esteem very highly. They desire it to be put in the RECORD, and I will ask, in deference to them, who are fine men and good citizens, that it go into the RECORD and be read by the Clerk in my time. They all know that I am in favor of the Ford offer and will continue to be.

The Clerk read as follows:

ALEXANDER CITY, ALA., March 8, 1924.

Hon. W. B. BOWLING,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

We most respectfully protest news dispatches out of Washington which seek to discredit the Alabama Power Co., whose operations in this State have been of untold benefit to fast-growing industries. We can see no reason why they should be condemned, as they are in the press dispatches, for an offer which they and other power companies submitted for Muscle Shoals. In our opinion that offer is far more attractive than that submitted by Ford. We fail utterly to see why Ford should be permitted to exploit such a great national asset as Muscle Shoals and thereby localize its usefulness. We request that this protest be placed in the RECORD.

J. SANDFORD MULLINS.	CHAS. A. DEAN.
L. B. DEAN.	DR. W. E. MAXWELL.
J. F. FUNDERBURK.	A. J. WARREN.
A. A. WORTHY.	E. J. DUNCAN.

Mr. BOWLING. Supplementary to that I will say that the people whom I represent are anxious for Henry Ford to come into Alabama and protect us from the monopoly and combine established by the Alabama Power Co. They own and control all the power of the two great rivers of Alabama, the Coosa and the Tallapoosa. Nobody else can get in. We do not desire to be subjected to the uncontrolled power of that great financial interest.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Let me say to the gentleman that perhaps Mr. Ford will break up the monopoly of the Democratic Party.

Mr. BOWLING. Well, there is not a better man in the United States who could break it, but it will not be broken. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. For the purpose of enabling the Government to create and provide a sinking fund to retire the cost of Dam No. 3 at the end of the lease period the company will at the beginning of the fourth year of the lease period, and semiannually thereafter for the remaining term of the lease, pay to the United States Government the sum of $3,505; and for the purpose of enabling the Government to create and provide a sinking fund to retire the cost of Dam No. 2 at the end of 100 years the company will at the beginning of the seventh year of the lease period, and semiannually thereafter for the remaining term of the lease, pay to the United States Government the sum of $19,868.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HULL of Iowa, page 6, line 23: Strike out all of section 10 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 10. For the purpose of enabling the Government to create and provide a sinking fund to retire the cost of Dam No. 3 at the end of the lease period the company will at the beginning of the fourth year of the lease period, and semiannually thereafter for the remaining term of the lease, pay to the United States Government such sum as may be necessary for such purpose computed by standard amortization tables; and for the purpose of enabling the Government to create and provide a sinking fund to retire the cost of Dam No. 2 at the end of the lease period the company will at the beginning of the seventh year of the lease period, and semiannually thereafter for the remaining term of the lease, pay to the United States Government such sum as may be necessary for such purpose as computed by standard amortization tables."

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this is an amendment which will do exactly what the bill purports to do in section 10. I do not intend to take up very much of your time. I simply want to call attention to the fact that section 10 will not amortize Dam No. 2. It pretends to do this and to pay back to the Government $50,000,000. It will pay back to the Government $4,337,378 in 100 years. You must invest that money in such a manner as to make up the other $45,000,000. If you will adopt this amendment you will protect the Treasury of the United States, and at the end of the time Dam No. 2 will be really amortized.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, up to this time I have refrained from occupying any of the time of the committee by participating in the discussion of this very important legislation, because it has been apparent to me from the beginning that a large majority of the committee is in favor of the passage of this bill without material amendment, and, therefore, a discussion of it by me would simply delay its final passage to that extent. The special rule under which this bill is being considered at this time afforded ample opportunity to both its adherents and its opponents for its full discussion. Notwithstanding the fact that 10 hours were consumed in general debate, we find a disposition on the part of those in opposition to this measure to block and obstruct its passage.

My colleagues, I confess that I feel a very deep and vital interest in the passage of this legislation. My interest has not been based on any personal or selfish consideration or on account of the fact that I come from a Southern State which will, in the very nature of things, be directly affected by the development of the Muscle Shoals project. My chief concern exists in my desire to see a large part of our population—our basic industry, if you please, the farmers of the land—given at least a modicum of relief in the way of cheaper fertilizer. In fact, my interest in this proposition has been so great and keen that, although not a member of any congressional committee charged with the duty of a personal inspection of this great project, upon my own volition and at my own personal expense I went to Muscle Shoals and studied this colossal undertaking first hand.

I will not consume your time by giving you in detail my observations and impressions of this gigantic proposition. Suffice it to say that when completed the Muscle Shoals institution will be the greatest hydroelectric power development in the whole world. It is an accepted fact that, notwithstanding repeated and persistant efforts on the part of the War Department to interest some one in Muscle Shoals, no one would consider the proposition except that great wizard of industry, Henry Ford. Everybody else declared the deliberation to be impracticable and impossible. But just as soon as it developed that the Government was about to negotiate a contract with the automobile genius, these selfish power companies began to prick up their ears and get busy with a campaign of propaganda. Every species of propaganda known has been resorted to and employed in an effort to poison and prejudice the mind of the great American public against Henry Ford and the Ford proposition. But this desperate effort has failed, and signally failed, and Muscle Shoals will be turned over to Ford under the terms provided in this measure before you. [Applause.] My friends, I do not desire to inject politics into the consideration of this purely economic measure. No political issue is involved in this proposition. It is a national issue and a national emergency, and while I would not inject politics into the consideration of this measure, I desire to say that in my opinion the warning uttered by the gentleman from Illinois yesterday to the Republicans of the House was entirely appropriate and timely and has my cordial approval.

Gentleman of the House, this is a great national issue—yea, it is a great national emergency. [Applause.] The Republican Party is, in fact or in theory, in control of this body and is responsible for legislation. If this measure is defeated or its efficacy destroyed or impaired by unfriendly amendments, its blood will be upon our hands. The gentleman from Kansas a few minutes ago called attention to the "few Republicans" collaborating with the Democrats in the passage of this bill. I am delighted to be among those few Republicans referred to by the distinguished Kansan. [Applause.] I am a Republican of the old-fashioned stand-pat variety and I am proud of the fact. I have the honor to represent a district that has not sent a Democrat to Congress since the great Civil War, and I suspect that this is a boast that very few Members on this side of the Chamber can make, be they from the great rolling West or even from Yankee-Doodle herself. [Applause.] I have no apologies to offer for associating with Democrats in the passage of this legislation. This is a meritorious measure that rises above the plane of sordid politics, and it is to be regretted and deplored that some gentlemen can not divorce their politics and feelings of sectionalism long enough to give sober and patriotic consideration to a measure that means so much to our national defense and to our most vital and essential industry—agriculture. [Applause.]

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment proposed by Mr. BURTNESS: On page 8, in lines 8 to 10, strike out the words "but the company shall not be obliged to operate nitrate plant numbered 1 as an air nitrogen fixation plant."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. The company agrees to purchase from the United States, and the United States will sell the following properties, namely:

(a) All of the property constituting nitrate plant No. 2 (as officially known and designated), including lands, power plants, buildings, material, machinery, fixtures, equipment, apparatus, appurtenances, tools, and supplies, and the right, license, and privilege to use any and all of the patents, processes, methods, and designs which have been acquired and may be transferred or assigned to a purchaser of nitrate plant No. 2 by the United States, together with the sulphuric acid units now in storage on the premises.

(b) All of the property constituting nitrate plant No. 1 (as officially known and designated), including lands, power plants, buildings, material, machinery, fixtures, equipment, apparatus, appurtenances, tools, and supplies, and the right, license, and privilege to use any and all of the patents, processes, methods, and designs which have been acquired and may be transferred to a purchaser of nitrate plant No. 1 by the United States, but the company shall not be obliged to operate nitrate plant numbered 1 as an air nitrogen fixation plant.

(c) All of the property constituting the Waco Quarry (as officially known and designated), including rights of way and buildings, material, quarry tracks, machinery, railroad tracks, appurtenances, tools, and supplies.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HILL of Maryland: Page 7, line 12 after the words "SEC. 11," strike out "The company agrees to purchase from the United States, and the United States will sell" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "The United States will lease to the company for a period of 50 years and for an annual rental of $1."

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, section 11 provides that nitrate plant No. 1, which the chairman of the Chemical Research Laboratory has recently stated could now be used for air nitrates under the Haber process; that nitrate plant No. 2, which was used during the war by the cyanamide process, and that the Waco Quarry, which was acquired so that the proper stone could be obtained for nitrates, be all absolutely deeded to the Ford corporation. Those sections of the bill are as follows:

SEC. 11. The company agrees to purchase from the United States, and the United States will sell the following properties, namely:

(a) All of the property constituting nitrate plan No. 2 (as officially known and designated), including lands, power plants, buildings, material, machinery, fixtures, equipment, apparatus, appurtenances, tools, and supplies, and the right, license, and privilege to use any and all of the patents, processes, methods, and designs which have been acquired and may be transferred or assigned to a purchaser of nitrate plant No. 2 by the United States, together with the sulphuric acid units now in storage on the premises.

(b) All of the property constituting nitrate plant No. 1 (as officially known and designated), including lands, power plants, buildings, material, machinery, fixtures, equipment, apparatus, appurtenance, tools, and supplies, and the right, license, and privilege to use any and all of the patents processes, methods, and designs which have been acquired and may be transferred to a purchaser of nitrate plant No. 1 by the United States but the company shall not be obliged to operate nitrate plant No. 1 as an air nitrogen fixation plant.

(c) All of the property constituting the Waco Quarry (as officially known and designated), including rights of way and building, material, quarry tracks, machinery, railroad tracks, appurtenances, tools, and supplies.

You are asked to deed to the corporation to be created by Mr. Ford a great instrument of national defense, ready at any moment to furnish sufficient nitrogen for two field armies, or 1,000,000 men. Bear that clearly in mind. We have that now in nitrate plant No. 2 and the Waco Quarry. We do not need a new Ford or any other kind of corporation to give us what we now have; and, on the other hand, we should not deed away this great necessity for national defense. Here is a letter from the Secretary of War which you should read carefully as to the Ford offer in its relation to national defense. Note also what the Secretary says about the price for this sale:

The proposed return to the Government for nitrate plant No. 1, nitrate plant No. 2, the Waco Quarry, and the proposed Black Warrior plant, if its transfer is intended, would be less than the Government has already obtained for a minor element of the plant No. 2 development, that is, the Gorgas plant.

We need the Muscle Shoals property for national defense. I hope you will ponder carefully the letter of the Secretary of War, which is as follows:

JANUARY 30, 1924.

Hon. GEORGE W. NORRIS,
Chairman Committee on Agriculture and Forestry,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR NORRIS: Referring further to your letter of December 24, 1923, and to my acknowledgment under date of January 8, 1924, in regard to Senate 139, after further examination of the various provisions of that bill I desire now to submit my views as follows:

The purpose of the bill is to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to accept the offer of Henry Ford of May 31, 1922, for lease of certain Government dams and power properties on the Tennessee River and for purchase of the nitrate plants and properties near Muscle Shoals

The offer of May 31, 1922, is substantially the same as Mr. Ford's former offer as last modified January 25, 1922, and the bill now under consideration embraces the terms of the May offer, except paragraph 12 and subparagraph (d) of paragraph 11, which relate to the Gorgas plant and transmission line which have been sold by the Government. The bill, in lieu of transferring to Mr. Ford the Gorgas plant and line or the rights of the United States therein, proposes to provide an equivalent on the Black Warrior River near Dam No. 17, and a transmission line to Muscle Shoals; and thus qualifying the offer to accept it.

The following synopsis of the bill will clarify it:

Section 1 provides that Mr. Ford form a company to effectuate his order.

Section 2 provides that the company shall complete for the United States at actual cost and without profit to the company Dam No. 2, Muscle Shoals.

Section 3 provides that the company shall lease Dam No. 2, its power house, equipment, and appurtenances for 100 years from the date when 100,000 horsepower is installed and ready for service and will pay therefor $200,000 annually for the first six years, and thereafter annually 4 per cent of the cost of the properties to the United States, exclusive of the amounts expended or obligated by the United States to the date of acceptance of the offer.

Section 4 provides that the company shall pay $35,000 annually during the lease period to provide for repairs, maintenance, and operation by the United States of Dam No. 2, its locks and gates; the repair and maintenance of the power house and its equipment to be cared for by the company at its own expense.

Section 5 provides that the company shall furnish the United States electric power in an amount necessary for the operation of the locks at Dam No. 2, but not in excess of 200 horsepower.

Section 6 provides that the company shall construct for the United States, at actual cost and without profit to the company, Dam No. 3, Tennessee River, its lock, power house, and all necessary equipment.

Section 7 provides that the company shall lease Dam No. 3, its power house, equipment, and appurtenances, the lease to begin when the structures and power equipment to produce 80,000 horsepower are ready for service, and to expire at the same date as the lease for Dam No. 2, and shall pay therefor for the first three years of the lease period $160,000 annually, and thereafter annually 4 per cent of the cost of the properties to the United States.

Section 8 provides that the company shall pay $20,000 annually during the lease period to provide for repairs, maintenance, and operation by the United States of Dam No. 3, its lock and gates; the repair and maintenance of the power house and its equipment to be cared for by the company at its own expense.

Section 9 provides that during the lease of Dam No. 3 the company will furnish to the United States the electric power necessary for the operation of the lock at Dam No. 3, but not in excess of 100 horsepower.

Section 10 provides for the establishment of sinking funds to amount at the end of the lease periods, with interest payable semiannually at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, to $8,152,137 in the case of Dam No. 3 and to $40,919,798 in the case of Dam No. 2. The amount of the sinking fund provided for in the case of Dam No. 2 corresponds to Mr. Ford's estimate of the cost of that dam, but the sinking fund provided for in the case of Dam No. 3 corresponds to the cost of that dam as first estimated by Mr. Ford, viz., $8,152,137, and not to his later revised estimate of $19,000,000.

Section 11 provides for the purchase by the company from the United States of all property constituting nitrate plant No. 2, all of nitrate plant No. 1, and all of Waco Quarry.

Section 12 provides that the purchase price for the properties referred to in section 11 shall be $5,000,000, and stipulates how this price shall be paid and what deeds shall be given.

Section 13 provides that the purchase price of those properties shall not be diminished for their depreciation between the date of the offer and its acceptance, that no inventory of the properties need be made, and qualifies the deeds of conveyance.

Section 14 provides for the manufacture by the company of nitrogen and other commercial fertilizers at plant No. 2, or equivalent plant or plants in the vicinity, for certain research work in connection with the manufacture of fertilizers, and for the maintenance by the company of the plant in a state of readiness for the manufacture of material necessary in time of war for the production of explosives.

Section 15 provides for fixing the price for fertilizers.

Section 16 provides for the temporary recapture of plant No. 2 by the United States for national defense when necessary for the production of materials needed in the manufacture of explosives or other war materials.

Section 17 provides that the company shall have the preferred right to negotiate for the lease or purchase of the dams and power properties at the termination of the lease period.

Section 18 provides a method of procedure for the termination of contracts made in furtherance of the offer in case of violation of the provisions of the contract and for the enforcement of their provisions.

Section 19 provides that the United States shall contract with Mr. Ford or the company to build a steam electric power plant at or near Dam No. 17, Black Warrior River, and a power transmission line to Muscle Shoals at a capital cost to the United States not to exceed $3,472,487, in order to provide a plant equivalent to the Gorgas steam plant.

Section 20 provides that the instruments necessary to effectuate the acceptance of the offer shall be binding upon the United States and jointly and severally upon Henry Ford, his heirs, representatives, and assigns, and the company, its successors and assigns.

Section 21 authorizes the appropriations necessary to carry out the bill.

Section 22 repeals any laws in conflict with the bill.

My views as to the advantages and disadvantages to the United States of the offer of January 25, 1922, were expressed in a letter written under date of February 1, 1922, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, printed in House Report No. 1084, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session.

As stated in that report, I consider that it is peculiarly the province of Congress to weigh the consideration which will pass to the respective parties to the proposed arrangement and to determine whether the advantage to the Government in having nitrate plant No. 2, or an equivalent plant, maintained in readiness for the manufacture of explosives, and in actual production of fertilizer, is of sufficient importance to justify the proposed departure from the present policy of the law in regard to dealing with the water-power resources of the Nation, and the acceptance of a return manifestly of itself inadequate for the water-power installations and the properties for the fixation of nitrogen from the air.

That policy is to invite competition by advertising the power privileges for lease for a term not in excess of 50 years. I am still of the opinion that it will be better to limit a grant of the power privileges to a term of 50 years, and I believe that the public interests will be best conserved if competitive offers for the privileges sought by Mr. Ford are invited, received, and canvassed, and that offer accepted which may be competently found to be most advantageous to the United States.

If the end sought is merely to dispose of the nitrate properties and power privileges on the most advantageous terms embracing all the varied Government interests in one proposition, but requiring that nitrate plant No. 2 be used for the manufacture of fertilizers and be held available for the production of materials necessary in the manufacture of explosives or other war materials, I would suggest that Congress can by specific legislation enable the Federal Power Commission, which is composed of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of Agriculture, after advertisement in the manner prescribed in the water power act, to enter into suitable leases and contracts and to execute all instruments necessary to accomplish the end.

It is my strong conviction that the Government should continue work on Dam No. 2 and carry it to completion as early as practicable, and that it should be expected that if meanwhile Congress has made no special provision for the disposal of the power available therefrom it will be advantageously leased by the Federal Power Commission under the terms of the Federal water power act.

If the proposition embraced by the bill is favorably considered, I would suggest the following amendments as being necessary to more clearly define the rights and responsibilities of the contracting parties.

Section 2 should be omitted for the following principal reasons:

The Government has a going organization now engaged in the construction of Dam No. 2; the work is progressing rapidly and satisfactorily and will have reached a stage where approximately 100,000 horsepower will probably be available soon after January 1, 1925; the dam and power house will, it is expected, be entirely completed in the fall of that year, with eight main generating units of a capacity of 260,000 horsepower installed; there are numerous contracts outstanding, some of which will run until the work is nearly completed; a change in administration of the work at this time would, it is believed, be to the disadvantage of the Government, as it would delay its completion without decreasing the cost.

SEC. 3. Omit the words "except the locks" in line 7, and change the word "either" in line 9 to "the power house." The locks do not form part of the power development and are on the opposite side of the river from the power house. In connection with the operation of the lock and navigation facilities, it is desirable that the Government retain the land at the lock end of the dam.

In connection with the word "completing" in line 15, and in lines 16, 17, and 18 the words in parentheses reading "but not including expenditures and obligations incurred prior to approval of this proposal by Congress," your attention is invited to the fact that the consideration if equitable at any past date are disparate now, for the reason that since the date of the submission of Mr. Ford's offer there had been expended on Dam No. 2 approximately $10,000,000, and that these expenditures are now continuing at the rate of $30,000 per day. Senate bill 139 takes no cognizance of the expenditures made since the date of the original offer. By reason of funds already spent since the date of this offer the return to the Government would be approximately $400,000 per year less than when the offer was submitted.

SEC. 7. Omit the words "except the lock," in line 16, and change the word "either," in line 18, to "the power house."

A like reason applies to this as to a similar change in section 3.

Sections 11 to 14, inclusive, provide for the purchase by Mr. Ford, or by a company to be formed by him, of all of the property constituting nitrate plant No. 2, all of nitrate plant No. 1, and all of the Waco Quarry. They state the price to be paid, the method of payment, stipulate the deeds to be given, and set forth the guaranties provided by Mr. Ford in his offer to maintain nitrate plant No. 2 at its present state of readiness for immediate operation in the manufacture of nitrates in time of war for the production of explosives.

By section 14 (b) Mr. Ford binds himself to produce at nitrate plant No. 2 a certain quantity of nitrates for fertilizer purposes and "to maintain nitrate plant No. 2 at its present state of readiness or its equivalent for immediate operation in the manufacture of materials necessary in time of war for the production of explosives." The inclusion of the phrase "or its equivalent" makes this provision in some respects ambiguous and susceptible to more than one construction, whereas it should be a direct and unqualified obligation on the part of Mr. Ford and his company to keep nitrate plant No. 2, or its equivalent, ready for the production of nitrates for explosives at least up to its present capacity. In view of the long period of time that the contract runs and the likelihood of radical improvement in the production of nitrates, it is believed that this provision might better be changed to read as follows:

> "To keep and maintain nitrate plant No. 2, or an equivalent plant, in a state of readiness to immediately produce nitrates for munition purposes to an amount equivalent to its present capacity."

There is, however, in the offer no security for the performance of this obligation other than the promise of the contractor and the remedy provided for in section 18. It is my opinion that a specific provision should be made that in case Mr. Ford or his company fails to live up to this provision of the contract, or the provision for the production of fertilizer, that nitrate plant No. 2, the Waco Quarry, and the Black Warrior power plant shall revert to the United States, and that the United States shall be entitled to cancel and terminate the leases of the dams and power plants covered by the proposal. The importance of nitrate plant No. 2 and the Waco Quarry to the defense of the United States is indicated by the fact that as they now stand they would furnish sufficient nitrogen for two field armies, or 1,000,000 men. It is therefore of the utmost importance to the national defense that this plant or its equivalent be ready for immediate operation in case of war. By the terms of the Ford offer and the bill under consideration, title to nitrate plants Nos. 1 and 2 and to the Waco Quarry will pass to Mr. Ford or his company. It is true that in section 12 it is provided that the deeds conveying these properties "shall refer to or contain the provisions of this offer and said deeds shall be so drawn as to make such provisions covenants running with the land." I believe that the importance of this feature of the contract is such that every possible safeguard should be placed in the contract to insure compliance therewith, and that there should be added to the last-quoted provision the words

> "and such deed shall also provide that in case the grantee shall fail to operate said nitrate plant No. 2, as provided herein, or shall fail to maintain the same in its present state of readiness, or its equivalent, for immediate operation in the manufacture of materials necessary in time of war for the production of explosives, or if said grantee shall fail to comply in any other respect with the terms of the contract between the United States and Henry Ford or his company, as evidenced by his offer of May 31, 1922, and its acceptance by Congress, then the title and right to possession of said nitrate plant No. 2, the Waco Quarry, and the Black Warrior power plant shall immediately revert to and revest in the United States of America, and the United States shall be entitled to a cancellation and termination on the lease or leases to Dams Nos. 2 and 3 and their power plants."

If the suggestion made above for a change in wording of paragraph 14 (b) is adopted, the language of the reverter clause last quoted above should be changed accordingly.

In disposing of the property enumerated in the bill under consideration, it is essential to the military preparedness for the defense of this Nation that provision be made to guard against each or both of the following contingencies:

(a) That United States nitrate plant No. 2, with a reliable method of fixing nitrogen, be altered to convert it into a plant employing some other processes chosen by Mr. Ford, with resulting failure of those processes and subsequent closing down of the new plant.

(b) An entire abandonment of the fixation of nitrogen at Muscle Shoals and the passing of the nitrate plants to other processes, since under this act (S. 139) the United States does no longer own either of the plants.

In regard to (a) if Congress desires to control the process of producing nitrate at plant No. 2 more fully than by the general terms quoted above, it could provide, if Mr. Ford would consent, that no change in process of fixation could be made without consent of the Secretary of War. This would provide against the contingency liated under (a). As to the contingency of entire abandonment of the fixation of nitrogen at Muscle Shoals, the provision for a reversion of title and possession to the United States, together with cancellation and termination of the dam and power plant leases, would probably be the best solution that would be assented to by Mr. Ford.

Section 14 of the bill provides:

> "The company expressly agrees that continuously throughout the lease period, except as it may be prevented by reconstruction of the plant itself, or by war, strikes, accidents, fires, or other causes beyond its control it will manufacture nitrogen, etc."

I am advised that from a legal point of view the phrase, "or other causes beyond its control," for the sake of clarity should be changed to read "or other like causes beyond its control." Three lines further in the same section there is inserted the phrase, "or its equivalent," the meaning of which as used is not quite clear, and I therefore suggest that this language also be clarified.

Section 19. If it is the intention of Congress as is presumed to furnish to the company a steam electric plant equivalent to the Gorgas plant, provision should be made for the conveyance of the proposed Black Warrior plant to the company. The bill as drawn does not contain such provision.

In view of the large number of bills on this subject before Congress, and of the fact that, according to the public press, the Ford interests are in direct communication with the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives, and expect to appear before that committee in the near future with a definite statement as to Mr. Ford's attitude on the whole matter, it has not seemed to me desirable at this time to attempt to redraft as a whole Senate 139 to meet the views set forth above. It may be said, however, that the legislative intent might better be expressed by reciting the terms of the offer by way of preamble and its acceptance and modification in the body of the bill.

With a view to limiting the length of this communication and to avoid repeating information already before the committee of Congress in documentary form, I have omitted many facts and statistics pertinent to the consideration of the proposed contract from a business point of view. However, from the statements included herein and from other data already available to the committee, the following general conclusions are evident:

a. That the Gorgas plant, or an equivalent steam plant, is not necessary for any probable development of the Muscle Shoals properties for public purposes, and therefore should not be replaced.

b. That the progress of the construction of Dam No. 2 is such that it should be completed by the Government.

c. That the offer by Mr. Ford for the facilities at Muscle Shoals is much less than their present value, not only by reason of the investment the Government has made in the properties since the offer was first submitted, nor because the yearly return for power, considering Dam No. 2 alone, would be only a fraction of its sale value, but also because the proposed return to the Government for nitrate plant No. 1, nitrate plant No. 2, the Waco Quarry, and the proposed Black Warrior plant, if its transfer is intended, would be less than the Government has already obtained for a minor element of the plant No. 2 development, i. e. the Gorgas plant.

d. That there is no present need for the construction of Dam No. 3, and its construction should be deferred until the requirements for power and navigation in that region have developed sufficiently to warrant its being built, and, further, that there is no basis for an estimate of the cost of the dam.

e. That there is no necessity for the first provision contained in the preamble to the bill, namely, that for national defense in time of war any action should be taken along the lines proposed in Mr. Ford's offer, for the reason that the United States can now produce nitrates to provide itself with ingredients for explosives to the extent contemplated by this bill by using the plant now installed at Muscle Shoals, including the steam power available. The cost of production will, of course, be modified when the water power is in operation, but the means have been provided and proven already for such requirement.

(f) That to insure the availability of the facilities for the fixation of nitrogen in condition for prompt operation in an emergency, the enabling act in the case of the Ford offer, or of any other offer considered, should contain provisions as to ownership of capital stock and executive control considered sufficient by Congress to preclude the possibility of ownership or executive control other than by citizens of the United States.

Sincerely yours, JOHN W. WEEKS, Secretary of War.

Gentlemen, you are asked to deed absolutely to the Ford interests these nitrate plants and the Waco Quarry, which are essential for national defense.

I hope that you will not do this. I hope that you will vote for my pending amendment for lease and against the Ford demand for sale. [Applause.]

If you lease these plants to Mr. Ford under this amendment, they will be available at all times for development of fertilizer, but they will be more available to the United States for national-defense purposes. If you deed these plants to Mr. Ford, the offer and the contract as set forth in the pending bill provide that he need not maintain; that he may, if he desires, entirely demolish nitrate plant No. 1 with all of its great setting. I ask you to vote for this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say simply that the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland would destroy the security provided in this bill for the protection of the people of the United States. I therefore ask for a vote and move that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves that all debate upon the section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BURTON: Page 8, lines 8 to 10, strike out the words "but the company shall not be obliged to operate nitrate plant No. 1 as an air-nitrogen station plant.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BURTON) there were—ayes 33, noes 76.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. As the purchase price for the foregoing plants and properties to be conveyed to the company by the United States the company will pay to the United States $5,000,000 in five installments, as follows: One million dollars upon the acceptance of this offer and $1,000,000 annually thereafter until the purchase price is fully paid, with interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum on deferred payments, with the privilege of anticipating any or all such payments, possession to be delivered upon payment of the first of said installments and deeds of conveyance to be delivered when full payment for said property has been made. Each of said deeds shall refer to or contain the provisions of this offer, and said deeds shall be so drawn as to make such provisions covenants running with the land.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 9, line 5, strike out period and insert the following: "And such deed shall also provide that in case the grantee shall fail to operate said nitrate plant No. 2, as provided herein, or shall fail to maintain the same in its present state of readiness, or its equivalent, for immediate operation in the manufacture of materials necessary in time of war for the production of explosives, or if said grantee shall fail to comply in any other respect with the terms of the contract between the United States and Henry Ford or his company, as evidenced by his offer of May 31, 1922, and its acceptance by Congress, then the title and right to possession of said nitrate plant No. 2 and Waco Quarry and the Black Warrior power plant shall immediately revert to and revest in the United States of America, and the United States shall be entitled to a cancellation and termination on the lease or leases to Dams Nos. 2 and 3 and their power plants."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, just one moment. I want to tell my Republican associates that this is not my amendment; it is an amendment suggested by the Secretary of War, Mr. Weeks, in his letter to Senator NORRIS of January 30, 1924. I asked the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE], who took the floor during the discussion of the tax reduction bill and made an appeal to us to stand by the Secretary of the Treasury, now, with the same fervor, to ask his colleagues to stand by the Secretary of War. I do not know of anything more important—and I hope the gentleman from Georgia, who is seeking recognition, agrees with me—than to keep intact and maintain in good condition this plant, so that in the event of an emergency the War Department may step in and use it for the purposes for which it is intended. I urge my colleagues on this side of the House to stand by the recommendation of your own Secretary of War, and, on the other side of the House, if you really desire to maintain this plant and want to protect the people of this country and you are sincere in what you say, to vote for this amendment.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I simply wish to say to my progressive Republican friend from New York that on some things I am willing to accept the opinion and advice of the Secretary of War, that of John W. Weeks, but I am firmly convinced, and have been for some time, that our distinguished Secretary of War is no friend of this proposition. I learned early in life to beware of the Greeks bearing gifts. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. Where did the gentleman learn a thing like that?

Mr. BURTNESS. If the gentleman will yield, what do the words "this offer," in line 3, page 9, refer to?

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate on this section do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves that debate on this section do now close.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. I have an amendment which I wish to offer.

Mr. McKENZIE. This motion will not interfere with that.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SPROUL of Kansas: Page 9, line 4, after the word "provisions," insert the word "and," and after the word "covenants" strike out the word "running" and insert the words "to run."

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. May I explain?

The CHAIRMAN. All debate is closed. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 13. This proposal contemplates and it is agreed that the purchase price for the property aforesaid shall not be diminished by reason of depreciation due to use or wear of buildings, machinery, and equipment or to the action of the elements, nor shall any claim be made for losses in or diminution of quantity of tools and supplies due to upkeep and maintenance during the period between the date hereof and the date of delivery of possession of said property, it being further understood that no inventory of the property need be taken, but that due care will be exercised by the United States in preserving and safeguarding the aforesaid real and personal property intact until possession thereof passes to the company. If any part or parts of the aforesaid plants necessary for proper operation of same have been removed by the United States, said part or parts shall be returned when possession of said plants passes to the company. Deeds of conveyance of real property shall warrant the title to be good and unencumbered, but in accordance with and subject to the provisions set forth in paragraph 12 hereof.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to introduce an amendment at the close of section 13, which I will ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment proposed by Mr. BURTON: Insert at the end of section 13: "It is made an express provision of this grant that not less than half of the water power, as well as the steam power, generated or created under the provisions of this act shall be disposed of to public or private users other than the grantees or companies owned or controlled by the grantees herein, or individuals or corporations affiliated with them, at prices to be determined by the Federal Water Power Commission or commissions of the States in which such power is utilized, and as a condition hereof the grantees herein shall construct and maintain the necessary transmission lines for the distribution of such power."

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, let us have what is ordinarily known as a show-down. It has been asserted in public and it has been loudly proclaimed upon the floor of this House that if Mr. Henry Ford obtains this privilege he would build transmission lines of the most improved type, scattering this power over a wide area. Now, what do we see here to-day? The gentleman in charge of this bill, to whose courtesy and honesty I must give exceptional praise, admits that Mr. Ford is not compelled to send a single horsepower away from the central plant; that he can use it all himself; that all he is compelled to use is for the manufacture of fertilizer, leaving a very large surplus for other uses. Now let us understand about this. If you propose to give one of the most valuable installations of water power in the country or in the world over to one man, giving him a monopoly of this plant, then vote down this amendment. I would be willing to modify and make it read half the amount over and above that required for the manufacture of fertilizer.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield for a moment? The gentleman, then, is asking to do something that the Federal power act did not confer even upon the power commission to require any licensee to whom they might give a license?

Mr. BURTON. The gentleman from Alabama is in error because in their licenses they can make provision as to distribution. Here is another thing: What has this committee done just within a few minutes? It has absolutely jumped upon and voted down propositions providing for the revision or supervision of rates and that only whenever the company proposes to dispose of any power, taking it for granted that it may dispose of power or not as it sees fit. Now, that action seems to me little short of monstrous.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. If the gentleman will yield, inasmuch as one of the authors, a representative of one of the great farm corporations who is behind this proposition, has said that Henry Ford would use this power to distribute it to the farmers and take the drudgery out of farm life by the use of electricity, so does not the gentleman think it ought to be adopted?

Mr. BURTON. What bit of drudgery would it take out of farm life? Not a particle will be distributed outside of his own works in the manufacture of whatever he requires in his business. Let us not tolerate such an excuse for favoring this bill, for it is a humbug.

The object of this amendment is nothing except that part of this power shall be circulated for the good of the people. And let it be distinctly understood that without such a provision you are giving a monopolistic power to one man the like of which this Congress has not voted for many years. Talk about political issues. I do not seek any better one. I am willing to go before the farmers in my own State and district and appeal to them, for they are not easily wheedled, because they have good sense and intelligence, and they would condemn a man who took a position than that which I have taken.

Mr. McSWAIN. Then that would tend to prove that a man who has a farm of 50,000 acres is a menace?

Mr. BURTON. Well, that depends. A man who has so much land is likely to attract attention.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman if the Farm Bureau, which is said to be the greatest farm organization in the United States, has not indorsed the Ford offer?

Mr. BURTON. It appears so from their literature. I have known cases where I have stood out against organizations of farmers, chambers of commerce, and so forth, and have finally convinced them that they were in error and obtained their support. [Applause.]

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, although I am vitally interested in the passage of this bill, yet I was so anxious that its passage might be expedited that I had not intended to consume any time by speaking on it. But in view of the fact that I represent a district adjoining the congressional district in which Muscle Shoals is located, I wish to modestly suggest that I am quite as much interested in that section as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], who has just preceded me and who is doing everything he can to defeat the whole proposition by destructive amendments, and yet who expresses very great solicitude about the citizens in the territory contiguous to Muscle Shoals getting surplus power therefrom. I am primarily interested in this bill from the standpoint of fertilizer production and distribution and the manufacture of nitrates for explosives in time of war, as provided in the original bill, under which this great development was authorized and made.

I am not so much concerned about what may be done with the surplus power as some of the gentlemen, although I reside in a district so near at hand that it would get the use of any surplus power that might be distributed over these long transmission lines. And I want to say that my position is this: First, because there is an ample amount of undeveloped power sites and resources in the South to amply supply that entire section with hydroelectric energy, even if Mr. Ford utilized every bit of the surplus power at Muscle Shoals for the development of his own individual enterprises.

Now, if he wants to utilize that power in part or wholly, I have no objection, even though that development would be confined to a section in Alabama. I trust that he may find it possible to distribute part of that power, not because it is especially needed but because it would come into competition with the great power monopoly which we have to combat. And in this connection I want to say this, that the objections now urged to this bill are not the objections which were first heard, and later abandoned. We did not hear any great hue and cry over this surplus energy until Mr. Ford announced that he expected to distribute it to the public over long transmission lines, and yet immediately after that announcement the associated power companies got very busy, busier than ever, in an effort to defeat the bill, not because they were afraid that he would not develop and sell the power in competition with them but because they were afraid that he would do so. [Applause.]

Now what have they done? That fight to defeat this bill by amending it to death is not only being made here, but it is being made in the entire Muscle Shoals section, and they have flooded my district and surrounding territory with this same kind of solicitous (?) propaganda that is being disseminated here, that it is to the public interest to get these amendments incorporated in this bill. What is the result? The people have not been deceived. They are onto the game of the allied power companies, led by the Alabama Power Co., and their allies in and out of Congress.

That entire section has been aroused. They have been holding indignation meetings. My distinguished colleague from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] read to you a telegram showing the result of a poll on the question in Nashville and vicinity. I have just received a telegram from the Lewisburg Chamber of Commerce, J. F. Murrey, president, one of the towns in my district, as follows:

Chamber of commerce unanimously indorse Ford proposition.

To which I replied, as follows:

Replying to your telegram, I beg to advise that I am whole-heartedly and unequivocally in favor of the acceptance of Ford offer for Muscle Shoals, as I have been all along. I am opposed to any amendment or other methods designed to delay or defeat consummation of lease to Ford.

I have also received the following telegram from another town in my district:

The Shelbyville Lions Club unanimously indorses Ford proposition for Muscle Shoals.

The attitude of the farmers in my State is expressed in a letter from the Tennessee Farm Bureau Federation, as follows:

COLUMBIA, TENN., March 1, 1924.

Hon. EWIN L. DAVIS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. DAVIS: As the time approaches when we are to have a vote in the House on the Ford offer for Muscle Shoals, I want to reassure you that the farmers are for the Ford offer, despite the efforts that have been made in this State recently to enlist the farmers' interest in the offer of the power companies and of the efforts to induce all of our Congressmen to support it.

I am informed that a number of business men over the State who have recently become active in behalf of the power companies' offer are stockholders in these companies.

* * * * * * *

Second, the very companies who are offering to buy, and say they can make cheap fertilizer, have persistently claimed that Ford could not manufacture fertilizer economically at Muscle Shoals, which is an indication of insincerity.

Unfortunately, the great masses who favor the acceptance of Ford's offer over any other that has been made do not write letters or send telegrams to their Congressmen. It is for these that I desire to speak, and if the acceptance of Ford's offer is a mistake, they must bear the responsibility, as they stand for it, and it has been aired before them for lo, these many months.

I sincerely appreciate the views expressed in your answer to a letter I wrote you some time ago.

With kindest regards,

TENNESSEE FARM BUREAU FEDERATION,
J. F. PORTER, President.

These expressions are typical of the sentiment prevailing in every walk of life among those closest to Muscle Shoals and most familiar with the situation.

It has been shown in the numerous meetings held and polls taken that the people are practically unanimous in favor of the acceptance of the Ford offer and opposed to any efforts or methods which may hazard same, and it further appears that practically the only ones in my State opposing the Ford offer and favoring destructive amendments are the officers, stockholders, and attorneys of the associated power companies. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Under the general leave granted to extend remarks on this subject, I insert the following telegram received from Maj. E. B. Stahlman, owner of the Nashville Banner:

NASHVILLE, TENN., March 11, 1924.

Hon. EWIN L. DAVIS, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

People of Tennessee and of South highly appreciate your unswerving loyalty in behalf of their interests and welfare of South in your support of Ford offer. As your fellow Tennesseean, I congratulate you upon great popular victory in House to which you contributed. Banner polls on Muscle Shoals closed last night. Vote, counted up to noon, stood: Ford, over 53,000; for power companies offer, 45; for Government ownership, 16.

E. B. STAHLMAN.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. BURTON. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is called for.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 41, noes 99.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 14. Since the manufacture, sale, and distribution of commercial fertilizers to farmers and other users thereof constitute one of the principal considerations of this offer, the company expressly agrees that, continuously throughout the lease period, except as it may be prevented by reconstruction of the plant itself, or by war, strikes, accidents, fires, or other causes beyond its control, it will manufacture nitrogen and other commercial fertilizers, mixed or unmixed and with or without filler, according to demand, at nitrate plant No. 2 or its equivalent, or at such other plant or plants adjacent or near thereto as it may construct, using the most economical source of power available. The annual production of these fertilizers shall have a nitrogen content of at least 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen, which is the present annual capacity of nitrate plant No. 2. If during the lease period said nitrate plant No. 2 is destroyed or damaged from any cause, the company agrees to restore such plant, within a reasonable time, to its former capacity and further agrees:

(a) To determine by research whether by means of electric-furnace methods and industrial chemistry there may be produced on a commercial scale fertilizer compounds of higher grade and at lower prices than farmers and other users of commercial fertilizers have in the past been able to obtain and to determine whether in a broad way the application of electricity and industrial chemistry may accomplish for the agricultural industry of the country what they have economically accomplished for other industries; and if so found and determined, to reasonably employ such improved methods.

(b) To maintain nitrate plant No. 2 in its present state of readiness or its equivalent for immediate operation in the manufacture of materials necessary in time of war for the production of explosives.

Mr. STEAGALL rose.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment from the committee. I am a member of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HILL of Maryland: Page 10, line 8, after the word "other," insert the word "such."

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this is a clause which was subject to much debate in the committee. I ask you to consider a part of the testimony in reference to this clause which appears on page 3563 of the RECORD, in which our colleague in the former House, Mr. Parker, of New Jersey, expressed the opinion as a very capable and experienced lawyer that the substitution of the words "causes beyond its control" for the words of the original Ford offer, which were "acts of Providence," did not mean what the original offer meant.

The provision as at present—and this is very important for the gentlemen who favor this bill—is as follows: The manufacture of fertilizer is not to be discontinued except as it may be prevented—and now I quote from the McKenzie bill—by reconstruction of the plant itself, or by war, strikes, accidents, fires, or other causes beyond its control.

It is a matter of very grave doubt as to what the words "other causes beyond its control" mean. It was stated to the committee that that might mean a number of things. It might mean that a heavily falling market would be a cause beyond the Ford corporation's control. It was agreed by everyone that the words "or other causes beyond its control" were intended to mean what are known in law as acts of God or acts of Providence.

Gentlemen, I propose the addition of the word "such." After the word "other" insert the word "such." The word "such" relates to the previous words "war, strikes, accidents," and "fire."

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. What would the gentleman say to the use of the phrase "like causes beyond its control"?

Mr. HILL of Maryland. I think it is good, but immaterial whether you use the word "such" or the word "like." But I think there should be, in the interest of the protection of the users of fertilizers, some such amendment as this in order to guarantee absolute certainty as to what this means. The original Ford offer contained the words "acts of Providence," but they were changed to the words "or other causes beyond its control."

Mr. WRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Yes.

Mr. WRIGHT. Does not the gentleman recognize that under the legal construction of these phrases the words "causes beyond its control" are more binding than the words "acts of Providence"?

Mr. HILL of Maryland. There is so much confusion that I can not hear the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. WRIGHT. Does not the gentleman understand that according to the legal definition and construction placed upon these words—words which are usually used in contracts—the words "causes beyond its control" are more binding upon the obligor than the term "acts of Providence"?

Mr. HILL of Maryland. I will say to the gentleman that is not my understanding, and as I read them they are not as binding, and that is borne out by the statements which were made by insurance men and others before the committee.

Mr. WRIGHT. Then I will say for the information of the gentleman that what I have said is true, and he will find it is true if he will examine the definitions and legal construction placed upon such words.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. I will say to the gentleman that as a good lawyer he knows that we are not able to say anything is "true" in law, but it depends upon what the court says.

Mr. WRIGHT. Then I will say that is what the court says.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. No court has yet passed on the bill and no court has "said" as yet. There should be in the bill absolutely clear language which will mean "acts of Providence."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I simply wish to say that there are a number of amendments to be offered to this section, and they will take some little time. I want to hurry along, because we are going to finish this bill to-night and are going to vote on it. [Applause.]

I want to say, furthermore, that the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland is one of those fine-spun, hair-splitting propositions that are raised by lawyers. This matter was fought out and worked out in the committee, and we decided that the language in the bill is stronger than any other language that can be included in the bill, and therefore I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WILLIAMS of Michigan: Page 10, line 9, after the word "will," strike out the words "manufacture nitrogen and other commercial fertilizers, mixed or unmixed, and with or without filler, according to demand," and insert in lieu thereof the words "each year manufacture nitrogen and other commercial fertilizers, mixed or unmixed, and with or without filler, containing in the aggregate at least the amount of fixed nitrogen hereinafter stated, and supply and offer the same for sale in accordance with the demand that may from time to time exist for the various kinds of fertilizer, whether mixed or unmixed, and with or without filler."

Mr. WILLIAMS of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I am strongly for the Ford proposal. [Applause.] I have consistently voted against every amendment offered which has had the purpose of changing the proposed contract as worked out between the representatives of the Government and Mr. Ford. I feel, however, that there is some ambiguity in this part of section 14, which should be cleared up. I think the words "according to demand"—which have been by some gentlemen construed as meaning that if the cost of producing fertilizer in this plant were very large there might not be any demand, and, therefore, Mr. Ford might be excused from making fertilizer—should be changed, and I think the amendment I have offered clears up any ambiguity there might be about that.

I desire also to have appear in this portion of section 14—reciting that the manufacture of fertilizer is one of the principal considerations for this contract—a definite and affirmative agreement upon the part of Mr. Ford to do the things contemplated by this arrangement. [Applause.]

Gentlemen, I wonder whether we realize what Mr. Ford has undertaken to do in connection with this contract? Those of us living in Michigan have great confidence in the business ability of Mr. Ford and in his great organization. [Applause.] And yet how many gentlemen are there upon the floor of this House who, if they stood in Mr. Ford's position, would be willing to undertake the great obligations imposed upon him by this contract? I venture the assertion that there is not a single one here who would be willing to do it, but he is willing to do it notwithstanding the fact that his estate will be subject to a very large inheritance tax, and 40 per cent was recently proposed by this House, which would take $300,000,000 or $400,000,000 out of his estate.

Now, Mr. Ford undertakes to make fertilizer for a period of 100 years in a vast quantity.

It has been stated here that this amount of fertilizer is not very great, but when we realize that it provides for an amount of nitrate that will make 2,000,000 tons of ordinary commercial fertilizer per year then we realize that means that if we load cars to the extent of 100,000 pounds to a car that Mr. Ford agrees continuously each year for a hundred years to produce 40,000 carloads of fertilizer. Why, gentlemen, that is equivalent to 400 freight trains containing 100 cars each.

Under this contract Mr. Ford agrees to produce such a quantity of nitrates as will force him and his successors to take advantage of every development of science. He will be compelled to meet competition in this field, both foreign and domestic. To make a success of the matter it will be incumbent upon him at all times to have such an efficient and completely modernized plant and such large production as to enable him to sell at a sufficiently low price to meet this competition. Furthermore, the amount to be produced, in order to insure the success of the plant, will naturally have to be much in excess of the amount of nitrates stipulated in the contract. Large production, as no one knows better than Mr. Ford himself, is one of the most important elements in bringing about a low cost.

It is quite apparent that there are but few, if any, Members of this House who would be willing to vote to accept the proposal of the allied power companies. No one has brought to the attention of the House any proposal which could be seriously considered as preferable to the offer of Mr. Ford. Years have elapsed since this matter has been first publicly discussed. There is then but only one alternative, so far as we are presently advised, if the Government is not authorized to accept the offer of Mr. Ford, and that is Government operation. This alternative is one which, in my judgment, should not be entered upon.

During the debate reference was made to the possible earnings under Government operation. I venture the assertion, based upon our past experiences, that the losses from the operation of such a great enterprise, if the plans of Mr. Ford were to be at all followed by the Government, would amount to a colossal sum during the 100 years contemplated.

Those who are urging that an arrangement should only be entered into within the terms and under the meaning of the water power act, and who urge that the making of this arrangement with Mr. Ford would tend to change our national policy as represented by that act, entirely overlook, it seems to me, the fact that Mr. Ford, in assuming the great responsibilities imposed upon him under this bill with reference to the manufacture of nitrates, will be doing something far different than what is contemplated in an ordinary license for the production of power under the water power act. This guaranty as to the manufacture of nitrates and the fact that in the event of war we would have this great efficient and modern plant immediately at the disposal of the Government are features which make this arrangement distinctly unique and a great benefit to the public.

We should not hesitate to vote for this bill. We should be glad of the fact that Mr. Ford is willing to take this great perplexing problem off the hands of the Government and is willing to place back of his agreement the responsibility represented by his large fortune. No one but a man of great vision and courage and a high regard for public interest would be willing to do what he has proposed. [Applause.]

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman wish to be heard on this amendment?

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Yes; I would like to be heard.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, here is an occasion where I may get an opportunity to vote for this bill in behalf of the Ford proposition. I may vote for it anyhow; but, oh, I can vote for it so much more graciously if you will adopt this amendment. I occupy a peculiar position, my friends. All my life long I have been preaching the gospel of Government ownership of the waters of the rivers of our country. In my own State I see the people gagged, bound, and delivered year after year by electricity trusts and coal trusts, simply because we have fixed our State constitution in a manner so that the people may not take advantage of the wonderful asset which is theirs in the swiftly flowing rivers in Nebraska. We have two rivers there more regularly flowing than any rivers ever gauged by any reliable government in all the world, and yet we can not use them because we have been handicapped and hamstrung by a constitution which forbids the people from exercising the right to raise money with which to build water-power plants for the use of the people. Do you know that in Nebraska there is not a pound of coal underneath the surface of the earth, and yet I am a believer in the goodness of God. He did not give us any coal out there, but He gave us a wonderful substitute, and if only we might harness the waters in those wonderful rivers and set them to the task of generating electric energy and furnishing it to the people, we might light and heat every home on the farms and in the cities and the towns. We might turn all the wheels of all the stationary machinery in the State, and then we might have enough electricity left to cook all the food for all the people, and yet we can not do it. We could have it all at a cost so low that the people of my prairie State would not care to burn coal, even if they could get it for a dollar a ton. This great plant down here at Muscle Shoals would do for all that vast section surrounding it what we might do if we could harness the waters in the rivers of Nebraska, but our State can not harness those waters and our Government seems desperately slow about harnessing the waters at Muscle Shoals. Now, what am I going to do as an advocate of Government ownership and operation of such an asset? I have been down in this country for three different winters. I have discovered millions of acres of untilled land, and they tell me that the land is idle because the Fertilizer Trust will not permit them to buy fertilizer at a price at which they will feel justified in tilling the land. Now, will this Ford proposition give those people opportunity to get fertilizer at reasonable rates quicker than we dare hope to get it through Government operation? Oh, I do not know. I want to do that which is best for the people most involved.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BURTON) there were—ayes 72, noes 103.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HULL of Iowa: Page 11, line 8, after the word "numbered," insert "one and."

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this amendment is proposed in order that you might understand what you are doing in this bill. In the first place, you are permitting the destruction of the best means of securing fertilizer. You are permitting the destruction of plant No. 1. I listened to the hearings when we had hearings on this bill, and some gentlemen seem not to be able to understand why it was that at one time I was an enthusiastic supporter of the Ford proposition and now oppose this bill. I want to tell you that one of the first things that shocked me was when Mr. Mayo, the engineer who was sent here by Mr. Ford, told us that he intended to take plant No. 1 and convert it into an automobile factory. I thought that was unheard of—a great plant built for national defense, and yet they were going to convert it into an automobile factory. Then I started to investigate, and the more I have investigated the more confirmed I have become in the belief that it is a tremendous blunder to permit such a thing. Not only is it the cheapest process for the manufacture of nitrates, so necessary in war, but it is the cheapest process for the manufacture of the compounds that go to make fertilizer. There is not one line of testimony by any expert that shows you can use plant No. 2 and manufacture fixed nitrogen as a commercial fertilizer. Every one of the experts, both the Government experts and the private individuals who have come before our committee, has told us that all the advance in the art that they are making to-day is that the Haber process is the one hope of the world for the production of food, and yet you gentlemen are permitting in this bill the destruction of the thing that is essential for your children in the next generation.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, the main proposition in which the friends of this measure are interested is that the original purposes for which the large expenditure of Government funds was entered upon in the development of Muscle Shoals shall be carried out. The two chief purposes originally in view were the manufacture of explosives for national defense and the manufacture of fertilizers for the development of agriculture. We must not lose sight of the accomplishment of these ends. The amendment under consideration would tie the hands of Mr. Ford by committing him to various and sundry methods to be employed in the production of fertilizers. It is obvious that he could not make as good offer under such provisions as he can when we release him as to details and allow him, as the bill provides to manufacture fertilizers, mixed and unmixed, to meet the public demand for these materials. That is what will be accomplished under the bill without amendment. We are not concerned with the methods to be employed nor any details governing the work to be done. The result is what we are after.

I do not think the amendment now before us would help the bill; but even if I did think so, as a friend of the measure I should have to oppose it. I could not support an amendment which might endanger the whole undertaking. We must not overlook the fact that if we fail to avail ourselves of the opportunity now at hand we shall find ourselves in a situation where the only thing left us will be Government operation of this property and the completion of the undertaking at Government expense. I should regret exceedingly to have the matter take that course. We must remember that no Member of this House advocates the acceptance of any offer for private development other than that of Mr. Ford. That is the situation that confronts us after five years of effort on the part of the War Department to secure a more desirable bid, and after all the remarkable efforts of those opposed to the acceptance of the Ford offer to defeat its acceptance. I think it is fair to say that nothing has been left undone to present some plan that would command sufficient support to defeat his offer. Surely, no one would expect the opponents of the Ford offer to come forward with a better bid after his offer has been rejected. It is misleading to contend that the Government is about to turn over to Mr. Ford $107,000,000 worth of property for $5,000,000. His offer was to purchase nitrate plant No. 1, nitrate plant No. 2, the Waco Quarry and transmission line, and the Gorgas plant for $5,000,000 cash and other obligations set forth in his contract. The investment of the Government is $85,000,000 on the basis of war-time construction cost. But this investment must be lost unless the Government spends an additional amount of $84,000,000 and $25,000,000 for the construction of Dam No. 3, which must be built if enough power is to be produced to manufacture fertilizers in sufficient amounts to meet the demand.

If the Government is to continue the development of this property and undertake to carry out the program outlined in the Ford contract, it is estimated that the various expenditures necessary will run the total to $191,000,000, which does not include the construction of Dam No. 3, estimated to cost $25,000,000. If we accept the Ford offer, the Government will have to expend only $50,000,000 to complete the Wilson Dam and construct Dam No. 3. This would make the total Government expenditure only $157,000,000. The offer of Mr. Ford proposes to maintain the power houses and all equipment and return them unimpaired at the end of the lease. He contracts to pay $55,000,000 annually for maintenance, repairs, and operation of the dams. The offer is to pay $200,000 annually as rent alone for Dam No. 2 for the first six years, and after that 4 per cent interest on all funds expended for the completion of the dam, power house, machinery, and acquirement of land and flowage, and to pay $160,000 annually as rent for Dam No. 3 the first three years, and after that 4 per cent interest on the total cost of construction, power house, machinery, and purchase of lands and flowage rights. The offer embraces an agreement to establish a sinking fund by the payment of $23,723 semiannually, which, if compounded at 4 per cent, is estimated to return $49,071,935. The offer further provides that 200 horsepower for operating locks at Dam No. 2 and 100 horsepower for locks at Dam No. 3, which, according to the estimates, would save the Government $35,000 to $85,000 annually. The contract provides that not less than 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen shall be manufactured at nitrate plant No. 2 for a period of 100 years; or the manufacture of fertilizers to the full capacity of nitrate plant No. 2 at a profit not to exceed 8 per cent on actual cost of production and to supply such fertilizers, mixed or unmixed, according to demand. The manufacture of mixed fertilizers will necessitate the construction of a phosphoric-acid plant by Mr. Ford, which, it is estimated, will cost $15,000,000.

The contract provides for the employment of all improved methods for the manufacture of fertilizers that may be found successful. The contract also provides that nitrate plant No. 2 shall be kept at all times in up-to-date operating condition for the use of the Government in event of war.

It is estimated that the annual expenditure of the farmers of America for fertilizers is not less than $300,000,000. It is insisted on good authority that the use of Muscle Shoals makes it practicable to reduce the cost of fertilizers to our people 50 per cent. During the year just passed the consumers of America imported 896,998 long tons of nitrate of soda. We paid the Chilean Government a tax amounting to $11,239,384.94. This tax alone amounts to an interest rate of more than 5 per cent on the total cost necessary to complete the development of Muscle Shoals for the successful manufacture of fertilizers.

Mr. Chairman, let us not forget that it was the offer of Henry Ford for Muscle Shoals that breathed into this great project the breath of life when we were being told on every hand when the war ended that this vast property would have to be junked and that the large sums expended for its development would have to be charged off as part of the cost of war. It was this offer more than anything else that aroused public interest and brought a realization of the value of this vast asset of the Nation. Everyone recognizes now that we should lose no time in taking proper steps to insure the completion of this great program of development. No other offer having been made which any Member of Congress is now willing to support, the only question that remains to be settled is whether this important work shall be carried out by the Government or intrusted to Mr. Ford. For my part I think it most fortunate that the Government has an opportunity to intrust the work to private hands with reasonable assurance that it will be successfully handled for the accomplishment of the original purposes of national defense and the promotion of agriculture.

The people have confidence in the ability of Mr. Ford as an industrial leader as well as in his character, and the contract which it is proposed we shall accept is binding not alone upon the corporation which he is to organize with a capital of $10,000,000 but upon him, his heirs, and his vast estate. The people of Alabama are almost of one mind in favor of the acceptance of the Ford offer. The farmers of Alabama, who have suffered so much in recent years from the ravages of the boll weevil, face an accentuated need for the employment of modern methods of cultivation and intense fertilization. They believe that the acceptance of the Ford offer presents the only hope of the immediate future for the solution of the fertilizer problem, which is inseparably connected with the permanent prosperity and independence of agriculture. This view is shared by the farmers of the whole country. It is worthy of consideration that the people of Alabama have such faith in this citizen of a distant State, this man of different environment, one whose political affiliations are entirely at variance with theirs, a man of vast wealth, toward whom we are told the plain people cherish envy. Yet the masses in Alabama, the farmers and laboring people everywhere who earn their living by honest toil, have turned to Henry Ford as the one man to undertake the development of these great resources which a wise Providence has placed in our hands. I am glad to give my support to this bill and to stand with the delegation from Alabama, every Member of which, including the two distinguished Senators from our State, are enthusiastic in support of the Ford offer. [Applause.]

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves that all debate on this amendment be now closed.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HULL of Iowa) there were—ayes 24, noes 64.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, lines 10 and 11, after the word "unmixed," in line 10, and after the word "filler," in line 11, strike out the commas.

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to make an argument, but simply to explain the purpose of this amendment. The phrase "according to demand" has been given two interpretations or applications in the course of this debate, some holding that it means Mr. Ford will manufacture according to demand and others holding that the nitrates which he will manufacture will be mixed or unmixed according to demand. The fact that the application of this phrase is not clear is evidenced by the fact that the sentence in which it occurs is interpreted in both ways in the course of this debate. The purpose of this amendment is to make it clear so that the phrase "according to demand" will not be separated from the phrase it is intended to qualify by the presence of the commas, which I propose to strike out. If we strike out the comma after the word "unmixed" and after the word "filler," then it will make the clause hang together. I believe that was what was intended when the bill was written, because at the beginning of this section it declares "since the manufacture of, the sale and distribution of, commercial fertilizers the farmers and other users thereof constitute one of the principal considerations of this offer the company expressly agrees that continuously throughout the leased period," and so forth, "it will manufacture nitrogen and commercial fertilizers, mixed or unmixed, and with or without filler, according to demand," and so forth.

If we strike out the two commas, the other interpretation can not be put on the phrase.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I have great respect for the ability of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but I wish to say to the Members of this House that this particular provision, and particularly the exact spot in which to put the commas, gave the committee a great deal of trouble. We finally agreed with the representatives of the farm organizations of the United States, who are particularly interested in this section and the following section, that as the bill is written it provides just what they want in the bill.

Mr. TEMPLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. TEMPLE. Is not the gentleman convinced that it does not when one construes it one way and one another?

Mr. McKENZIE. I understand that is true.

Mr. TEMPLE. The gentleman does not want to go to the court that way.

Mr. McKENZIE. It is sometimes pretty difficult for two lawyers even to determine or agree where a comma shall be placed. We finally determined that in the committee, and I think it is well enough to let the bill be as it stands.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What is the gentleman's interpretation?

Mr. McKENZIE. My interpretation is that the bill as written will carry out the purposes for which it is intended. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURTNESS. What do the words "mixed or unmixed" modify, in the gentleman's opinion?

Mr. McKENZIE. Fertilizer.

Mr. BURTNESS. And they have no bearing upon the manufacture of it?

Mr. McKENZIE. Not at all.

Mr. BURTNESS. What do the words "according to demand" modify?

Mr. McKENZIE. They mean they shall manufacture in either mixed or unmixed form as the demand of the farmers requires.

Mr. BURTNESS. So the qualification is to the nature of the fertilizer and not with reference to the amount to be manufactured?

Mr. McKENZIE. The amount is fixed below 40,000 tons.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Does not the gentleman remember that Mr. Mayo said it might mean either quantity or quality?

Mr. McKENZIE. I do not remember all that Mr. Mayo said, I am frank to say. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate upon this amendment do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves that debate upon this amendment do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JAMES) there were—ayes 53, noes 76.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BEGG: Page 11, line 11, after the word "explosives," strike out the period and insert a semicolon and add the following: "Provided, That if Henry Ford, his heirs, successors, or assigns, or the 'company' so to be organized, its successors or assigns, fail for two consecutive years, unless prevented by the action of the Government of the United States in the exercise of its rights under section 16 of this bill, to manufacture annually 40,000 tons or more of fixed nitrogen for exclusive use as fertilizer, then, and in that event, every contract of sale or lease made by the said United States with said Henry Ford, his heirs, successors, or assigns, or with said 'company' named in section 1, its successors, or assigns, shall, at the option of the United States, be void, such option to be exercised by Executive proclamation, and all property, real or personal, leases, rights, and other privileges held by any of the above-named persons at said Muscle Shoals shall revert to and become the property of the Government of the United States. The conditions herein provided shall become operative and in full force on and after two years from the date when structures and equipment of a capacity of 100,000 horsepower are constructed and installed and ready for service.

"This provision is intended and shall be construed as merely supplemental to all other rights and remedies of the United States as contained herein, and in no sense as an impairment or abridgment of such other rights and remedies of the United States, but as additional thereto, nor is this provision intended, nor shall it be construed, to in any way change or modify any of the promises, undertakings, and obligations assumed by and imposed on Henry Ford, his heirs, representatives, and assigns, and the company to be incorporated by him, its successors and assigns, but they are to be held bound to the same strict and faithful performance of every promise, undertaking, and obligation set out in this bill just as fully as they would be in the absence of this provision."

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the other day when I presented my amendment for information only the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN] practically stated that he would accept it. The next morning he called me up and stated that he would like to have me overcome the objection made by the gentleman from Arkansas and the gentleman from South Carolina, namely, that I would not in any way by my amendment curtail any rights or any of the actions that the Government now has under the bill. I think I have done that, and I believe and hope that I have met the objections of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN] as well as all other members of the committee in such a way as to make it possible to adopt this amendment. My purpose in introducing this amendment is not to change the bill in any particular, but it is to establish beyond any question of doubt the judgment that the United States Government could get in case Henry Ford or the company to be organized by him defaulted in the manufacture of fertilizer.

I believe that if this amendment is written into this bill, and if in 50 years from this date the company fails to manufacture the minimum amount of 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen for use in commercial fertilizer, then the only action the Government of the United States has to establish is to go into court and prove the defalcation in the manufacture of nitrogen to the extent of 40,000 tons. If that is done, we do not get a judgment for $10,000, or anything, but we get a reversion of all of the property. A good many of the gentlemen for whom I have great respect have argued that the bill is drawn so as to give the Government that right to go into an equity court and get a reversion. You gentlemen who are lawyers know that without a specific reason for reversion it is a difficult proposition to get in a court of equity, and in a court of law you can hardly ever get it. The United States Government is giving away enough in this proposition, in return for which it expects to get a minimum of 40,000 tons of nitrogen for use in commercial fertilizer; so that we ought to have the right to tie them up absolutely tight, so that in the event they default in 20 years, or 70 years, in the specific performance of furnishing fertilizer for the farmer, the great American people will be entitled to that property back for use as may seem wise at that particular time.

Someone has questioned why I have made it over a period of two years. That is easily answered. I want to be absolutely fair. If you made it only one year, suppose they had an explosion in the plant and he could not build for a year; one year would go by without the manufacture of 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen, in which case he would be liable for reversion. In making it two years I admit that technically he can manufacture one year and lie idle one year, and so on; but if he does that the United States has recourse for damages under other sections of the bill, and is not withheld from any action even to going into a court of equity. If he defaults for two consecutive years for any reason other than war or the Government's interference, then the only requirement of the Government to get the property back is to go into a court and prove failure to manufacture for sale 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen per year.

I believe that is all that is necessary. Everybody has had an opportunity to study this amendment, and I believe that it safeguards the rights of the Government, provides a specific reversion clause, and in no wise damages the contract in so far as Mr. Ford or his company are concerned, if they really intend to manufacture fertilizer.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WINGO to the amendment offered by Mr. BEGG: Insert, after the word "fertilizer," in line 6 of said amendment, the following words: "or failure to comply with any of the other conditions and agreements set out in this act."

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the temper of the committee, and therefore realize that I am flying in the face of that Biblical injunction set out in the sixth verse of the seventh chapter of the Gospel according to St. Matthew, but I am not responsible to Mr. Worthington or to Mr. Ford, both of whom I respect, or to the Alabama Power Co., or to anyone else except my God and my country. [Applause.]

I am one of those who have felt that the wisest thing to do from the standpoint of the public is to put this great proposition in the hands of Ford, whose genius I admire, and whose character I respect. At all times I have said, gentlemen, that the expectancy of the life of Henry Ford was only 11 years, that he would not live 100 years, the term of this contract, and that the right to recapture and reenter this property upon default by his company after Henry Ford is dead and gone should be preserved by the American Congress, and if we did not do so we would be derelict in our duty. Now, the gentleman from Ohio has met some of the contentions I raised the other day. If the gentleman will accept the amendment I have offered, it will not meet all of my objections, but it will, at least, give some protection 25 or 30 years from now when human nature asserts itself, as it has the right to assert itself, in the selfish natural interest of the corporation. Then in that hour when Henry Ford is dead and gone if they do not comply, not alone with the fertilizer agreement but with that agreement which is important to the national security, to keep this plant in a state of readiness for immediate operation for materials necessary in time of war and for the production of explosives the Government can step in and recapture the plant. That is necessary. If they fail to comply with either one of those major agreements, we ought to have the right to recapture. Now, gentlemen, I believe it would be a great deal better, and I have prepared an amendment if my amendment is not accepted, to come in as a separate section at the end of the bill, which is to this effect:

The continuous compliance by the company with each and every substantial requirement of this act, except as it may be prevented by reconstruction of the plant itself, or by war, strikes, accidents, fires, or other causes beyond its control, shall constitute conditions subsequent upon which the right of the company shall depend; and a failure to meet any of such material conditions shall give the United States, in addition to any other rights it may have, the right to declare the lease forfeited and be entitled to reenter and recapture the properties covered by the contracts and leases.

Now, gentlemen, why do I say it is necessary to go further than the gentleman from Ohio goes? It is necessary, as you know, you lawyers, who are familiar with the decisions upon this question, especially with the more recent decision involving the rights of the State of South Carolina, where the Supreme Court of the United States decided against the right of the State to recapture a canal. Why? Because the legislature in one small provision of the law put in a recapture clause and did not put such a provision on any other requirement of the grant, and so the Supreme Court of the United States overruled the State courts and restated an old rule that is absolutely clear to every lawyer who is familiar with it, but I have not time to read the decisions.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I can not. I have notice that they are going to run through and trust to the Senate to correct our neglect, so I must utilize as much time and proceed as rapidly as possible. I desire to refer you to a decision of the Supreme Court, volume 261, the case of the Columbia Railway, Gas & Electric Co. against the State of South Carolina, and on this point, if you adopt the gentleman's amendment, it destroys the right of the Government to recapture upon the failure to comply with any other of the material agreements than the fertilizer agreement. Now, let us see.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WINGO. I ask that I may have an additional five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to proceed for an additional five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WINGO. This decision, page 250, reads:

The proviso for a forfeiture in the one case is at least strongly persuasive of an intention not to impose it in other cases not so qualified. When, in addition to this, we consider all the circumstances, including the fact that the sale to the defendant was absolute and for a valuable consideration, that there are no express terms creating a condition, no clause of reentry, nor words of any sort indicating such purpose, the conclusion is unavoidable that the obligation in question is a covenant and not a condition subsequent. (Board of Commissioners v. Young, 59 Fed. 96; opinion by Judge, afterwards Justice, Lurton.) We quote from page 105:

> "That the grantor ever contemplated a reverter is not to be presumed, in the light of the presence of absolute words of conveyance and quitclaim and the absence of any provision for a reverter or reentry."

The courts have time and again held it is not to be presumed the grantor has the right of reversion upon default of the grantee in compliance with an agreement.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WINGO. I will.

Mr. BEGG. I want to ask in what way could this company default other than to make fertilizer except by the furnishing of power and operating the dam——

Mr. WINGO. But——

Mr. BEGG. Let me finish the question. If there is a default in furnishing the power, does not the Government have the right to be protected under the following sections?

If they defaulted in the furnishing of power—and I believe that is the only additional way they could default—does not the Government have the right of damage under a following section?

Mr. WINGO. My friend overlooks the other major provisions of the bill. Furnishing power is not the only one. The paragraphs (a) and (b) of section 14, I think, are just as important to the country as that of furnishing power for the dam. In other words, there are two major propositions in this act. One is major from the standpoint of the public or the Government, and the other is major from the standpoint of the farmer. There are two major propositions: One is to maintain this plant down there, as expressed in subdivision (b), on page 11—to maintain nitrate plant No. 2 in its present state of readiness, or its equivalent, for immediate operation in the manufacture of materials necessary in time of war for the production of explosives.

Is not that the major agreement that the general public is interested in? The next major agreement, in which the farmers are interested, is the fertilizer proposition. I am not going to sit here and simply be content to take a recapture provision on that one provision, because I represent the farmers, and then overlook the national defense and the security of my Government in maintaining and using this plant in time of war.

Oh, the gentleman says that sovereignty can go and sue for damages. Just what damages can we allege and prove? The gentleman should read the decisions on that proposition. It is necessary to put in my amendment because the gentleman, by the very words of his amendment, specifically provides almost in exact language that all the other conditions of the law shall be deemed to be covenants and not conditions subsequent.

Read the last paragraph of the Begg amendment; and, in the light of the language used, if you do not adopt my amendment, when the court rules on this question it would have to overrule all other decisions if it did not say that the only way the Government could recapture this plant was by proving failure to manufacture a small amount of nitrate for fertilizer.

I say to you that Henry Ford is willing to do this, because I believe he is sincere. He is willing for the Government to recapture this property if selfish interests in his corporation after his death seek to violate the agreement he made in good faith. I challenge any man to question the good faith of Ford by saying he will not accept this provision to safeguard the rights of the Government by requiring his successors to keep the promise he has made. [Applause.]

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. I rise in opposition to the amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington is recognized.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, much of the phraseology of this paragraph was prepared by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WRIGHT] and myself. There were two things we tried to make positively sure in this paragraph. One of them is the steady flow of fertilizer for peace purposes in peace times and the other is the constant readiness of the plant to produce ammonia nitrate in war time.

Now, the amendment embodies two things. Both of them are very dangerous. One is a forfeiture clause and the other is a rule of construction. Any man that has had anything to do with large and substantial investments, large matters of concern, knows that those are two things always to be avoided—a forfeiture clause and a rule of judicial construction. The provisions of the bill provide for an annual production of 40,000 tons of nitrogen content for fertilizer in time of peace; that is, 40,000 tons every year—a yearly flow. The amendment of the gentleman from Ohio provides for the production of fertilizer every other year if Mr. Ford or the lessees desires to so manufacture it. You will notice the phraseology of this section, that it shall be annually manufactured.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. For a short question. I do not want a speech.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I agree with the gentleman. I want to call attention to the language on page 10:

> The annual production of these fertilizers shall have a nitrogen content of at least 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen.

How can there be any doubt but that that means annual manufacture?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Then why can there be any query about two years when it will not be manufactured?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. What is the use of putting in there language about manufacturing it every other year if the paragraph already provides for manufacturing it every year?

Mr. BEGG. The reason is that that puts in a forfeiture clause in case he fails to manufacture for two years.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Apparently the gentleman wants to kill the bill.

Mr. BEGG. I have been standing here in good faith attempting to perfect the bill.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Your amendment is intended to muddy the water.

Mr. BEGG. In the bill you provide no recourse on the part of the United States in case he fails.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Yes.

Mr. LOZIER. Under the bill as reported it requires the production of 40,000 tons of fertilizer annually for a hundred years. Under the terms of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio the Ford Co. can comply with the contract by manufacturing only half of that amount—that is, by manufacturing 40,000 tons every other year—and under the Begg amendment the Government would be "hog tied," because it only allows a forfeiture in the event of the company failing for "two consecutive years" to supply annually the required 40,000 tons.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. If they are to manufacture annually 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen, any court on God's earth knows what you mean and any man knows what you mean. When you say this is an annual production, any man or any court knows what you mean. When it says plant No. 2 shall be kept in readiness for the production of war-time material, any court knows what you mean and we know what is meant. Now, if you are going to look with favor upon this lease to Mr. Ford and the sale to Mr. Ford, take the terms of the bill, gentlemen; and if you are going to knock it on the head, knock it on the head at once and do not try to bleed it to death by giving it a dozen different stabs in different parts of the bill.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. As I understand the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, he imposes the penalty of forfeiture in case there is no manufacture. What forfeiture would there be in case the Begg amendment is not adopted?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. I do not know; and there is no lawyer who knows until he knows the character of the violation of the contract. You can not tell what remedy to apply, either in law or in equity, until you know the character of the violation.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the gentlemen will turn to section 18, they will find all the remedies that could possibly be granted.

Mr. COLLINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Yes.

Mr. COLLINS. As a legal proposition, has the Government sufficient interest to enforce specific performance under the provisions of this section?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. I suppose so. I suppose specific performance, a mandatory injunction, or whatever you might call it, could be enforced. There are an infinite number of remedies.

The only thing I am opposed to, gentlemen, is to write into the bill, first, a forfeiture, which is a dangerous thing and to be avoided always; and, second, what is more dangerous, making a rule of judicial construction in a piece of legislation.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. LOZIER as a substitute to the amendment offered by Mr. BEGG: Page 11, line 11, after the word "explosives," strike out the period and insert a semicolon and add the following: "Provided, That if Henry Ford, his heirs, successors, or assigns, or the company so to be organized, its successors or assigns, fail to manufacture annually not less than 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen"——

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Chairman, the rest of the language is the same as the last part of the Begg amendment offered Thursday, March 6, but very different from the amended Begg amendment offered to-day. As I will preface my remarks by reading my substitute, I ask unanimous consent that the remaining portion thereof be not read by the Clerk at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the rest of the substitute will not be read.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Chairman, my substitute is as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. LOZIER: Page 11, line 11, after the word "explosives," strike out the period and insert a semicolon and add the following: "Provided, That if Henry Ford, his heirs, successors, or assigns, or the 'company' so to be organized, its successors or assigns, fail to manufacture annually not less than 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen for exclusive use as fertilizer, then, and in that event, every contract of sale or lease made by the said United States with said Henry Ford, his heirs, successors, or assigns, or with said 'company' named in section 1, its successors or assigns, shall be void, and all property, real or personal, leases, rights, and other privileges held by any of the above-named persons at said Muscle Shoals shall revert to and become the property of the Government of the United States. No contracts shall be entered into pursuant to the provisions hereof unless they embody as a part thereof these provisions. The conditions herein provided shall become operative on and after six years from the date such contracts are entered into."

The Begg amendment was offered Thursday; it was discussed then and yesterday. Since very serious objections to that amendment were pointed out in debate, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] has denatured and emasculated the first part of his amendment, and he now presents it in a modified form, less vicious than in its original form, but nevertheless highly objectionable in that it weakens the bill very materially and waives the right of the Government to invoke a forfeiture for failure to produce 40,000 tons of fertilizer each and every year. The amendment is not in the interest of the farmer nor in the interest of the Government.

In rewriting the forfeiture clause, the gentleman from Ohio has added a provision which, if adopted, will absolutely destroy the bill. I refer to the provision authorizing the President, by Executive proclamation, to declare the contract null and void for failure or alleged failure to comply with the contract. This is a dangerous and vicious provision, and by no process of reason or logic can its inclusion in this bill be justified. It, in effect, gives a President more power than was ever conferred by any legislative act or by the Federal Constitution—power to arbitrarily cancel a contract and confiscate property worth millions of dollars, because under this language the courts are not permitted to determine whether or not there has been a breach of the contract, but the President is made judge and jury to determine a fact and decree forfeiture.

Neither the Ford Co. nor any other group of sensible men would accept a contract containing this provision. I say that if the Ford Co. fails to comply with its contract in a substantial particular, then the Government should have the right and power to rescind the contract and recapture or recover possession of the property. But the question as to whether or not there has been a violation of the contract should not be left to the President or any other one person, but should be determined by the courts.

Yesterday I warned the House that the first Begg amendment was a vicious and dangerous provision, and to-day I am telling you again that the last or amended Begg amendment, especially the last part of it with reference to the power of the President, is tenfold more vicious than the original amendment. I ask you to carefully read the Begg amendment now pending, and if you do this you will undoubtedly vote to reject it.

Under the bill as it came from the committee the Ford Co. is obligated to produce for the use of the American farmers "annually" a supply of fertilizer having a fixed nitrogen content of at least 40,000 tons. This language means that quantity must be produced each and every year, and under the bill as it now stands a forfeiture can be invoked for a substantial and persistent failure to comply with this very essential provision of the contract.

This right of forfeiture accrues to the Government under the well-established law of the land, and inevitably follows, if the provisions of this contract are fairly construed and enforced.

Under the bill as it came from the committee, amended as proposed by my substitute, if the Ford Co. fails for any one year to supply the required amount of fertilizer, with the amount of fixed-nitrogen content mentioned in the contract, such failure will be a violation of the contract in a very substantial particular and will justify proceedings by the Government to vitiate the contract and recover possession of the Muscle Shoals property.

The bill as reported by the committee is much stronger than it will be should the Begg amendment be adopted. The first amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio provided for a forfeiture only after the Ford Co. had failed for "three consecutive years" to manufacture 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen annually. This would have allowed the Ford Co. to skip two years out of three, four years out of six, six years out of nine, and so so. In other words, the original Begg amendment provided for a forfeiture and recovery of the property only after there had been a failure for "three consecutive years" to manufacture 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen fertilizer annually. This would have reduced the maximum amount required of the Ford Co. by two-thirds, and would only require the production of the 40,000 tons one year out of every three.

If the original Begg amendment had been adopted, let us see how it would have worked: Mr. Ford or his company could refuse to produce a single pound of fertilizer for two years in succession, and then on the third year produce 40,000 tons; then skip two more years without producing any fertilizer, and on the sixth year produce 40,000 tons; in the six-year period he has not produced annually 40,000 tons, but has only produced 80,000 tons in the six years instead of 240,000, or 40,000 tons annually; but under the original Begg amendment the Government would be "hog tied" and unable to forfeit the contract, because the failure had not been for "three consecutive years"; mark the expression, "for three consecutive years." The Ford company could point to the Begg amendment and say, "yes; it is true, we have only produced 40,000 tons in three years, and only 80,000 tons in six years, but what are you going to do about it, for we have not failed 'for three consecutive years,' and Congress has said by this amendment that there can be no forfeiture for failure to comply with the contract unless such failure continued for 'three consecutive years.'" And this is the amendment the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN] "swallowed raw" on the floor of the House day before yesterday, as soon as it was presented, without its effects being considered, and, in the face of a threat by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG], to vote against the bill unless the House accepts his amendment. I believe these gentlemen now realize the vice of the Begg amendment and will vote to reject it when the final vote is taken.

Now, the bill as reported by the committee required the Ford Co. to produce for the American farmers at least 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen annually, or 4,000,000 tons in the lease period of 100 years. The original Begg amendment would have permitted an evasion of this duty and would have left the Government in a position where it could not have invoked a forfeiture if the Ford Co. produced only one-third of that quantity, provided the company produced 40,000 tons every third year. The amended Begg amendment provides for a forfeiture only after the Ford company has failed for "two consecutive years" to manufacture 40,000 tons annually. This is an improvement over the first Begg amendment, but as it now stands it is highly objectionable and is a waiver of substantial rights which the original bill and my substitute safeguard.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] has just admitted that under his amendment the Ford Co. can skip a year, or every other year, without producing fertilizer, provided it produces one year out of every two the required 40,000 tons of fertilizer.

In support of his amendment the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] said:

> In making it two years I admit that technically he can manufacture one year and lie idle one year, and so on; but if he does that the United States has recourse for damages under other sections of the bill and is not withheld from action, even to going into a court of equity.

Here is a candid admission that under the Begg amendment the Ford Co. "can manufacture one year and lie idle one year, and so on," which gives the Ford Co. a right and privilege not given by the bill as it came from the committee and not permitted by my substitute, if it should be adopted. Moreover, the amendment gives the Ford Co. a privilege which it has never demanded; a privilege that weakens the bill and limits the rights and prerogatives of the Government; a privilege that is a dagger pointing straight at the heart of the American farmers; and a privilege which, if exercised by the Ford Co., will reduce by one-half the maximum amount of fertilizer produced during the hundred-year period, or involve the Government in constant litigation in an effort to enforce the production of the required amount of fertilizer annually.

But the gentleman from Ohio says the Government would still have the right to sue the Ford Co. for damages if it fails to produce annually the required amount of fixed nitrogen for fertilizing purposes. In other words, the gentleman's amendment would force the Government to bring a multiplicity of suits for damages year in and year out, which would be an expensive, vexatious, and an unsatisfactory method, and would not afford adequate relief to the Government or to the agricultural classes. The gentleman would relegate the Government to actions for damages for breach of contract in courts of law, where archaic procedural rules would materially delay and ultimately defeat the ends of justice.

I believe that under the bill as reported by the committee, and most certainly as amended by my substitute, the Government can compel the production of the 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen annually—that is, each and every year—and if the Ford Co. fails to comply with this provision the Government can enforce a forfeiture and recover the property passing under this lease.

Under my substitute the Government can demand a forfeiture if the Ford Co. fails or refuses for one year to produce the required 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen, but under the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio the Ford Co. must be in default for two years in succession before the Government can exercise its right of rescission or ask the courts to decree a forfeiture.

Under the original bill, as amended by my substitute, the Government has two hands with which to fight and protect itself and with which to compel the Ford Co. to produce annually for the American farmers the amount of fertilizer mentioned in the contract, but the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio ties one of the hands of "Uncle Sam," deprives him of substantial rights, and affords the Government and the farmers only 50 per cent protection.

While in my opinion, under the well-established law of the land, the bill as reported by the committee will authorize a forfeiture and recovery of the property in the event the Ford Co. should flagrantly fail and refuse to produce the required amount of fertilizer "annually," I do not object to a provision being inserted in the bill for specifically authorizing a forfeiture, and I am not opposing the latter portion of the Begg amendment but only that part thereof which permits a forfeiture only after the Ford Co. has failed "for two consecutive years" to manufacture "annually" 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen. I also oppose that part of the Begg amendment vesting in the President the autocratic power to declare the contract forfeited.

My substitute is substantially the same as the Begg amendment with the words "for two consecutive years" eliminated. Under my substitute the Government can demand a forfeiture if the Ford Co. fails for one year to furnish the required 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen, while under the Begg amendment the Government can not exercise the right of forfeiture unless the Ford Co. defaults "for two consecutive years" to comply with this very important contractual obligation. My substitute also differs from the Begg amendment in that under the Begg amendment the President can arbitrarily declare the contract forfeited, while under my substitute it would be left with the courts to ascertain whether or not there had been a violation of the contract.

Under my substitute if the Ford Co. fails for one year to produce the required quantity of fertilizer the Government can undoubtedly proceed immediately and ask the courts for a decree forfeiting the rights of the Ford Co. and restoring the Muscle Shoals property to the Government. But under the Begg amendment the Government would be compelled to withhold action until the company had defaulted for two years in succession. This means that under the amendment now being considered the Ford Co. can skip every other year and the Government will be without a remedy because the Begg amendment provides that there shall be no forfeiture or recapture or recovery of the property unless and until the Ford Co. fails "for two consecutive years" to manufacture the required 40,000 tons annually. Now, why give the Ford Co. this right and privilege for which it has not asked? As suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM], section 14 requires the annual manufacture of at least 40,000 tons. Now, why permit the Ford Co. to "skip" a year or "skip" every other year?

The object of the contract is to require the Ford Co. to manufacture each and every year at least 40,000 tons of fertilizer, and that is what the original bill provides; and if you reject the Begg amendment and adopt my substitute, the Government can demand the production of at least 40,000 tons each and every year and enforce a forfeiture for failure to comply with this provision.

The production of 40,000 tons annually is the heart and essence of this contract. It is the prime consideration which the Government demands in exchange for the property it proposes to turn over to the Ford Co. This contract should not directly or indirectly permit an evasion of this important duty of supplying the 40,000 tons of fertilizer each and every year. As this is the real consideration for this contract, a forfeiture and recovery of the property for a breach of this provision should be enforced unless the failure to produce the required amount of fertilizer was the result of "reconstruction of the plant, war, strikes, accidents, fires, or other causes beyond its control." If the original bill does not provide sufficient protection—which I think it does—my substitute affords the Government every possible protection and cures whatever ambiguity, if any, there may be in the original bill.

Under the bill as reported by the committee the Ford Co. must produce annually at least 40,000 tons of fertilizer unless prevented by one of the causes I have just enumerated.

If you adopt the Begg amendment, you are creating a condition which may result in the reduction by one-half of the maximum quantity of fertilizer produced by the Ford Co. for the 100-year lease period. The Begg amendment waives the right of the Government to invoke a forfeiture except where the Ford Co. for two years in succession fails to produce the required 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen.

If the Begg amendment is adopted, let us see how it will operate. The Ford Co. can manufacture the first year 40,000 tons, the second year nothing, the third year 40,000 tons, the fourth year nothing, the fifth year 40,000 tons, the sixth year nothing, the seventh year 40,000 tons, the eighth year nothing, the ninth year 40,000 tons, and the tenth year nothing, and so on. Now, in these 10 years the total production is only 200,000 tons, or an average of 20,000 tons annually, just one-half of the amount this bill seeks to compel the company to produce.

But if the Government at any time during the 10-year period should institute proceedings to forfeit the contract and recover the Muscle Shoals property for violation of the provisions of the contract, such proceedings would be determined adversely to the Government, because the Ford Co. could point to the "Begg amendment" and say that while it only produced one-half of the fertilizer it promised to produce, yet the Government can not invoke a forfeiture, because the failure at any time has not been "for two consecutive years." The Government could say, "You are not complying with this contract; you are not manufacturing 40,000 tons annually," to which the Ford Co. would reply, "We have not failed for two consecutive years to comply with our contract."

No one can read sections 14, 15, 18, and 23 of the bill as reported by the committee and as modified by my substitute, if adopted, and for one minute doubt the power of the Government to demand the production "annually" of fertilizer having a nitrogen content of at least 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen and to declare a forfeiture of the contract should the annual production be less than 40,000 tons, and the courts would undoubtedly sustain this forfeiture, rescind the contract for noncompliance with its terms, and restore possession of the leased property to the Government. The pending amendment absolutely destroys the right of the Government to ask for a forfeiture of the contract for failure to produce "annually" 40,000 tons of fertilizer and only gives the Government the right of rescission in the event of the company failing or refusing for "two consecutive years" to comply with the terms of the contract as set forth in section 14 of the bill.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] says that the plant might be destroyed by fire and considerable time might be required to rebuild it, and on that ground he justifies his amendment. Let me call his attention to the fact that section 14, as reported by the committee, covers contingencies such as fires, strikes, war, reconstruction, and other similar preventing causes. So there is no reason why the company should be permitted to skip one year or every other year without inviting a forfeiture of the contract.

The adoption of the Begg amendment will be construed as a legislative construction of the contract. It is a solemn declaration that "continuously," as used in section 14, does not mean without interruption or intermission, but means occasionally; and that "annually" or "each year" means every other year. The adoption of this amendment will prevent a forfeiture just so long as the Ford Co. does not "fail for two consecutive years" to furnish the required 40,000 tons of fertilizer annually.

In my opinion the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio in its present form should be rejected, because it confers more power on the President than kings and emperors now exercise and it surrenders a substantial right which the Government has to demand a forfeiture in the event the Ford Co. fails for one year to produce the required amount of fertilizer; and if the Begg amendment is adopted, the words "for two consecutive years" should be stricken out, so the right of forfeiture may at its option be exercised by the Government in the event the Ford Co. fails or refuses to produce each year the 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen for fertilizer purposes, and the provision granting the President power to cancel the contract should be eliminated.

I do not pretend to have a very great knowledge of the law, but I believe I understand the meaning of the simple and unambiguous language used in the original bill, and I have some little knowledge of the rules of statutory construction and of the decisions construing contracts and the circumstances under which they may be rescinded and forfeited.

While I favor inserting a specific forfeiture clause in this contract, I insist that the clause be one that will strengthen and not weaken the bill, one that will not waive any rights the Government has to demand a forfeiture by judicial decree for failure of the Ford Co. to comply with the contract each and every year. My substitute will furnish the desired guaranties without surrendering any of the rights of the Government or imposing harsh and arbitrary conditions. The Begg amendment affords only 50 per cent protection, as it permits a forfeiture only in the event the Ford Co. fails "for two consecutive years" to comply with its contract. Why should the Government give up this valuable right and powerful leverage? Why should Congress adopt the proposed amendment when its author, the gentleman from Ohio, admits that the amendment will permit the Ford Co. to "manufacture one year and lie idle one year, and so on"?

The substitute that I have offered provides for a forfeiture in the event the Ford Co. fails to produce "annually" fertilizer having a nitrogen content of at least 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen. Under my substitute the Ford Co. will be required and compelled to keep its contract and to produce 40,000 tons of fertilizer each and every year, while under the Begg amendment the company can, if it so desires, skip one year out of every two and thereby reduce by one-half the maximum quantity of fertilizer that Mr. Ford is required to produce under this contract.

The Begg amendment is 50 per cent anarchy, because it vests in the President the arbitrary power to cancel the contract by Executive proclamation, without the courts having found that the contract had been violated in any substantial particular.

I am supporting the Muscle Shoals bill for the following reasons:

First. It looks to and safeguards our national defense. Under the pending bill the tremendous productive capacity of this great plant will be kept in shape so it may be instantly transformed into a mighty instrumentality for the production of war materials, if such a calamity as war should again come to our Nation.

Second. Because as an inevitable result of this legislation the stupendous volume of power that has been wasted for ages at Muscle Shoals will be harnessed and utilized by man, and used in the industrial, agricultural, and commercial development not only of the South but of our entire Nation.

Third. Because the contract requires "continuously" through the lease period the production of cheap fertilizer for the American farmer in quantities of at least 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen content annually.

Now, I do not look for another war in the next hundred years, nor at any time. I know some able men reject this view and many believe that another great war is inevitable. But I believe the world's lust for war has been satisfied for all time and that ways will be found to avoid military conflict, except inconsequential clashes between the new or smaller nations. Until the world emerged from the late war it never had an adequate understanding of the tremendous cost of war in treasure, blood, and man power, and the lesson the world has learned will not be soon forgotten. So while I do not believe our Nation will ever be engaged in another great war, still if such a calamity should come to our people it would be of supreme importance to have the great Muscle Shoals plant in shape to be instantly converted to use incident to our national defense, especially as the Ford Co. will, in effect, keep the plant in condition to be utilized for war purposes in an emergency. While this alone might justify Congress in sanctioning the Ford contract, it is, to my mind, not the strongest or controlling reason.

Undoubtedly if this contract with the Ford Co. is consummated, Muscle Shoals and the adjacent territory will become a great industrial and commercial center. Factories will be built up and down the river for many miles and cheap electric power will be transmitted for hundreds of miles, enabling comparatively distant communities to become industrial centers. The location of this great plant is close to the coal and iron supply of the South and it is in the heart of the cotton-growing States.

Cheap raw material can be found in abundance close at hand. As the years go on, less of the southern cotton will be shipped to northern States or to Europe to be converted into cloth, and in time practically all the iron deposits of the South will be manufactured into useful commodities in the South and much of the cotton will be manufactured into fabrics in the region where it is grown. From an industrial and commercial standpoint Muscle Shoals means much to the South, and to all parts of the United States would accrue a portion of these benefits. This argument alone might justify the contract we are now considering, but, to my mind, it is not the strongest or most persuasive reason why this bill should be enacted.

To my way of thinking, the strongest argument in support of the pending bill is that the American farmer will be the chief beneficiary and will be furnished cheap fertilizer if this project is consummated.

The most important paragraphs in the bill are sections 14 and 15. Note the language of section 14—

> Since the manufacture, sale, and distribution of commercial fertilizers to farmers and other users thereof constitute one of the principal considerations of this offer, the company expressly agrees that, continuously throughout the lease period, except as it may be prevented by reconstruction of the plant itself, or by war, strikes, accidents, fires, or other causes beyond its control, it will manufacture nitrogen and other commercial fertilizers, mixed or unmixed, and with or without filler, according to demand, at nitrate plant No. 2 or its equivalent, or at such other plant or plants adjacent or near thereto as it may construct, using the most economical source of power available. The annual production of these fertilizers shall have a nitrogen content of at least 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen, which is the present annual capacity of nitrate plant No. 2.

It seems to me that this is not only the principal consideration but the outstanding and controlling factor in this legislative equation. The fundamental and vital part of this contract is that part which looks toward better and more profitable agricultural conditions. Agriculture is the most important basic industry. Our entire economic life and prosperity as a nation depends upon the prosperity of the agricultural classes.

I believe it is the duty of the Government to adopt a legislative program that will restore agriculture to the class of profitable occupations. Furnishing the farmer an abundant supply of cheap fertilizer will materially aid him in meeting the demand of the world for an adequate supply of foodstuffs. For several generations we have been robbing our soil of its fertility. We are not putting back into the soil anything like what we have withdrawn from it by the constant growing of grain crops. Moreover, as a result of constant cultivation, a considerable part of the soil is annually wasted away and the productivity of our land is be[illegible] year materially impaired.

The western farmer has [illegible] to a considerable extent used fertilizer to increase production and restore fertility to the soil for the reason that the cost of good fertilizer has been so exceedingly high as to be prohibitive. But the time is coming when the mid-west farmer must resort to the use of fertilizer to a considerable extent; otherwise the crop yields will grow less and less each year.

Now, the contract we are considering, if consummated and not emasculated by objectionable amendments, will afford annually to the American farmer a supply of cheap fertilizer with a nitrogen content of at least 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen. This will be manufactured by cheap power generated at the Muscle Shoals Dam and power plant, and the fertilizer will be sold to the farmers at a price to be established by a board on which the three leading representative farm organizations will have representatives, namely, the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Grange, and the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America. Now, this will mean much to the American farmers. It will enable them to increase and in many instances double or treble the yield per acre of grain and vegetable crops. It will enable the farmer to maintain the fertility and increase the productivity of his land. It will enable the farmer on a few acres to produce a larger crop than he can now produce on double the number of acres. It will reduce the expense and investment of the farmer and in many ways promote his welfare.

I grant you there are some features in this bill that do not meet with my unqualified approval; but, all things considered, I believe the bill as a whole is a good one and should have my support.

From a financial standpoint the Government can well afford to make this contract. We now have Muscle Shoals on our hands. It has cost much money. It is idle and will require the expenditure of tremendous sums to keep it in repair and operate it, if the Government retains it. Mr. Ford's offer has been before Congress and the American people for several years. It has been discussed in Congress, in the public press, on the platform, and in every community throughout the Nation. The Government has invited other companies and individuals to submit competing propositions. So far not one has come forward with a better proposition, and at present there is no prospect of the Government being able to make a better contract at any time in the future. If we reject the Ford proposal we have nowhere to turn for a better or even as good a proposition. Something must be done with the Muscle Shoals proposition and done quickly, if the Government is to save further expense and avoid great loss in the future. The Government can not afford to operate the plant permanently. I believe the Government operation for a hundred years would prove exceedingly unsatisfactory and expensive. The Ford Co. has the financial resources and efficient business organization to successfully and economically operate the Muscle Shoals plant. By the pending contract the national defense is safeguarded, the farmers guaranteed an abundant supply of cheap fertilizer, and the industrial, agricultural, and commercial development of our country materially stimulated. These considerations influence me to vote for the pending measure unless the integrity of this contract should be impaired by the adoption of ill-considered amendments of such a character as to emasculate the bill and mutilate its beneficent provisions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MOORE] is recognized.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, this debate has been instructive, and I have followed it with interest and concern.

When the consideration of the Ford proposal for Muscle Shoals began I fully expected to support the proposition. I still hope that it will be in such shape when we take a final vote that I may do so. By this, I mean that those of us who want to support the Ford proposal expect the language of this bill to be in such form and in unequivocal terms that it will compel Mr. Ford and the company he will organize to do what the people of the country understand he has promised to do.

It is admitted that the Government has spent more than $83,000,000 for what Henry Ford proposes to purchase for $5,000,000. The property he would get consists of the following, according to the minority report:

Dam No. 2 and hydroelectric installation of 18 units will, when completed, be the largest dam in the world and represent an investment of more than $51,000,000.

Nitrate plant No. 1 represents an investment of more than $12,000,000. It includes 1,900 acres of land. In addition to nitrate plant No. 1 there are large permanent substantial buildings for various smaller manufacturing purposes. Located on this tract are 125 permanent residences with all modern improvements; also 9 miles of macadam roads; also 8 miles of sewerage; also 4 miles of standard-gauge railroads with necessary locomotives, cars, repair shops, etc. There are paved streets and waterworks.

Nitrate plant No. 2, including the Waco Quarry, represents an investment of more than $67,000,000. It includes 2,300 acres of land. On this tract are 186 permanent residences, many of them with two bathrooms, including expensive electric-lighting fixtures, water supply, sewers, etc. These great nitrate works include the largest buildings of their kind in the world. There are also a number of permanent buildings for various small manufacturing purposes, such as sawmills, blacksmith shops, etc.

On this tract comprising nitrate plant No. 2 there is a hotel which is completely furnished and equipped, containing more than 100 rooms. On this tract there are 24 miles of improved roads and cemented sidewalks and streets; there are on this tract about 40 miles of standard-gauge railroad tracks; there are 20 miles of sewers; there is also on this tract a complete waterworks and sewerage system; and there is attached to this nitrate plant No. 2 a steam plant for the generation of electricity, known as the Sheffield steam plant, which alone cost more than $12,000,000. This plant is in high-class running order to-day and is being used. There should be included in this picture the fact that there is $500,000 worth of platinum in storage at the United States subtreasury in New York belonging to the nitrate plants for use in a catalyst for extracting nitrogen from the air. There is also cash in the United States Treasury amounting to $3,472,487.25, recently received by the Government for the sale of the Gorgas steam plant, which it is proposed under the committee bill with the Madden amendment to immediately spend in behalf of Mr. Ford's offer for the construction of an auxiliary steam plant for his benefit.

In return for all the above, including the platinum valued at $500,000 and the $3,472,487.25 cash now in the United States Treasury, Mr. Ford proposes to pay to the United States Government $5,000,000, and that only in several annual installments.

In other words, Mr. Ford proposes to pay $5,000,000 for the following property:

Nitrate plant No. 2, costing	$66,252,392.21
Nitrate plant No. 1, costing	12,887,941.31
Waco quarry, costing	1,302,962.88
Cash from sale of Gorgas plant	3,472,487.25
Total	83,915,783.65

The Government, if it wants to part with the steam plant for the generation of electricity attached to nitrate plant No. 2, known as the Sheffield steam plant, is now offered by one of the bidders appearing before Congress in this matter the sum of $4,500,000 spot cash for this one unit alone.

I have an interest in the farmer and many of them live in my district. It should be our aim and purpose in every proper way to encourage agriculture which is struggling along under very discouraging circumstances. However, we are entitled to know, and the public is entitled to know, just what the particular bill before us provides and just what it does not contemplate. If there is some sentiment in the country—and I think there is—for the Henry Ford proposal, it grows out of the fact that the farmers of the country expect that he will produce nitrates at Muscle Shoals that will give them cheap fertilizer and, furthermore, permit the United States, in case of war, to still have the use of Muscle Shoals for the preparation of explosives.

The farmer thinks that Henry Ford has agreed to purchase Muscle Shoals and has guaranteed to manufacture nitrates and insure the farmer cheap fertilizer. There is nothing in this bill that makes that absolutely certain, and that is what I want to do, and if that is done I want and expect to support this bill, otherwise I shall feel impelled to vote against it.

What will the farmer think when we tell him that by the provisions of this bill, in section 14, nitrogen that will produce nitrates for fertilizer will be manufactured "according to demand," and in section 15 that the maximum "net profit" shall not exceed 8 per cent in the manufacture and sale of fertilizer. Certainly the farmer is entitled to fair consideration, and there is no need trying to deceive him by making him believe that he is guaranteed something, whereas the proposition is still open to experiment—the question of demand, and also profit.

It must be kept in mind that all farm organizations have not indorsed the Ford offer. The National Grange has not done so, and I am led to believe that the farm organizations that have indorsed the proposal have done it with the full expectation that the bill we pass shall be in such form as to make certain that the thing will be done that they are most desirous of accomplishing and that is to provide cheap fertilizer. I observe in this discussion that most of the Members of Congress from the great agricultural States of the West and Northwest are against this bill in its present form, and to pass the bill in its present form might deceive the farmer. Furthermore, the people of the country generally think that this is a sale to Henry Ford personally, whereas the bill before us provides in the very first paragraph that "Henry Ford will form a corporation to effectuate this agreement."

Assume that Henry Ford may dominate and control the corporation during his lifetime, who will control the corporation when Henry Ford is gone? Mr. Ford is past 60 years of age, and this lease of Muscle Shoals is for 100 years. To-day he is one of the wealthiest men in the world. A quarter of a century ago Henry Ford was a poor man. Who knows, if he is living in 10 years from now, whether he will be rich or poor. His expectancy of life is not likely more than 12 years and we must not hastily permit any personality, even one so outstanding as Mr. Ford's, to confuse our judgment in surrendering a great national asset like Muscle Shoals unless the rights of the Government are secure.

Oh, it is said by some, the gentleman of Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], and others, that Mr. Ford wants "to leave a monument of his success." That may be, but there is nothing in this bill that indicates it; nothing that states he will do anything unprofitable. We are dealing with a business man in business language and considering proposals and profits. Mr. Ford has made a business proposal and I believe he is looking at it in a businesslike way. He is undoubtedly a great business man. What evidence have we that he is going to make any fertilizer if he can not make a profit on it. I would not be unkind, yet duty compels me to be frank and say that the whole history of the activities of Mr. Ford, so far as I am advised, does not indicate that he is unusually generous or takes part in enterprises unless he makes money out of them. Since he is looking at this proposition in a cold-blooded way, I believe it becomes our imperative duty to look at it in the same way for our constituents.

Think of the friends of Mr. Ford coming to us as representatives of the people and telling us that this is his proposal, and we must either take it just as it is or leave it. Why has Mr. Ford any more right to submit a proposal, that can not be changed, to the millions of people in this country than we have as representatives of the people to offer suggestions in the way of amendments to him. The proposition should be so worded that it will carry out what our constituents expect. We hear it whispered around in the cloakroom that we should pass this proposal and that it can be "fixed up" in the Senate. I am answerable to my constituents for voting upon this proposal as it is submitted finally in the House, and not voting in anticipation of what may or may not be done by the Senate.

I maintain and insist that if Mr. Ford is to secure all of this property, for which we have expended more than $83,000,000, and he in turn offers to give $5,000,000, we should make sure that the further consideration of making nitrates for fertilizer is written into the bill in no uncertain terms, and if he does not so make these nitrates, then the Government ought to have the right to forfeit the lease and retake the property. I hope the friends of Mr. Ford will permit us to at least write into this bill a forfeiture clause, as proposed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG], and strengthened by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO], which provides that if Mr. Ford or the company formed by him does not produce nitrogen for fertilizer, as contemplated, for three successive years, that all rights under the lease shall be forfeited and the property returned to the United States. If Mr. Ford intends to produce cheap fertilizer he ought to consent to this. If this amendment or a similar amendment is not accepted it seems that we would be justified in concluding that he only means to attempt to produce fertilizer if profitable, and that is contrary to what the people think the Henry Ford offer is.

We are told that both Mr. Ford and his estate will be bound by the terms of the contract. We insist that the bill

The Begg amendment is 50 per cent anarchy, because it vests in the President the arbitrary power to cancel the contract by Executive proclamation, without the courts having found that the contract had been violated in any substantial particular.

I am supporting the Muscle Shoals bill for the following reasons:

Now, this will mean much to the American farmers. It will enable them to increase and in many instances double or treble the yield per acre of grain and vegetable crops. It will enable the farmer to maintain the fertility and increase the productivity of his land. It will enable the farmer on a few acres to produce a larger crop than he can now produce on double the number of acres. It will reduce the expense and investment of the farmer and in many ways promote his welfare.

I grant you there are some features in this bill that do not meet with my unqualified approval; but, all things considered, I believe the bill as a whole is a good one and should have my support.

From a financial standpoint the Government can well afford to make this contract. We now have Muscle Shoals on our hands. It has cost much money. It is idle and will require the expenditure of tremendous sums to keep it in repair and operate it, if the Government retains it. Mr. Ford's offer has been before Congress and the American people for several years. It has been discussed in Congress, in the public press, on the platform, and in every community throughout the Nation. The Government has invited other companies and individuals to submit competing propositions. So far not one has come forward with a better proposition, and at present there is no prospect of the Government being able to make a better contract at any time in the future. If we reject the Ford proposal we have nowhere to turn for a better or even as good a proposition. Something must be done with the Muscle Shoals proposition and done quickly, if the Government is to save further expense and avoid great loss in the future. The Government can not afford to operate the plant permanently. I believe the Government operation for a hundred years would prove exceedingly unsatisfactory and expensive. The Ford Co. has the financial resources and efficient business organization to successfully and economically operate the Muscle Shoals plant. By the pending contract the national defense is safeguarded, the farmers guaranteed an abundant supply of cheap fertilizer, and the industrial, agricultural, and commercial development of our country materially stimulated. These considerations influence me to vote for the pending measure unless the integrity of this contract should be impaired by the adoption of ill-considered amendments of such a character as to emasculate the bill and mutilate its beneficent provisions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MOORE] is recognized.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, this debate has been instructive, and I have followed it with interest and concern.

When the consideration of the Ford proposal for Muscle Shoals began I fully expected to support the proposition. I still hope that it will be in such shape when we take a final vote that I may do so. By this, I mean that those of us who want to support the Ford proposal expect the language of this bill to be in such form and in unequivocal terms that it will compel Mr. Ford and the company he will organize to do what the people of the country understand he has promised to do.

It is admitted that the Government has spent more than $83,000,000 for what Henry Ford proposes to purchase for $5,000,000. The property he would get consists of the following, according to the minority report:

Dam No. 2 and hydroelectric installation of 18 units will, when completed, be the largest dam in the world and represent an investment of more than $51,000,000.

Nitrate plant No. 1 represents an investment of more than $12,000,000. It includes 1,900 acres of land. In addition to nitrate plant No. 1 there are large permanent substantial buildings for various smaller manufacturing purposes. Located on this tract are 125 permanent residences with all modern improvements; also 9 miles of macadam roads; also 8 miles of sewerage; also 4 miles of standard-gauge railroads with necessary locomotives, cars, repair shops, etc. There are paved streets and waterworks.

Nitrate plant No. 2, including the Waco Quarry, represents an investment of more than $67,000,000. It includes 2,300 acres of land. On this tract are 186 permanent residences, many of them with two bathrooms, including expensive electric-lighting fixtures, water supply, sewers, etc. These great nitrate works include the largest buildings of their kind in the world. There are also a number of permanent buildings for various small manufacturing purposes, such as sawmills, blacksmith shops, etc.

On this tract comprising nitrate plant No. 2 there is a hotel which is completely furnished and equipped, containing more than 100 rooms. On this tract there are 24 miles of improved roads and cemented sidewalks and streets; there are on this tract about 40 miles of standard-gauge railroad tracks; there are 20 miles of sewers; there is also on this tract a complete waterworks and sewerage system; and there is attached to this nitrate plant No. 2 a steam plant for the generation of electricity, known as the Sheffield steam plant, which alone cost more than $12,000,000. This plant is in high-class running order to-day and is being used. There should be included in this picture the fact that there is $500,000 worth of platinum in storage at the United States subtreasury in New York belonging to the nitrate plants for use in a catalyst for extracting nitrogen from the air. There is also cash in the United States Treasury amounting to $3,472,487.25, recently received by the Government for the sale of the Gorgas steam plant, which it is proposed under the committee bill with the Madden amendment to immediately spend in behalf of Mr. Ford's offer for the construction of an auxiliary steam plant for his benefit.

In return for all the above, including the platinum valued at $500,000 and the $3,472,487.25 cash now in the United States Treasury, Mr. Ford proposes to pay to the United States Government $5,000,000, and that only in several annual installments.

In other words, Mr. Ford proposes to pay $5,000,000 for the following property:

Nitrate plant No. 2, costing	$66,252,392.21
Nitrate plant No. 1, costing	12,887,941.31
Waco quarry, costing	1,302,962.88
Cash from sale of Gorgas plant	3,472,487.25
Total	83,915,783.65

The Government, if it wants to part with the steam plant for the generation of electricity attached to nitrate plant No. 2, known as the Sheffield steam plant, is now offered by one of the bidders appearing before Congress in this matter the sum of $4,500,000 spot cash for this one unit alone.

I have an interest in the farmer and many of them live in my district. It should be our aim and purpose in every proper way to encourage agriculture which is struggling along under very discouraging circumstances. However, we are entitled to know, and the public is entitled to know, just what the particular bill before us provides and just what it does not contemplate. If there is some sentiment in the country—and I think there is—for the Henry Ford proposal, it grows out of the fact that the farmers of the country expect that he will produce nitrates at Muscle Shoals that will give them cheap fertilizer and, furthermore, permit the United States, in case of war, to still have the use of Muscle Shoals for the preparation of explosives.

The farmer thinks that Henry Ford has agreed to purchase Muscle Shoals and has guaranteed to manufacture nitrates and insure the farmer cheap fertilizer. There is nothing in this bill that makes that absolutely certain, and that is what I want to do, and if that is done I want and expect to support this bill, otherwise I shall feel impelled to vote against it.

What will the farmer think when we tell him that by the provisions of this bill, in section 14, nitrogen that will produce nitrates for fertilizer will be manufactured "according to demand," and in section 15 that the maximum "net profit" shall not exceed 8 per cent in the manufacture and sale of fertilizer. Certainly the farmer is entitled to fair consideration, and there is no need trying to deceive him by making him believe that he is guaranteed something, whereas the proposition is still open to experiment—the question of demand, and also profit.

It must be kept in mind that all farm organizations have not indorsed the Ford offer. The National Grange has not done so, and I am led to believe that the farm organizations that have indorsed the proposal have done it with the full expectation that the bill we pass shall be in such form as to make certain that the thing will be done that they are most desirous of accomplishing and that is to provide cheap fertilizer. I observe in this discussion that most of the Members of Congress from the great agricultural States of the West and Northwest are against this bill in its present form, and to pass the bill in its present form might deceive the farmer. Furthermore, the people of the country generally think that this is a sale to Henry Ford personally, whereas the bill before us provides in the very first paragraph that "Henry Ford will form a corporation to effectuate this agreement."

Assume that Henry Ford may dominate and control the corporation during his lifetime, who will control the corporation when Henry Ford is gone? Mr. Ford is past 60 years of age, and this lease of Muscle Shoals is for 100 years. To-day he is one of the wealthiest men in the world. A quarter of a century ago Henry Ford was a poor man. Who knows, if he is living in 10 years from now, whether he will be rich or poor. His expectancy of life is not likely more than 12 years and we must not hastily permit any personality, even one so outstanding as Mr. Ford's, to confuse our judgment in surrendering a great national asset like Muscle Shoals unless the rights of the Government are secure.

Oh, it is said by some, the gentleman of Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], and others, that Mr. Ford wants "to leave a monument of his success." That may be, but there is nothing in this bill that indicates it; nothing that states he will do anything unprofitable. We are dealing with a business man in business language and considering proposals and profits. Mr. Ford has made a business proposal and I believe he is looking at it in a businesslike way. He is undoubtedly a great business man. What evidence have we that he is going to make any fertilizer if he can not make a profit on it. I would not be unkind, yet duty compels me to be frank and say that the whole history of the activities of Mr. Ford, so far as I am advised, does not indicate that he is unusually generous or takes part in enterprises unless he makes money out of them. Since he is looking at this proposition in a cold-blooded way, I believe it becomes our imperative duty to look at it in the same way for our constituents.

Think of the friends of Mr. Ford coming to us as representatives of the people and telling us that this is his proposal, and we must either take it just as it is or leave it. Why has Mr. Ford any more right to submit a proposal, that can not be changed, to the millions of people in this country than we have as representatives of the people to offer suggestions in the way of amendments to him. The proposition should be so worded that it will carry out what our constituents expect. We hear it whispered around in the cloakroom that we should pass this proposal and that it can be "fixed up" in the Senate. I am answerable to my constituents for voting upon this proposal as it is submitted finally in the House, and not voting in anticipation of what may or may not be done by the Senate.

I maintain and insist that if Mr. Ford is to secure all of this property, for which we have expended more than $83,000,000, and he in turn offers to give $5,000,000, we should make sure that the further consideration of making nitrates for fertilizer is written into the bill in no uncertain terms, and if he does not so make these nitrates, then the Government ought to have the right to forfeit the lease and retake the property. I hope the friends of Mr. Ford will permit us to at least write into this bill a forfeiture clause, as proposed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG], and strengthened by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO], which provides that if Mr. Ford or the company formed by him does not produce nitrogen for fertilizer, as contemplated, for three successive years, that all rights under the lease shall be forfeited and the property returned to the United States. If Mr. Ford intends to produce cheap fertilizer he ought to consent to this. If this amendment or a similar amendment is not accepted it seems that we would be justified in concluding that he only means to attempt to produce fertilizer if profitable, and that is contrary to what the people think the Henry Ford offer is.

We are told that both Mr. Ford and his estate will be bound by the terms of the contract. We insist that the bill as now written binds neither Mr. Ford nor his estate after the contract is consummated. Do you think Mr. Ford would consent to bind his estate for 100 years, and how would it be accomplished? Assume that he dies in 10 years from now, how would you keep open and bind his estate for 90 years? After his estate was divided among his beneficiaries and heirs, how do we know that anything could be realized by the Government from anyone? I think these are all timely, proper, and necessary questions, and that we ought to resolve any doubt in favor of our constituents rather than sentimentally decide this matter because Mr. Ford is the proponent. If the proponents and friends of this bill mean what they say, why not write the provisions in the bill so the country will understand? [Applause.]

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], who has made a study of this and related subjects, calls attention to the fact that this proposal is contrary to the policy of our Federal water power act which limits franchises to 50 years and seeks to control excess profits. The friends of Mr. Ford insist that this lease must be for 100 years, and that they will not accept it for 50 years or any number of years under 100. That is a long period of time, and why should a contract be given to Mr. Ford if it ignores the Federal water power act?

When we think what has happened in the last 100 years and then contemplate the possibilities and probable necessities of the next hundred years it should make us cautious in surrendering a great national asset like Muscle Shoals without proper safeguards. This great project at Muscle Shoals has untold water power. We are advised that the property and rights which Henry Ford would get are capable of producing 800,000 horsepower. This is a powerful and valuable industrial asset and capable of producing tremendous electric power. This is a time when people are anxious about making proper conservation for our country. We know that a great deal of the oil, timber, and coal of the country is in private hands, and we must not recklessly part with one of the greatest water-power agencies in the country without making sure that the rights of the people are protected.

We all believe that we are only in the dawn of electrical development. Electric current is to-day transmitted successfully 275 miles for use, and who will dare say what the developments in this field will be in the next hundred years?

The friends of Mr. Ford refuse to write into this proposal that if he sells current or electric power the cost thereof shall be regulated by the utilities commission of the State where the plant is located; or if he should deal in interstate commerce, to be regulated by some Federal agency. Why grant these unusual and extraordinary powers without regulation to a corporation for 100 years, a span of time which must run under the lease long after Mr. Ford shall have passed off the stage of action?

As the Representatives of the people let us look carefully to this proposal to make sure that the farmers get what they have been promised—cheap fertilizer—and that the rights of the country are protected in case of war. [Applause.] I realize that the easy thing and perhaps the popular thing would be to vote for this bill regardless of its provisions. However, I refuse to be guided by sentiment alone, but feel it my imperative duty to make sure that the rights of our country are protected before I shall consent to lease property that belongs to our Government for a hundred years and which has such unlimited possibilities of wealth and power. I want to vigorously protest against an attitude that refuses to permit any amendment to this bill which attempts to carry out Mr. Ford's offer.

To my mind the words of the offer are not as sacred as the rights of the people. [Applause.]

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am opposed to the Wingo substitute and also to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LOZIER], and in its present form I favor the Begg amendment, and in this connection I believe I am authorized to say that the Democratic members of the Military Affairs Committee will now accept the Begg amendment in its present form.

Gentlemen, when the Begg amendment was first offered, in its original form, I was opposed to it. I believe every Democratic member of the committee was opposed to it; but since it has been modified you will see from an examination of it in connection with the bill, it does not alter the terms and provisions of the original bill in a single particular, but simply creates an additional or cumulative remedy looking to the enforcement of the obligations to be undertaken by Mr. Ford for the manufacture of fixed nitrogen.

The great objection to the amendment as originally drawn was that it provided unconditionally for a forfeiture of all these properties to the Government and the Government was to be reinvested with the title in the event Mr. Ford failed, or his company failed, to manufacture 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen at Muscle Shoals consecutively for a period of three years. As modified, the failure to manufacture fixed nitrogen for two years at Muscle Shoals consecutively would not void the contract unless the Government elected to proceed to have a forfeiture declared, and as modified further, it is expressly set out that none of the rights or remedies of the United States as set forth in the original contract is in any way altered or abridged by the terms of this amendment.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not know that I understood the amendment, but if I understood it correctly it provides for a forfeiture of all the property that is to be conveyed to Henry Ford or to this company.

Mr. WRIGHT. That is true.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That, in effect, creates a lien for 100 years upon all of that property no matter what it may be, a house and lot or any particular property that may be conveyed, even though it may have no connection with the nitrate plant and nothing to do with the operation of the nitrate plant. Does the gentleman believe that a company investing this immense amount of money would want to put its money into a proposition and into property that it could not transfer or could not make any conveyance of.

Mr. WRIGHT. I think the bill as originally drawn contained provisions which amply protected the Government.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is true.

Mr. WRIGHT. I do not think this provision in the Begg amendment alters any of the provisions of the original bill in the least or that it specially creates any additional remedy except the forfeiture.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It does do so by this forfeiture.

Mr. WRIGHT. I will call the gentleman's attention to section 12 of the bill. You will note that the last sentence of that section provides that "each of said deeds shall refer to or contain the provisions of this offer and said deeds shall be so drawn as to make such provisions covenants running with the land." So that an examination of that provision discloses that this so-called lien was already created.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If that be true, then why adopt the Begg amendmnt? The committee evidently, when it reported the bill, thought the language covered it.

Mr. WRIGHT. As I said, I think provisions of the original bill were ample to protect the interests of the Government, but there seems to be a desire to have a forfeiture clause inserted in the deed; that is, a specific forfeiture clause.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. From the discussion I have heard and from what the gentleman from Missouri has said, I am opposed to the Begg amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, if you will give me your attention just a moment I will promise to be very brief. One of the provisions in the proposed contract is that Henry Ford or the corporation must manufacture annually 40,000 tons of said nitrogen. That is in section 14. In section 18 there is a provision that in addition to all the remedies now possessed by the United States for the enforcement of contracts, the Government shall have the right to go into the District Court of Northern Alabama and by mandamus or other special proceedings bring Mr. Ford in for the purpose of compelling him to comply with the conditions of the contract, one of which is that he shall annually manufacture 40,000 tons of nitrogen. In addition to that, my good friend from Ohio [Mr. BEGG], and a few other gentlemen of the House, felt that we did not have Mr. Ford tied down quite tight enough and that notwithstanding the fact that we provided that if he failed to manufacture nitrogen annually to the extent of 40,000 tons he could be taken into a court of equity and finally, probably, the property forfeited, the gentlemen whom Mr. BEGG represents, and others who I am sure join with them, desire that Mr. Ford shall be required to comply with this condition of the contract and wish to have as a supplemental section a provision that a forfeiture can be declared at the end of two years without any further proceeding. This is all there is in the Begg amendment. I think it is drastic enough. I do not think there will be much danger without it, but I have said to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] that being one of those who are interested in the farmers of this country, and who are standing for this proposition more on account of the fertilizer provision in it than any other, I want Mr. Ford and the corporation which he shall organize bound to perform under the contract, and the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] will only tighten the thing up a little tighter. In other words, it will take another half hitch in the rope by which we have the corporation tied.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I do not mind saying that I have some misgiving whether this amendment will tighten it up. The bill provides that he shall manufacture fertilizer annually, 40,000 tons, and now you put in a cumulative clause in which he is not in default unless he fails for two years. If he fails for one year—and I am interested that he shall not fail for any year, because gentlemen know that if there is one thing that I am interested in it is the production of fertilizer—suppose he does not manufacture for one or for two years, what are we going to do about it?

Mr. McKENZIE. We have the remedy provided for in section 18, and the Begg amendment refers to that and says that this provision in the amendment is supplemental and shall not repeal section 18.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If you have it in section 18, why adopt this amendment?

Mr. McKENZIE. Because I think it makes it stronger.

Mr. LOZIER. Is it not true that under the Begg amendment the court can not invoke the provisions of that amendment and ask a forfeiture except the company fails for two years in succession, and is not it true under the legislative construction of the contract Henry Ford can manufacture 40,000 tons one year, then skip a year, manufacture 40,000 tons another year, and skip a year, and you are relieving him by the amendment from the obligation.

Mr. McKENZIE. I think the gentleman is entirely wrong in the construction of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio. In my judgment it would strengthen the bill, and I have said to the gentleman from Ohio that I will support it, and I hope the friends of this measure will support it and that it will be adopted. I move, Mr. Chairman, to close the debate in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. QUIN) there were 96 ayes and 75 noes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. McKENZIE and Mr. WINGO.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 98 ayes and 79 noes.

So the amendment of Mr. WINGO to the amendment of Mr. BEGG was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LOZIER].

The substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] as amended by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee) there were—ayes 123, noes 46.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois: Page 11, line 9, after the word "readiness," strike out the words "or its equivalent."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois) there were—ayes 54, noes 96.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BURTON: Page 10, lines 7 and 8, strike out the words "by reconstruction of the plant itself, or"

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, it is not included in the Ford offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BURTON) there were—ayes 52, noes 104.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 15. In order that farmers and other users of fertilizers may be supplied with fertilizers at fair prices and without excessive profits, the company agrees that the maximum net profit which it shall make in the manufacture and sale of fertilizer products shall not exceed 8 per cent of the fair actual annual cost of production thereof. In order that this provision may be carried out, the company agrees to the creation of a board of not more than nine voting members, chosen as follows: The three leading representative farm organizations, national in fact, namely, the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Grange, and the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America, or their successor or successors (said successor or successors to be determined, in case of controversy, by the Secretary of Agriculture), shall each designate not more than seven candidates for the board in the first instance and thereafter, for succession in office, not more than three candidates. The President shall nominate for membership on this board not more than seven of these candidates, selected to give representation to each of the above-mentioned organizations, said nominations to be made subject to confirmation by the Senate, and there shall be two voting members of said board selected by the company: Provided, That not more than one shall be nominated by the President from the same State; that if the Senate shall not confirm all of said seven nominees the President shall send additional names from the said list of candidates until the Senate shall have confirmed seven: Provided further, That if either or any of said farm organizations or its or their successors by reason of the expiration of its or their charter or ceasing to function or failing to maintain its organization or for any cause or reason should decline, fail, or neglect to make such designations, then the Secretary of Agriculture shall make such designation or designations for such or all of said organizations as may so decline, fail, or neglect to make such designation; and if such designation is made by the Secretary of Agriculture for only one or two of said organizations, then such designation shall be made so as to give the remaining organization or organizations the same right and in the same proportion to designate candidates for said board as in the first instance and just as though all of said organizations were making such designations: Provided, however, That a failure to make designations at any one time shall not thereafter deprive any organization of its original rights under this section: And provided further, That the terms of office of the first seven candidates nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate on the designation of said farm organizations shall be as follows: Two for a period of two years, two for a period of four years, and the remaining three for a period of six years, and thereafter the nominations for membership on said board made by the President, except for unexpired terms, shall be for six years each. None of the members of said board shall draw compensation from the Government, except that any which may be nominated and confirmed on the designation of the Secretary of Agriculture under the provisions hereof shall receive from the Government their actual expenses while engaged in work on said board.

A representative of the Bureau of Markets, Department of Agriculture, or its legal successor, to be appointed by the President, shall also be a member of the board serving in an advisory capacity without the right to vote. The said board shall determine what has been the cost of manufacture and sale of fertilizer products and the price which has been charged therefor, and, if necessary for the purpose of limiting the annual profit to 8 per cent as aforesaid, shall regulate the price at which said fertilizer may be sold by the company. For these purposes, said board shall have access to the books and records of the company at any reasonable time. In order that such fertilizer products may be fairly distributed and economically purchased by farmers and other users thereof, the said board shall determine the equitable territorial distribution of the same and may, in its discretion, make reasonable regulation for the sale of all or a portion of such products by the company to farmers, their agencies, or organizations. If and when said board can not agree upon its findings and determinations, then the points of disagreement shall be referred to the Federal Trade Commission (or its legal successor) for arbitration and settlement, and the decision of said commission in such cases shall be final and binding upon the board.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, it seems that it will be inadvisable to attempt to reach a final vote on the bill to-night. I suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] that we read a little further in the bill but with the understanding that a final vote shall be taken on Monday morning.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, if the bill is to be read further for amendment, and if amendments are to be voted on, it seems to me, if we are not going to have a final vote on it, we might as well rise now, because if we enter into any agreement Members will very soon leave the Chamber.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think that might be the wisest thing to do.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. As I understand it, the bill will be taken up for consideration again on Monday?

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from Ohio if we will be permitted to continue with this bill on Monday, or will we be sidetracked with District day, or some other proposition, and not permitted to finish the bill?

Mr. LONGWORTH. That would be a matter for the House to decide. So far as I am concerned, I would favor proceeding with this bill.

Mr. McKENZIE. I regret to say that we have fooled away a great deal of this day with speeches when we could have had the bill passed.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think a good deal of time has been wasted.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, is Monday District day or suspension day?

Mr. LONGWORTH. The rule provides that on certain Mondays District business shall be in order. It is for the House to decide which it prefers.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Has the gentleman from Illinois any idea of how many more amendments are going to be offered?

Mr. McKENZIE. I think it would puzzle the Lord Almighty to answer that question.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. I understand the gentleman from Ohio will move on Monday that we go ahead and finish this bill?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I shall favor the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] to go into the Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the bill now pending for the acceptance of Henry Ford's offer for Muscle Shoals, and to include in such remarks two telegrams received relating to the discussion of the bill, I here set out first the telegrams, which are as follows:

UNIONTOWN, ALA., March 8.

Hon. W. B. OLIVER,
Washington, D. C.:

Please have read into the RECORD protest against unfair attack made on Alabama Power Co. by JAMES and MADDEN.

G. D. STOLLENWERCK,
President Chamber of Commerce.
VAL TAYLOR,
President Cane Brake Loan & Trust Co.
W. J. WHITE,
President Planters & Merchants Bank.
W. H. TAYLOE.
WILLIAM MUNFORD.
S. T. WHITFIELD.
A. C. DAVIDSON.
W. J. VAIDEN.
B. F. HATCH.
J. G. WHITE.

MARION, ALA., March 8.

Hon. W. B. OLIVER,
Washington, D. C.:

Kindly have the following read into the RECORD: "We, the undersigned, being citizens of a community served by the Alabama Power Co., being familiar with the methods of such company and believing the same to have been a great factor in the development of the State of Alabama, do condemn the unfair and unjust attacks made upon said company by Representatives JAMES and MADDEN."

J. B. HATCHETT,
W. L. HOGUE,
Deputy Solicitors.
J. F. GLASS, County Commissioner.
C. E. SUTTLE,
J. M. MOORE, President,
The Peoples Bank of Marion, Ala.
J. D. DENNIS,
GEORGE P. WHITE,
A. F. ARMSTRONG, President,
Marion Central Bank.
CHAS. C. JOHNSON,
Superintendent of Schools.

The gentlemen whose names are signed to the above telegrams are my personal friends and leading business men and representative citizens of Marion and Uniontown, Ala., in my district.

Since one of these telegrams makes reference to the part, in the belief of the sender, that the Alabama Power Co. has played in the development of the State of Alabama, I think it proper to insert the following statement made by me on that subject before the Military Affairs Committee of the House on March 8, 1922, as shown on page 994 of the hearings of the committee, and which views I still hold, and feel that a great majority of the people of my State still hold:

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, the Alabama delegation has received a letter from Hon. B. M. Allen, of Birmingham, Ala., who presided at a large mass meeting in Montgomery on Wednesday last, at which certain resolutions were adopted, and he has requested that the resolutions be read to the committee, and I desire to now read them. They are very complete and informing, and set forth in a forceful, proper, and accurate way the attitude of the people of Alabama on the subject to which the resolutions relate.

MEMORIAL TO THE PRESIDENT AND CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES AND THE COMMITTEES OF CONGRESS, ADOPTED BY THE STATE-WIDE MASS MEETING HELD IN THE CITY AUDITORIUM AT MONTGOMERY ON WEDNESDAY, MARCH 1, 1922.

We, citizens of Alabama, 5,000 strong, representing county governments, municipal authorities, women's clubs, labor bodies, chambers of commerce, civic bodies, and farmers' organizations from every quarter of the State, in mass meeting assembled at Montgomery, with full confidence in both the justice and wisdom of the President and Congress, do hereby declare:

That while the entire Muscle Shoals stretch of the Tennessee River lies within the borders of this State, the right to control and regulate the river in the interest of the Nation's commerce has been ceded by the State of Alabama to the Federal Government. We recognize the fact that Muscle Shoals is the property of the Nation, belonging alike to the people of all the States, and, while we claim no greater right than any other State to say what shall be done with Muscle Shoals, we believe that we but exercise the guaranties of the Federal Constitution when we petition Congress that this great national asset be not employed by the Government as an instrumentality for fastening upon us and upon our children and our children's children the yoke of an oppressive and burdensome monopoly.

We affirm that the Alabama Power Co. now owns and controls a number of splendid power sites on the Coosa River in this State; that it owns and controls all of the available power sites on Little River in Alabama; and that it owns the wonderful power site at Cherokee Bluffs on the Tallapoosa River in this State; that in the 14 years since its incorporation it has built one power dam in this State and commenced work on one other dam; that at the present rate of developement of the power potentialities already under the control of this corporation more than 100 years will go by before all of these dormant water powers are harnessed; that it has been the policy of that corporation to develop only such power as can be sold in small units and at high prices; that controlling as it does all of the great water-power sites in a State blessed by God Almighty with wonderful power possibilities, it, a foreign-controlled corporation, is in position to litigate with any American-owned organization which may seek to develop any one of Alabama's wasting water powers, just as it now threatens to litigate with Henry Ford, or with the Government, if either seeks to build Dam No. 3 at Muscle Shoals, or to control the Government-built steam plant and transmission line at Gorgas; that in spite of the fact that this foreign-owned corporation has long enjoyed exemption from taxation in this State, it has been busy ever since its entrance into Alabama in preempting every great power site within our borders, and in so copper riveting its hold on all of Alabama's great hydroelectric potentialities as to prevent for all time their development by any possible competitor; that it has been its policy to buy these power sites at farm-land prices and to hold them in perpetuity as power sites; that it already controls the utilities in our principal cities and is year by year securing the control of the utilities in our towns and villages; and that if it secures Muscle Shoals it will have perfected its control of all of our great water powers and will hold in its selfish grasp all of these instrumentalities, placed within our borders by a beneficent Providence for the promotion of the commercial and industrial welfare of all the people.

We hold that it would be a travesty on legislation if, after many years of congressional consideration of how best to conserve the power in our navigable streams for the benefit of all the people and how most surely to preserve them from being used as instruments of monopoly, the Nation's greatest water power should be handed over to the Alabama Power Co. under the national water power act; and we further hold that it would be the quintessence of legislative folly for the Government, after 10 years of investigation as to how best to free the United States from its dependence upon a foreign power for its supply of nitrogen for explosives, in the event of war, and after spending millions of dollars in the construction of the greatest nitrogen fixation plant in the world, to turn over the only power capable of successfully operating the nitrate plant to a corporation owned and controlled by foreigners.

We remind Congress that just as the Alabama Power Co. has returned evil for good to the people of Alabama, so it is the one corporation whose dealings with our country in the grim emergency of war was so shameless, selfish, and conscienceless that when its conduct was investigated by a select committee of Congress the minority members of this committee joined with the majority in denouncing its brazen and sordid betrayal of its duty to a war-beset nation.

Again affirming our utmost confidence in the ability and the desire of the President and the Congress of the United States and the committees of Congress to reach the soundest solution of the pending questions relating to the disposition of Muscle Shoals, we wish to express ourselves with regard to Mr. Henry Ford's proffered contract with the Government. The subject is of such vital interest to the people of Alabama that with greatest enthusiasm they have assembled in this meeting for the purpose of making this memorial:

Upon mature deliberation, we, as citizens, do express our firm conviction that it is to the best interest of the United States and to the interest of the people of Alabama that the offer of Henry Ford be accepted and concluded as a binding contract, and for the following, among other, reasons:

The acceptance of the Ford offer would insure the operation in Alabama of at least two great organizations engaged in the development and sale of hydroelectric energy, and would further insure competition in the distribution and sale of power throughout the territory which can be reached by transmission lines from the several power sites on the Tennessee River whose development is within the contemplation of the Ford offer.

The Ford offer insures the operation of United States nitrate plant No. 2 for a period of 100 years for the production of fertilizers in time of peace and for the production of nitrates for explosives in the event of war.

It insures to the millions of farmers throughout the United States, whose organizations have with unanimity indorsed the offer of Henry Ford, the continuous operation of this Government-built plant for the production of nitrate fertilizers in competition with the present producers of nitrates, by a company whose profits will be limited to 8 per cent, and in sufficient volume to have a controlling influence in fixing the price of nitrates and nitrate fertilizers for agricultural uses.

The Ford offer insures to the people of the United States the operation of nitrate plant No. 2 and its maintenance in such a constant state of readiness, with a trained force of operatives, as to guarantee to the Government and its citizens an independent, internal supply of nitrates, in exact accord with the announced intention of Congress as expressed in section 124 of the national defense act of 1916.

The Ford offer guarantees the construction of Dam No. 3, and makes provision for use by the people of the United States for purposes of navigation of one of the country's largest and most important rivers which is an integral part of the great Mississippi River waterway system.

In the consideration given to the various offers for Muscle Shoals much has been said about the profit and loss that would accrue to the Government of the United States and to its people from the acceptance or the rejection of the various offers. We respectfully urge that a plan which looks to a constant supply of cheap fertilizers for the farmers of the Nation through a period of 100 years, which insures to American industry during that period the use of nearly 1,000,000 horsepower of electric energy, which provides for the security of the Nation in the event of war, and which guarantees the navigability of one of the country's greatest rivers for all time. These continuing additions to the resources of the Nation, if it were possible to express them in terms of dollars, with interest at 4 per cent, will in the course of 100 years add so vastly to the wealth of the Nation and the prosperity of its people that any difference in the price of the nitrate plant as fixed in the several offers, and any difference between the purchase price offered and the estimated possible scrap value of the property, is dwarfed into insignificance.

With these considerations in view and having in mind the freedom of our own people from a galling and oppressive water-power monopoly, the freedom of the American farmer from a burdensome and grinding fertilizer monopoly, the opening of a great river to navigation, and the security of the country in the event of war, we urge the President and the Congress of the United States to accept the offer of Henry Ford, whom we verily believe seeks through his offer to dedicate to the American people and especially to the farmers of America his genius and his fortune.

We indorse the sentiment "America first" and Muscle Shoals first for Americans and, above all, for American farmers. Henry Ford is a typical American, who by his genius has done more for country people and country life than any other man of his time; a man who has the trust and confidence of the great masses of the common people, as evidenced by the resolutions adopted by every gathering of plain, ordinary Americans, including the representatives of 4,000,000 farmers, who have given voice to their sentiments in regard to his proposal for the development of Muscle Shoals.

We believe the issue in Congress is clearly drawn. It is a contest between the people and the interests which control the people's fertilizer and power resources.

On behalf of the army of the unemployed, in the interest of the great body of plain American citizens, in the name of millions of perplexed and burdened farmers, we beg our President and the Congress of the United States and its committees to promptly accept the offer of Henry Ford.

MARCH 1, 1922.

This resolution, I feel, represents the overwhelming sentiment of the people of Alabama. The statement by Governor Taylor before this committee is evidence that it represents the sentiment of the people of Tennessee.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to print, the following telegrams are inserted in the RECORD in connection with the debate on the acceptance of the Ford offer for Muscle Shoals at the request of the senders thereof:

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., March 10, 1924.

Hon. W. B. BANKHEAD, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

I note in the press that certain Members of Congress have been making unjust and unfounded criticisms of Alabama Power Co. and its officials. You doubtless are aware that there is no basis for the bitterness and vindictiveness contained in such criticisms, and I trust that you will be good enough to see that these statements do not go unanswered. This company, as you know, is doing a great development work in this State and means much to the success and prosperity of industry.

JOHN S. STONE.

RUSSELLVILLE, ALA., March 8, 1924.

Hon. W. B. BANKHEAD, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

I regard the Alabama Power Co. as a useful institution. We are glad to have them serve us. They tend to develop this section. Please read this telegram into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

W. H. KEY.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., March 8, 1924.

Congressman W. B. BANKHEAD,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

We, as citizens of Alabama, earnestly request you to enter a vigorous protest on our part against the unfair and unjust criticism of the Alabama Power Co. by different Members of Congress, and we request you to see that this telegram be read into the records of the Ford hearing.

CHARLES F. DEBARDELEBEN.
MILTON H. FIES.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., March 8, 1924.

Congressman W. B. BANKHEAD,
Care House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

We as citizens of Alabama vigorously protest against the unfair and unjust criticisms of Alabama Power Co. by different Members of Congress, and we request you to see that this telegram be read into the RECORD of the Ford hearing.

FRANK NELSON.
A. B. ALDRIDGE.

RUSSELLVILLE, ALA., March 8, 1924.

Hon. W. B. BANKHEAD, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

The press reports show that Congressman MADDEN in the debate on Muscle Shoals yesterday took the Alabama Power Co. to task about its attitude and standing in Alabama. I am for Ford for Muscle Shoals, but I am for the Alabama Power Co. for commercial power, and feel, as do a great many others, that there is plenty of room in Alabama for both companies. The information I get is that the Alabama Power Co. is constructive in its policy, and necessarily could not enter any town without the consent and desire of that town in the way of a franchise. If the press reports are correct, then Mr. MADDEN'S statements with reference to the Alabama Power Co. are unmerited. And if you will, I will ask you to read this telegram into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

This body to-day passed the following resolution:

"Whereas it appears from the press reports received that Hon. MARTIN B. MADDEN, of the House of Representatives, attacked on March 6 the integrity of the Alabama Power Co.; and

"Whereas, in the opinion of this body, such attack was wholly unjustified by facts: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the board of directors of the Anniston Junior Chamber of Commerce condemns such unfair and unwarranted attacks upon a public utility of this State that has done and is doing so much for the upbuilding of Alabama and especially this district.

"Resolved further, That this resolution, which shall not be construed as indorsing any particular offer for Muscle Shoals, shall be placed in the congressional records of the Muscle Shoals case, and that a copy of this resolution be wired to each Member of the Alabama delegation in Congress."

BOARD OF DIRECTORS JUNIOR CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

RUSSELLVILLE, ALA., March 8, 1924.

Hon. WM. B. BANKHEAD, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

The citizens of Russellville and Franklin County are square behind Henry Ford for Muscle Shoals and heartily indorse Congressman MADDEN'S remarks in behalf of the Ford offer. Some few people here are stockholders in the Alabama Power Co., or have retainers from them. Excepting those, we are hundred per cent for the Ford offer. We consider MADDEN right on every statement. Read this wire into the RECORD.

This body to-day passed the following resolution:

Whereas the press of the country quoting Hon. MARTIN B. MADDEN, of the House of Representatives, on March 6, as attacking the integrity of Alabama Power Co., and whereas such attack, in the opinion of this body, is wholly unauthorized by the facts: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the board of directors of the Anniston Chamber of Commerce while indorsing no particular offer made for Muscle Shoals does nevertheless condemn such unfair and unwarranted attacks upon a public utility of this State that is doing so much for the upbuilding of the State and especially the Anniston district.

Resolved further, That these resolutions be placed in CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in Muscle Shoals case and a copy wired to each Member of the Alabama delegation in Congress.

MONTGOMERY, ALA., March 8, 1924.

Hon. LISTER HILL, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

I am instructed by the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce of Montgomery, in special meeting assembled at noon to-day, to convey the following sentiment: Note press reports relative to an attack made on floor of House yesterday against Alabama Power Co. This would indicate Alabama Power Co. is regarded by business interests of Alabama as being an outlaw and pirate and has no friends. We feel, as a representative business organization, it would be unfair if we did not protest against this attack. We regard the Alabama Power Co. as being one of our progressive corporations, and it enjoys the respect and confidence of a large part of our population. They are seeking in every honorable way to develop Alabama, and instead of being unjustly censured we feel they should be commended for their efforts in upbuilding this section. Please have this read in the records.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, MONTGOMERY, ALA.,
W. F. BLACK, Secretary.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 11, 1924.

W. F. BLACK,
Secretary Chamber of Commerce, Montgomery, Ala.:

I received on Monday, March 10, your telegram protesting against attack made on Alabama Power Co., which telegram was published in the Montgomery Advertiser on Sunday morning, March 9. The attack referred to in your telegram can be construed to be the speech of Representative FINIS J. GARRETT, the Democratic leader of the House, or the speech of Representative MARTIN B. MADDEN, or the speech of Representative W. FRANK JAMES, or my speech delivered in the House on March 5 for the acceptance of the Ford offer. If your telegram refers to my speech I have no apologies to make. On the contrary, I wish to reiterate every word uttered in my speech to the end that the people of my State may know of the activities of the Alabama Power Co. in its effort to defeat the Ford offer to the great detriment of the people and to gain a monopoly of the water power of Alabama for its own selfish purposes. When a candidate for Congress I announced that I would fight the Alabama Power Co. so long as it stood between Henry Ford and Muscle Shoals. The people trusted me and elected me. I am now keeping faith with them. I am sending you a copy of my speech above referred to. Since you published your telegram to me, in order that my conduct in Congress may be publicly and fairly judged, I request that you publish this telegram to you, together with my speech and the following telegram sent by you to the Military Affairs Committee, of which I am a member, which telegram reads as follows:

"MONTGOMERY, ALA., February 17, 1923.

"Hon. JULIUS KAHN,
"Chairman Military Affairs Committee,
"House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

"Whereas it appears from the public press that the Alabama Power Co. is making bid to Government for the acquisition of Muscle Shoals and all subsidiary plants; and

"Whereas it is the opinion of the board of directors of Chamber of Commerce of Montgomery, Ala., that the Alabama Power Co. already has practically a monopoly on all water-power rights in Alabama, except Muscle Shoals, which rights now possessed will require years to develop, therefore we believe that any further grant of power to that company would be a calamity not only to Alabama but to the entire territory contiguous thereto, and will retard the development of this country commercially and agriculturally for years to come. We urgently request your committee not to consider the offer of the Alabama Power Co. as competitive with the offers made by other people for the development of Muscle Shoals.

"CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, MONTGOMERY, ALA.,
"W. F. BLACK, Secretary."

I am placing in the RECORD this telegram to you and your telegram to me as requested.

LISTER HILL, M. C.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MAPES, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 518 and had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that business in order on Monday, provided for in the calendar, shall be set aside until after the disposition of the pending bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that business in order on Monday next be set aside, and that this bill shall be in order. Is there objection?

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 36 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, March 10, 1924, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

391. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925; said estimate is for driving, maintenance, and operation of an automobile for the Vice President, which automobile is now used by the President pro tempore (H. Doc. No. 213); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

392. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, to repair damage by typhoon to buildings, fences, etc., of the agricultural experiment station on the island of Guam, $3,500, and for the protection of the so-called Oregon & California Railroad lands and Coos Bay Wagon Road lands, $11,990; in all $15,400 (H. Doc. No. 214); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

393. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year 1924, for miscellaneous expenses pertaining to the activities of the Federal Farm Loan Board, amounting to $5,000 (H. Doc. No. 215); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

394. A letter from the Attorney General, transmitting letter in response to House Resolution 211, directing him to transmit to the House the names of the two Members of Congress mentioned in the report of the grand jury of the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois, and the nature of the charges made against such Members of Congress (H. Doc. No. 216); to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. VESTAL: Committee on Weights, Coinage, and Measures. H. R. 5259. A bill to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the commencement on June 18, 1923, of the work of carving on Stone Mountain, in the State of Georgia, a monument to the valor of the soldiers of the South, which was the inspiration of their sons and daughters and grandsons and granddaughters in the Spanish-American and World Wars, and in memory of Warren G. Harding, President of the United States of America, in whose administration the work was begun; without amendment (Rept. No. 277). Referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. ROACH: Committee on War Claims. S. 129. A bill for the relief of the William D. Mullen Co.; without amendment (Rept. No. 276). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3760) granting a pension to W. C. Merritt, and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. LITTLE: A bill (H. R. 7751) to provide for the erection of a Federal building at Paola, Kans.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7752) to provide for the erection of a Federal building at Olathe, Kans.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7753) to provide for the erection of a Federal building at Osawatomie, Kans.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. HILL of Washington: A bill (H. R. 7754) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building at Oroville, Wash.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. VINSON of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 7755) for the purchase of a post-office site at Russell, Ky.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. HAMMER: A bill (H. R. 7756) to prohibit the collection of a surcharge for the transportation of persons or baggage in connection with the payment for parlor or sleeping car accommodations; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. MADDEN: A bill (H. R. 7757) for the abandonment of a portion of the present channel of the South Branch of the Chicago River; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HAUGEN: A bill (H. R. 7758) to further amend an act entitled "An act to regulate foreign commerce by prohibiting the admission into the United States of certain adulterated grain and seeds unfit for seeding purposes," approved August 24, 1912; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. DEAL: A bill (H. R. 7759) providing for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at Norfolk, Va.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. HASTINGS: A bill (H. R. 7760) to reimburse certain Eastern Cherokees who removed themselves to the Cherokee Nation under the terms of the eighth article of the treaty of December 29, 1835; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. SCHNEIDER: A bill (H. Dak., urging an increase in the duty on wheat from 30 to 60 cents per bushel, the repeal of the drawback provision and the milling-in-bond privilege, also the passage of the Wallace plan for the marketing of wheat; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

SUNDAY, March 9, 1924.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, with whom there is no beginning nor end of days, Thou art teaching us most frequently that the present life is but a shadow. We are inclined too often to number our days by the things of time and sense, and to measure life by heart throbs or figures on a dial. But we come this morning beseeching Thee that we may have before us that dateless life towards which all other forms of existence tend. We beseech of Thee to be with us we bear one to the other remembrances of past friendship and opportunity and possibility. We pray, our Father, that not only shall there be granted unto those that mourn the sweetness of infinite consolation but to those who have to do with the duties and bear the burdens of the present a new sense of responsibility, realizing that after all our tenure of office is not held in the presence of humankind alone but in Thy presence that determines life and its destiny. Hear us, be with us in this hour, and grant us Thy blessing now and always. Through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The reading clerk (John C. Crockett) read the following communication:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, D. C., March 9, 1924.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. LAWRENCE C. PHIPPS, a Senator from the State of Colorado, to perform the duties of the Chair this legislative day.

ALBERT B. CUMMINS,
President pro tempore.

Mr. PHIPPS thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer.

THE JOURNAL.

On request of Mr. LODGE and by unanimous consent the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATOR NELSON.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I offer the following resolutions and ask for their adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the resolutions.

The resolutions (S. Res. 187) were read, and considered as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. KNUTE NELSON, late a Senator from the State of Minnesota.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the business of the Senate be now suspended to enable his associates to pay tribute to his high character and distinguished public services.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, in the death of Senator KNUTE NELSON, America lost one of its strong, sturdy, self-relying men. For more than fifty years he served in positions of honor and trust to which he had been elected by the American people. The last twenty-nine years of this service was spent as a member of this body. A citizen, born on foreign soil, but whose life was spent in the service of his adopted country. His life's record is enrolled on the pages of its history as a soldier, farmer, lawyer, statesman.

This plain rugged man, who arose from poverty to a position of honor and trust leaves a lesson of inspiration for all the youth of America. KNUTE NELSON possessed the essentials of a great man. He hated sham and disliked ostentatious display. His plain, straight forward manner of address and action, his simple life, his devotion to family and friends, and his loyalty to what he considered to be his country's welfare, stamped him as a man who always remained true to his own ideals.

Ibsen says "To be true to his God, man must be true to himself." KNUTE NELSON was above all things true to himself. Therefore, the people of Minnesota affectionately called him "Knute." He came among them as a pioneer. He suffered the trials and privations of the early pioneers. He lived the simple, rugged life of the farmer.

KNUTE NELSON was born in Voss, Norway, on the 2d day of February, 1843. His father died when he was three years old. In 1849, when six years of age, he emigrated with his mother, to America. They settled in Chicago, where the young lad sold papers in order that he might help his mother and provide for their support. They moved to Dane County, Wisconsin, in the fall of 1850, where young Knute attended the common school, suffering the difficulties and privations of the pioneer youth of that day. He entered Albion Academy in 1858, where he attended three years. He did not finish his course at Albion on account of the outbreak of the war between the States. He enlisted in the Union Army on July 2, 1861, at Racine, Wis., and was mustered into the service on the same day as a private in Company B, Fourth Wisconsin Volunteers. He was wounded and captured in action at Port Hudson, La., June 14, 1863; was held as a prisoner of war at Port Hudson until July 9, 1863, when he returned to his company. He was appointed corporal and served with his company until July 14, 1864, when he was honorably mustered out of service by reason of expiration of term of enlistment. At the close of the war he returned to Albion Academy, finished his course, and became a law student at Madison in the office of Hon. William F. Vilas, who was afterwards Postmaster General in President Cleveland's Cabinet and later United States Senator from Wisconsin. Mr. NELSON was admitted to the bar in 1867, and immediately commenced the practice of law. In the fall of the same year he was elected to the State Assembly of Wisconsin and was reelected the following year.

At the close of his second term in the assembly, he moved to Alexandria, Minn., where he made his home until his death. He entered a United States homestead of 120 acres adjoining the village of Alexandria, and commenced farming and the practice of law. He was county attorney of Douglas County, Minn., for three years, from 1872 to 1875; and also a member of the State senate for four years, from 1875 to 1879. He was a presidential elector in 1880 on the Garfield ticket; and a member of the board of regents of the University of Minnesota from 1882 to 1893. He was elected to Congress in 1882 from what was then called the fifth district of Minnesota, and served three terms, when he declined reelection. He then resumed the practice of law in Alexandria, Minn. In 1892, he was unanimously nominated as the Republican candidate for Governor of Minnesota, and was elected by a plurality of over 14,000. A renomination and reelection by a plurality of 60,000 followed in 1894. Soon after his reelection as governor he was elected to the United States Senate by the Minnesota Legislature in 1895, to which position he was reelected for the terms beginning in 1901, 1907, 1913, and 1919. He died the evening of April 28, 1923, on board a train, while traveling from Washington to his Minnesota home. He lies buried in the little cemetery on the outskirts of the city of Alexandria, Minn., beside his wife, neighbors, and friends who had preceded him on that long journey that all humanity must make.

This is the record of the eventful life of KNUTE NELSON—the farmer, the lawyer, the soldier, the Senator of the United States—Minnesota's most distinguished citizen. A man who loved his people and whose people loved him. He lived to see his country pass through several crises. He will live in history as an example of what America has done for the frugal, industrious, honest immigrant, who came to her shore seeking the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, my friendship with Senator NELSON began many years ago. I was elected to Congress in 1886 and took my seat in December, 1887. It was there that I met Senator NELSON. He had already served through two Congresses and had achieved an important position in the House. He was then, as always, a man of marked qualities, full of courage and possessed of real strength, both morally and intellectually. I came to know him quite well and served with him in the House until his retirement in 1888. I did not see him again until he came to the Senate in 1895. I had come into the Senate two years earlier, but from 1895 until his death we were constantly associated. It was then that I came to know him very well. He was a man of great vigor, both physically and mentally. He was very independent in his opinions and perfectly fearless in the assertion of his convictions. He was a strong man in every way, a good lawyer, and a most excellent Senator, hard working, diligent, and always master of any subject which he took up and to which he gave his attention. He was a man of intense patriotism who had served through the Civil War as a private, rising, as he said, to the rank of corporal, a gallant soldier who had been wounded and taken prisoner at Port Hudson.

There never was a more thorough American than he, but he had a very loyal nature and always retained his affection for the land of his birth. As the years went on, by his force of character and his mental strength, he secured such a position in the Senate that he was always listened to with close attention and all he said carried a great deal of weight.

I have seen him more than once, by one of his vigorous speeches, change votes in the Senate in debate and carry other Senators with him by the mere force of his character and good sense. Everyone recognized, whether they agreed with him or not, the honesty of his opinions and the strength in argument with which he presented them. He filled a large place in the Senate and commanded a respect which is only given to men who have proved their qualities of sincerity and conviction.

His death brought to me a sense of great personal loss. There were many memories which we had shared and I had for him a very real affection. I had known him so long and so well that I had come very strongly to realize that, although his manner was sometimes blunt and he was never at any time a phrase maker, he meant all he said and that he had the simplicity of truth and warm affections which never failed his friends. He had reached a ripe age, strong and vigorous to the last. To the Senate, to the country, and to his State, his death was not only a severe loss but leaves behind him an enduring sense of grief and an honored memory in the hearts of all who knew him and served with him.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, America, benign foster mother of many aliens from many lands, lost one of her most devoted adopted sons when our friend, Senator KNUTE NELSON, passed on.

His life was typical of true citizenship, and may be looked upon as a real inspiration to the naturalized American as well as to the native-born of humble origin who must, solely by his own efforts, face and win the battles of life or be forever vanquished. He was not a "hyphenate" at any time in his career, but, instead, a genuine American of the highest order. Our Nation has had other examples of loyalty on the part of foreign-born citizens who have deeply loved, and ardently served, their adopted land, but we of the Senate will never know one who will outdo KNUTE NELSON in devotion to Americanism—in everything that the word may imply.

Even in his early young-manhood he gave evidence of what he thought of his oath of allegiance to the United States and the Constitution, when he joined the ranks of the Union Army, shouldered a musket, and marched away to battle, regardless of the fact that he was violently opposed to war and the principles of warfare. His military service covered a period of three years, in which he participated in the capture of Fort Jackson, the siege of Vicksburg, and several other important engagements.

During the siege of Port Hudson, La., he was wounded, taken prisoner, and not released until the Confederate troops, fortified there, surrendered.

It is said that Senator NELSON often referred to the war between the North and the South, and the service he saw in it, as his "best university," although he was in fact a close student of law and history and kept well informed about all essential matters through constant reading.

KNUTE NELSON'S election to the assembly of the Wisconsin Legislature began a public career that extended over a period of more than 50 years, most of which time was spent in, and for, the State of Minnesota, where he was greatly loved and trusted—as he was, indeed, throughout the entire Northwest. He served Minnesota twice as Governor, and three terms as Representative in Congress, prior to his service in this body. He was never defeated in a contest for public office.

When Governor NELSON came to the Senate he found many Civil War comrades here. When he answered the last roll call he left but one—myself—who had also participated in the siege of Port Hudson, to which I have referred, and had received, as he did, a lasting souvenir of the engagement—a reminder of times less pleasant than the years we subsequently spent as comrades here in Washington. We were wont, Senator NELSON and I, to have a little "reunion" on May 27 of each year, the anniversary of the occasion in 1863 that had found us both in physical trouble far away from our relatives and loved ones; and, as our other Civil War comrades retired from the Senate or were called by death, we were drawn closer together, it seemed, by that bond which has always made fellow-soldiers "brothers"—or "buddies," as the veterans of the World War say. Either word carries the appeal. Any man of the right caliber who has had military service feels it and is touched by it.

At the time of his passing Senator NELSON was the oldest member of the Senate in years and one of the oldest in seniority, having served here 28 years—always with ability, with rugged honesty, with steadfast adherence to what he thought was right.

The simplicity of his nature, his plain common sense, his courage, his lack of demagogy and hyprocisy, marked him for admiration not only at home, but abroad.

Born in Norway February 2, 1843, KNUTE NELSON came to this country with his mother at the age of six. They lived in Chicago until the fall of 1850; then moved to Dane County, Wisconsin. While working for a living he was also striving for an education, and was able to achieve graduation from the Albion Academy.

After he returned from war he took up the study of law, spending some time in the office of William F. Vilas, who later served here as a Senator from the State of Wisconsin.

Mr. President, KNUTE NELSON came to America a penniless immigrant, unable to speak or to understand the English language. His first earnings were obtained by selling newspapers on the streets of Chicago. There would now be no "immigration problem" to settle if all who seek our shores and the benefits of our glorious land were made of the same stuff. He had no time for self-pity, or for whining about the opportunities of the rich, and the downtrodden conditions of the poor; not at all. Instead, he went to work, fought and conquered poverty, and won the honor, respect, confidence, and love of his fellow-men.

We revere his memory, and ask our citizens, both young and old, to consider the outstanding points of his life and character, and see whether encouragement and inspiration may not be found therein.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I regret to announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] who had expected to pay tribute on this occasion to the late Senator NELSON is unfortunately unable to be present. He, however, prepared a brief address, which he has sent to me. I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota desire to have the address read by the Secretary?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. No; but I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The address of Senator OVERMAN was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, one by one the old landmarks of our political life are passing away; one by one the links which connect a glorious past with the present are sundered. The departed Senator in tribute to whose memory this day has been set apart, by reason of his great strength lived ten years beyond the three score and ten years spoken of by the psalmist as the allotted period for man's earthly existence. And though in the natural course of human events it was apparent that his life of usefulness and honor must soon be rounded to a peaceful close, yet his death came as a distinct shock to those who loved him well. It is given to few men to receive the measure of love and devotion accorded to him, not only by his own people, but by all who knew him.

I will leave it to others who are more familiar with it to give the detailed history of his life—a life stretching almost throughout one century and into another, and so full of usefulness and of good deeds that hardly a man of his native State but felt his death a personal loss.

In my estimation, one of the greatest of the great Senators who faithfully served his country during this century was Senator NELSON, who, after he had finished his wonderful career, soon after the adjournment of the Sixty-seventh Congress, suddenly departed this life, on a train, while returning to his old home in Minnesota, which State he so signally honored.

It was my pleasure to serve with him for 20 years in the Senate. We served together on some of the most important committees, and I think I am able to give a just opinion of him. I honored and highly respected him from the first, and as our close association in committee work and in the Senate became more intimate, I had not only the greatest reverence and respect for him but really loved him perhaps as no other man in the Senate. He was both morally and intellectually honest; simple in his habits; always open-minded and sincere; devoid of all hypocrisy and deceit, and never resorted to the tricks of a demagogue to gain favor with his associates or the people. He could always be implicitly relied upto to do the right thing as he saw it. He was indeed the very essence of a true, honest, and great man with invincible courage.

During the period of the war in the Democratic administration he divested himself of all partisanship, and, with an eye single to the best interest of the country, he loyally and ably supported all the great war measures recommended by President Wilson necessary for the winning of the war. In his youth he had served in the ranks of the Union Army and made a splendid soldier, but when any question came up which affected the vital interests of the South and the Southern soldier he was quick to throw aside all his prejudice, and it received his sympathetic consideration. He thus endeared himself to all Southern senators, and is to-day honored and revered by the people of the South. He was always ready to pay just tribute to the memory of his colleagues, especially those who had served in the Confederate Army. He was always kind, just, and generous and would gladly do a favor whenever it was in his power to do so.

In his last election to the Senate the Democrats of the South especially were glad to know that the Democratic Party in Minnesota refused to nominate anyone to oppose him. He was a true Republican and believed in Republican principles and supported them with great ability and loyalty, but he never struck below the belt. He was a high-class statesman in every respect.

As chairman of the great Judiciary Committee he was always considerate of his fellow members and never became impatient with them. His opinion always had great weight with the committee, and by them, as well as by all members of the Senate generally, he was recognized as one of the greatest lawyers in the body. He was always ready to surrender his opinion when he was convinced that he was wrong. He hated all shams and hypocrisy and never showed his temper until he was satisfied that some measure was proposed in favor of some individual, company, or corporation and against the interest of the people. He himself had come up through hard trials and tribulations and knew the people and felt it his duty always to look after their interest.

He was simple, straightforward, unassuming, and unselfish to a degree, characterized by rugged honesty and sincerity of purpose, and yet withal gentle as a woman. Like a granite pillar, his life rises before us, lofty and massive, and yet withal graceful. With its base standing enshrouded in mist—the troubles and hardships of his early life—it rises in its grandeur above the clouds, the mists fall away, and sun-kissed it stands in the light of heaven, a monument of a glory that is past and a guide to that which is to be. Indeed, he was a most remarkable man in every respect, and we will probably never see his like again. When he died the Senate lost one of its most active, industrious; and ablest members and the country one of its greatest statesmen. Peace to his ashes.

> When once their rule has reached its goal,
> Die into darkness with their days.
> But monarchs of the mind and soul,
> With light unfailing and unspent,
> Illumine fame's firmament.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I am glad to pay tribute to the memory of Senator NELSON. It was not my pleasure to become closely acquainted with him when I entered the House of Represenetatives 25 years ago, and I did not know him well until I became a member of this body on March 4, 1913, but I was very early attracted to the Senator because of a wonderful report on the floods of the Mississippi River presented by him to Congress as chairman of a special committee appointed by the Senate to study that subject. On the 15th of December, 1898, Mr. NELSON submitted this great report on the Mississippi River floods, which I wish to commend to every student of that very important subject. It is embodied in report No. 1433, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session, entitled "Floods of the Mississippi River." The report itself is brief, but, if there be a classic on that subject, it is this document prepared by Senator NELSON. The evidence taken by him and his associates comprises over 500 pages, and constitutes a voluminous and extremely able mass of testimony gathered by the committee all the way down the Mississippi from the city of St. Paul to the Gulf of Mexico.

This report, I say, first attracted me to Senator NELSON, and in conversation with him I learned that when a soldier during the Civil War he had become familiar with the Mississippi River and with the awful problems of the people living along its banks, caused by the devastating waters of the mighty stream, which carried each spring to the Gulf the accumulated rainfall of a considerable portion of 31 States of our great Union.

Senator NELSON served for a considerable period of the war in the State of Louisiana. I have often heard him talk about places such as Donaldsonville, Plaquemine, Bayou Plaquemines, Bayou Teche, the Atchafalaya River and other places which are familiar to all Louisianians but known to very few in the United States Senate. They seemed to him like the play spots of his young days; and I believe, Mr. President and Senators, that in those young days he learned to love the people of Louisiana and of the Southland. If he ever had an unkind feeling in his heart toward the people of that section I failed to find it out. On the other hand, I ascertained from much intercourse with him that he was deeply interested in the people and the problems of the lower Mississippi. His home was in the State of Minnesota whence that mighty stream takes its rise, and he had studied the problems of the river as few men ever had.

Senator NELSON had many experiences in the South which made him feel kindly to the Southern people. He was at the battle of Port Hudson, was seriously wounded there, and was a prisoner in Port Hudson from the 14th of June, 1863, until its surrender on July 9, 1863. An interesting episode connected with his stay there was that Edward Douglass White, afterward United States Senator from Louisiana, a member of the Supreme Court of the United States, and its Chief Justice—one of the greatest men this Nation ever produced—was also in Port Hudson as a Confederate soldier at the very time Senator NELSON was there. It is true that they did not ascertain that fact until many years subsequently.

I have an interesting little statement of the matter in the Senator's own words, kindly furnished to me by a gentleman who for many years was his secretary and confidential friend, Mr. Simon Michelet, who is now practicing law in this city. The episode is best told by reading first a brief letter of Mr. Byron R. Newton, former Assistant Secretary of the Treasury under Mr. Wilson. It is dated February 12, 1923, from Bayside, Long Island, and addressed to Senator NELSON:

MY DEAR SENATOR NELSON: During my term of office as Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, I recall an interesting little incident that occurred at the White House one evening, at a dinner party, when, as we were smoking before going in to the musical entertainment, you and Chief Justice White became deeply engrossed in the discussion of some personal matter, and later President Wilson told some of us that you and the Chief Justice had discovered that you had met on some battlefield during the Civil War, you as a Union and he as a Confederate soldier, and that one of you had been wounded. The meeting that night in the White House, as I understood it, was the first knowledge that either of you had of the other's identity, with relation to the war incident.

I would greatly appreciate it if you would let me have the exact facts of the interesting incident. I want to use the story in a series of magazine articles of similar character, later to be published in book form.

I think you will remember me as having gone up to Bemidji on one occasion to select a post-office site, when I had charge of public buildings in the Treasury Department.

Sincerely,

BYRON R. NEWTON.

To this letter Senator NELSON replied:

FEBRUARY 16, 1923.

Hon. BYRON R. NEWTON,
Bayside, Long Island, N. Y.

DEAR FRIEND: I heartily thank you for your kind letter of the 14th. Your letter put me in mind of old times, and of your kindness to me while you were Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

The incident you refer to, in reference to Chief Justice White and myself, is in the main correct. We did not meet and become acquainted at that time. He was a junior officer in the Confederate Army and had been sent in there with a message after the commencement of the siege, and remained inside with the Confederates until the place surrendered. I was only a private in a Wisconsin regiment, and in the charge that our forces made upon the Confederate breastworks on the 14th of June, 1863, I was wounded very near the Confederate breastworks, where I lay from somewhere about sunrise in the morning until dusk at night, when the Confederates, who were mounting a picket right on the outside of their breastworks, came and picked me up and took me inside. I remained in the Confederate hospital until the place surrendered on the 9th of July.

The place surrendered because the news came that Vicksburg had been taken on the 4th, and because the Confederates were short of provisions and on the verge of starving. In the hospital I was treated as well as their own men. We were in a big tent, where there were about 14 of us who were wounded, two Union men (myself one of them), and the rest Confederates.

The last 10 days we had nothing much to eat, except a little corn bread and mule meat. To this was added sassafras tea, made from the roots that were dug out of the ground in the ravine where the hospital was located.

It was only at Washington, at the time you refer to, that Justice White and I compared notes and found that we had both been on the inside at Port Hudson at the same time; that is, from the 14th of June until the 9th of July, 1863. My wound was not very serious. I got over it quite easily. About the time the place surrendered, I was walking around on crutches.

Yours, very truly,

KNUTE NELSON.

Mr. Michelet also gave me a brief memorandum about that same episode, prepared by Senator NELSON, dated the 6th of September, 1919. It presents the incident in a little different way, and reads as follows:

I was taken prisoner and sent to the hospital the day that Port Hudson was to surrender. I was in the hospital tent. The colored men around knew who the Northern people were, and knew who the Southern people were. All those who were able when they knew Port Hudson was to surrender went up on a hill and witnessed it.

I had a crutch and was unable to go. I finally beckoned to a colored man and he followed me out into the brush. I then asked him if he could procure a horse for me. The next day he gave me a knowing look, and I followed him around to a ravine and there, sure enough, he had a fine horse and a Mexican saddle for me. The horse was a sorrel animal and a fine specimen. In the Southern Army they had a different practice from what they had in the Northern Army. The officers owned their own animals. The horse I got was the property of a chaplain. I never hated so much in my life to part with an animal as I did this one, for when the war was over I had no further use for it.

I desire to read at this point a letter received by Mr. Michelet from former Vice President Marshall:

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz., November 12, 1923.

Mr. SIMON MICHELET,
719 Albee Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I do not know if I have that historic temperament which enables me to express a dispassionate view of the late Senator KNUTE NELSON, of Minnesota.

I became acquainted with him very shortly after I became Vice President of the United States. That acquaintance soon ripened into a personal friendship. He had in my opinion a character that was above reproach, an intellect that was keen and farseeing, but above all, he possessed what is so much needed now, intellectual honesty and the courage to stand by his convictions regardless of personal or party advantage.

No man born under the flag had ever a greater love of American institutions. A soldier in the Union Army, his fight ended at Appomattox. He was an honor to his country and well deserves the grateful memory in which his life and public service are held by all those who came in contact with him.

It is the lives of such men as he that give me hope for the perpetuity of the Republic. It can not be but that from his ashes there will yet spring millions of men imbued with like desire to serve their day and generation well.

Very truly yours,

THOS. R. MARSHALL.

I also wish to read the following letter from our former colleague and friend, Senator John Sharp Williams, of Mississippi:

CEDAR GROVE PLANTATION,
Star Route, Yazoo City, Miss., November 2, 1923.

Mr. SIMON MICHELET,
719 Albee Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. MICHELET: Yours reached me. I was much distressed when I heard of Senator KNUTE NELSON'S death. The salient characteristics of the man were unfaltering courage of conviction, remarkable intellectual integrity, a rugged common sense, which reached right conclusions of opinion and conduct almost intuitively.

To these he added immense industry and amiability to "all men of good will." Much more might be said, but if you have measured what amounts to real good in men, in the way that I measure it, you will agree that the mere mention of these traits of "The Old Viking," as I called him, sound his praise as fully as could "angels trumpet-tongued."

With cordial regards, now as ever,

Your friend,

JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS.

Mr. President, I am bringing up these episodes about the war because they illustrate something that we ought not to forget in this body. They show that Senator NELSON and the other men who fought against each other during that greatest war in which this country was ever engaged, and I hope the greatest in which it ever will be engaged, certainly the most fratricidal, have for many years had the kindliest feelings toward one another. It is nearly 60 years since the Civil War ended, and in our body to-day there is only one survivor of it—the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], who was also in the service of his country in that very section of the Union. The last preceding member of this body who was a soldier in that war, who has since been called to his last reward, was Senator Bankhead of Alabama. He and the late Senator NELSON were very intimate friends.

Many of you doubtless recall that wonderful parade in this city in honor of the selective service men, when on the 4th of September, 1917, the Members of Congress marched down Pennsylvania Avenue in full strength, and hundreds of thousands of people thronged the sidewalks to witness the inspiring spectacle. On that occasion John Bankhead and KNUTE NELSON—one the ex-Confederate, the other the ex-Union soldier—marched side by side as intimate friends, though former opponents in war. When, later, on March 1, 1920, Senator Bankhead was called to his eternal reward, his old colleague Senator NELSON, then in his 77th year, went all the way from here to Alabama to attend the funeral of his friend and associate of many years. It was a beautiful tribute for NELSON to pay to Bankhead, and I am sure that if Bankhead were here to-day his voice would tremble with emotion in speaking of his old friend NELSON. Thank God, all the wounds of that cruel struggle have vanished long, long ago!

Mr. President, I do not know what I can say in addition to the remarks of others to give my real estimate of the strong, sturdy, splendid character of KNUTE NELSON. Few men in the history of this Republic have served their country so many years. He was for four years a soldier in the Civil War, two years a member of the Wisconsin Legislature, four years a member of the State Senate of Minnesota, six years a Member of the House of Representatives from that State, four years Governor of his State, and nearly 29 years a United States Senator from it. Almost fifty years of his life were spent in the public service, and after every service it could be truthfully said of KNUTE NELSON: "Well done, good and faithful servant," for he performed his duty well in every position assigned to him during a long life.

Mr. President, I had the pleasure and the honor of serving for nearly eleven years with Senator NELSON on the Committee on Commerce. I was early impressed with his truthfulness, his sturdy common sense, his honesty in all matters, his strong sense of justice, and the broadness of his vision. It could be said of Senator NELSON as of few men that he was a Senator and a statesman of the United States of America rather than of the State of Minnesota. True to Minnesota's interests in every particular, so far as my observation went, his vision was bounded only by the limits of the Union, and he looked faithfully after every interest of this Republic.

I was closely associated with Senator NELSON in connection with appropriations for the waterways of the land, and for the control of the floods of the Mississippi River. He understood both of these problems well, and was favorable to both in the broadest and best sense.

In conclusion let me say, sir, that the people of the flood section of the Mississippi, which is composed of large sections in Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Kentucky, Tennessee, Arkansas, Mississippi, and Louisiana, never had a better friend than KNUTE NELSON.

We mourn him, and we honor his memory in the highest degree.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the poet says:

Lives of great men all remind us
We can make our lives sublime,
And departing, leave behind us
Footprints on the sands of time.

This is as true to-day as when it was written. Opportunities for heroic service and great advancement are more numerous to-day than ever before. We live in a wonderful age, and we live in a wonderful land. It holds out to every boy the brightest hopes. More than anywhere else real genuine success may be attained by everyone. Whether a young man succeeds or fails depends largely upon himself. Every boy here can start in life with every asset really needed to attain success. Neither riches nor influence are required. Industry, energy, determination, perseverance, frugality, economy, honesty, sobriety, faithfulness, and a willingness to do whatever comes to hand, knowing that all honest toil is honorable, will bring success. What boy can not have these assets if he will, but no one can give them to him. He must have and live these attributes, and he can if he will. Doing so, success is sure in every walk of life. This is shown almost uniformly by the lives of men great in art, science, education, industry, and politics.

The life of Senator KNUTE NELSON is a striking example of this truth. He had neither wealth nor position nor influence to aid him, but, by his own inherent worth, indomitable will, ceaseless energy, unswerving honesty, and unfailing faithfulness to trust, he reached the highest position he could attain.

No greater tribute can be paid to him than to tell of the trust the people had in him. He was born in Norway of humble parentage, and came to this country at an early age. Before he was twenty-one he answered the call of his adopted country and fought for its preservation. He was wounded and made a prisoner in 1863. When the war was over he came home to do his duty in peace as he had done it in war. His neighbors had already learned his worth, and they elected him to their legislative assembly in 1868. From that time until his death his field of usefulness grew larger and larger, and the people's confidence in him was never shaken. With all the changing tides and currents of political thought the people honored and trusted him, and during almost all the period of fifty-five years to the time of his death he was chosen to serve his people in one position after another of increasing power, honor, and responsibility.

He was reelected to the general assembly in 1869. He was elected prosecuting attorney of his county in 1872, 1873, and 1874. He was elected to the State senate in 1875, 1876, 1877, and 1878. He was chosen a presidential elector in 1880 and made a member of the board of regents of the State university in 1882. He was elected to Congress in 1882, 1884, and 1886, and in 1892 was elected governor of the State of Minnesota, and reelected in 1894. In 1895, he was elected to the United States Senate, and reelected from time to time until his death.

He was a staunch, uncompromising Republican, and it is a striking proof of the people's trust in him that in 1918, when last elected to the Senate, he received over 70,000 majority, and in 1923 his successor was elected on the Farmer-Labor ticket by nearly one hundred thousand plurality.

KNUTE NELSON was of alien birth, but no truer American ever trod our soil than he. Not only in war did he show his loyalty and devotion to his country, but in time of peace he was the same true, genuine, loyal American. He did not forget his native land, but the interests and welfare of the United States were supreme with him. No racial interest or influence thwarted his judgment or led him to forget the interests of the country of his adoption. If every foreign-born American citizen would make this nation's welfare paramount, as did he, the solidarity of American citizenry would be a fact. We would then have no catering to the voters of this race or that. Elections would not be determined by the sympathies of a candidate for this or that people in a foreign land. If all were like him, and as they should be, we would not have protests coming from those claiming to be American citizens against legislation, not because of its effect on the United States, but because of its effect upon alien peoples and nations. Then we would not have a class of our citizens threaten to vote against a particular party because the President had acted in a certain way upon a foreign question contrary to their wishes. They would look only to the welfare of the United States. If all our alien-born citizens were like him, and imbued with the same patriotic impulses and desires that moved him, we would not be urged to vote against this or that legislation in order to secure the votes of this or that class of our citizens. This is one of the great sources of weakness in this Nation to-day. Oh, for more of the pure, undiluted, intense Americanism of KNUTE NELSON.

He was a strong, sturdy, modest, kindly man. He was scrupulously honest and wholly without fear. No task was too humble to command the best that was in him. His moral courage was equal to his physical courage. He stood unfalteringly for what he believed to be right. When he did not agree with his constituents, he boldly told them so and plainly pointed out wherein he thought them wrong. Here in the Senate no people had a more faithful, able, or sincere representative than he. He was at his office early and late, and no committee meeting found him absent if it was possible for him to attend. If he could not come, he usually sent word telling why he could not be present. He was wise in council, able in debate, and fearless in action. To the poor boy who hopes to attain honor his life should be an inspiration; to the alien born who has secured American citizenship his example should bring undivided loyalty to our country, and to those of us who have known him and worked with him his memory is a precious heritage and benediction.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, as the son of a Confederate soldier I deem it a privilege to pay my humble tribute to one of the two Union veterans with whom I have had the honor to serve in the Senate.

The world is better because KNUTE NELSON lived. At the age of 6 he came to the United States from his birthplace in Norway, and without influence and advantages of education made his own way into positions of honor, which he occupied with credit to himself and constructive service to his country. His life is an inspiration to every poor American boy.

As chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, on which the great lawyers of this body served, Senator NELSON was modest and unassuming. He held other positions of honor in the State of Minnesota and during his long membership in the Senate and House.

Senator NELSON had every reason to be proud of his public service, but nothing in his career reflected greater credit than his splendid record as a soldier in the Federal army of the sixties. Brave soldier that he was, he stopped fighting when the war was over, and he was broad enough to realize that the strength of this Nation lay in the unity of North and South. He realized, as all of us should, that in the event of trouble with a foreign country the sons of Confederate and Federal soldiers would be the most earnest defenders of our flag.

It is my strong conviction that fewer sons of Confederate and Union soldiers were slackers in the World War than any other group. They have no sympathy with any efforts to overthrow our form of government.

Senator NELSON, though not strong and well at the time, made the long trip to Alabama in very severe weather to attend the funeral of Senator Bankhead, the last Confederate veteran serving in this body. He was anxious to do his part in welding all sections of this country into one great nation.

While serving in the Senate during the World War and the bitter period following the armistice, Senator NELSON never once allowed any prejudice to influence his action, and was guided only by the desire to do what he thought was for the best interest of our country.

Senator NELSON believed in, and in his daily life lived up to, the old time religion, which is so needed to-day. It is the only thing that will solve many of the vital problems that confront this demoralized world.

The life of Senator NELSON is an example of the thought that obstacles found along life's pathway are to some stumbling blocks; to others, stepping stones. It depends upon the traveler. Some stumble and fall over them; others step upon them and rise.

In going over my home State, I was often asked about different members of this body. It was my pleasure to tell them that there was no better man nor more useful member than Senator NELSON.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. President, it is now just 30 years ago since I first heard Senator KNUTE NELSON deliver a speech. It was at a political meeting in Minneapolis, Minn., during the campaign, when Mr. NELSON was a candidate for reelection as Governor of Minnesota.

I was much impressed with the positive character of the man. His utterances were delivered with confidence and sureness. What he said was spoken in a manner to carry conviction and to be definitely understood. Since that first address I heard Senator NELSON speak on several occasions, and I had the pleasure of meeting him and conversing with him a number of times. Once, as a member of a committee representing the Northwest farmers, I met him here at Washington, and I was pleased with the friendly way in which he greeted us. He was always glad to meet Minnesotans whether they were political pals of his or members of the opposition camp.

KNUTE NELSON was one of Minnesota's pioneers. When he first located at Alexandria, Minn., that section of the State was little better than a wilderness. It was then, as now, an agricultural region, and the experiences of pioneer life were far from pleasant. Mr. NELSON, then just admitted to the practice of law, shared these hardships with the farmer pioneers. He became a sort of White Chief in a territory just recently abandoned by the Red Men. I remember well how, on one of my visits with him, he related at some length his early experiences in the practice of law in Minnesota. It made me realize how well Mr. NELSON understood the lot of the pioneer.

That he held the confidence of his neighbors is evidenced by the fact that he was chosen county attorney shortly after his arrival in Douglas County, and was reelected to that office several times. Later, he was elected by the voters of Douglas and neighboring counties to represent them in the State senate.

This confidence of the voters in the emigrant from Norway grew in extent until it included a majority of the electors of the entire State of Minnesota, and until Mr. NELSON had been elevated to the most important offices in the State.

In a social way, the late Senator was thoroughly democratic. He never outgrew the plain, simple ways of living of his early life. No matter what a man's station in life, Senator NELSON greeted him warmly and without any feeling of condescension. I have often heard his political opponents say how well they liked him personally, notwithstanding their disagreement with him on political matters.

The Minnesota statesman was a conservative in politics. He was a firm believer in preserving the status quo of our institutions, and did not see the necessity for some of the reforms that some of his warm personal friends in Minnesota believed necessary. He was as conservative in politics as he was democratic in social affairs.

Senator NELSON will never be forgotten. His friends will not forget him, because of his absolute fidelity to them. His promises to friends were faithfully kept. His political adversaries also had reason to admire him for his positive stand on questions that became issues between them. They knew just where he stood—a quality not always found in men engaged in politics.

The late Senator possessed these qualities in an unusual degree: Courage to act in accordance with the conclusions of his mind; fidelity to friends and to those who rendered him service; and a definite position on issues regardless of consequences.

These qualities will make the name of KNUTE NELSON live long in the hearts of his countrymen.

Mr. President, I ask for the adoption of the pending resolutions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRELD in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the resolutions submitted by the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD].

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATOR NICHOLSON.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I submit the following resolutions and ask for their adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the resolutions.

The resolutions (S. Res. 188) were read and considered, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. SAMUEL D. NICHOLSON, late a Senator from the State of Colorado.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the business of the Senate be now suspended to enable his associates to pay tribute to his high character and distinguished public services.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, it is my high privilege and solemn duty to pay tribute to one of Colorado's most illustrious sons, a sturdy, stalwart pioneer of the West, the late Senator SAMUEL D. NICHOLSON.

When I said good-bye to my colleague just before sailing for Panama on March 5 last year, there was no apparent reason to believe that his illness would result fatally, but, on the other hand, it was expected that his strong physical constitution would enable him to speedily throw off what then appeared to be an attack of the grippe.

The Senator had expected to make the Panama trip with our group of Congressmen and Senators to witness the naval review, and it was a great disappointment to him to abandon his plans, because as a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs he was deeply interested in everything relating to the Naval Establishment.

We missed his genial companionship on the trip and were deeply saddened by the unexpected news of his serious illness, which reached us by wireless at Panama. Even then we could not realize that he was rapidly approaching the end, but hoped for his ultimate recovery. The message informing us of his passing away affected every member of our little party with a feeling of sadness and profound regret, and it was indeed difficult for anyone to realize that the end had come.

Senator NICHOLSON was essentially a self-made man, of strong character, and yet possessing that warm feeling of personal interest in others which made friends for him everywhere.

Mr. President, special meed of honor should be paid to those courageous souls who have braved the perils and hardships of a new section, or who have devoted their lives to the development of a new or little-known industry. Such men make history. Such pioneers have made the entire West, in fact the entire country, what it is to-day. Their work spells progress. They have reclaimed the desert; they have tilled the wastes; they have harnessed the mighty waters to do their will; and they have made the earth yield forth its treasure—all for the development, enrichment, and prosperity of our beloved country.

The finest type of western pioneer was displayed in the man whom we mourn to-day. Senator NICHOLSON'S life was one of toil and effort, of meeting and overcoming obstacles, which led, after long years of hardship, to the personal and political success he so richly deserved.

Born February 22, 1859, on Prince Edward Island, Canada, of Scotch parentage, SAMUEL D. NICHOLSON soon emigrated to the United States, where he secured his grammer school education at Bay City, Mich. One who knew him in later years would not surmise for a moment that this was the only actual schooling he received, as his passion to observe and learn continued throughout life, thus giving him a liberal education.

From Bay City, young NICHOLSON traveled to Nebraska, where he worked as a farm hand, and shortly afterwards, in February, 1881, he landed in the mining camp at Leadville, Colorado. Twenty-five cents was his only capital. Although it was mid-winter, he had no overcoat; but pluck and endurance overcame all obstacles.

Starting as a section hand and day laborer, Mr. NICHOLSON'S advance was steady. He became a foreman in the Colonel Sellers mine at Leadville, and soon displayed unusual ability to master the fundamentals of the business. Added responsibilities were placed upon his shoulders; his fund of knowledge increased and soon he was engaged in independent operations. After a while he was able to secure a lease on the Colonel Sellers mine, which, it was thought, had been practically worked out, but he demonstrated that such was not the case.

The capital secured as a result of this venture permitted Mr. NICHOLSON to operate on a more extensive scale. With rare judgment he selected and developed three other mining properties, the Midas, the Mab, and finally those of the Western Mining Company, which contained, in 1909, the largest deposit of zinc carbonates found in the State of Colorado.

But not for a moment did Mr. NICHOLSON allow himself to fall into a business rut or relax the keenness of his observation. During all this time he studied diligently, eventually becoming an authority on the subject of concentration of ores. The research of Senator NICHOLSON and others along this line proved the economic salvation of his home city, Leadville, in 1908, when it appeared that mineral resources had become practically exhausted. The discovery of carbonate of zinc at that time greatly increased the production of paying ore and meant much to that entire mining district for many years. This material had formerly been thrown on the dump as being altogether worthless.

During one of my visits to the Smithsonian Institute in Washington, there was exhibited a sample of Nicholsonite, a form of zinc carbonate which had been named for him as it was discovered in a mine which was under his direct management.

Nor were Mr. NICHOLSON'S activities confined to the mining industry. He early displayed a broadminded public spirit and a willingness to sacrifice personal gain and advantage for the common good. He became mayor of Leadville in 1893, a year in which local conditions were precarious and the outlook was gloomy indeed. During his second term, the mayor's stamina and strength of character were put to a most severe test. This was in connection with the great strike of 1896, when a lawless element, imported into the community for the purpose, sought to inflame the minds of the local miners to deeds of violence. With charity and firmness combined, bearing in mind that the strikers were men with homes and families, the mayor weeded out the lawless element and let it be known that further disorders would not be tolerated. As a result of this attitude order was quickly and permanently restored.

Mr. NICHOLSON continued in politics, although he seldom sought position for himself and never had selfish gain or advantage in mind. During the Great War he was far past the military age but was anxious to "do his bit." He served as State chairman of the Liberty and Victory Loan campaigns, State chairman of the Roosevelt memorial campaign, and of the Salvation Army drive. He was also a member of the Fuel Administration for Colorado.

Shortly thereafter Mr. NICHOLSON won the Republican nomination for United States Senator and was elected to that high office by a handsome majority. He not only received more votes than the three other candidates combined, but also defeated his nearest rival by over 40,000 plurality.

Senator NICHOLSON succeeded the Hon. Charles S. Thomas, Democrat, and in a short space of time endeared himself to the hearts of his colleagues and other official associates in Washington. His popularity was well deserved, for his character was both strong and lovable.

There was never any question as to the Colorado Senator's purposes and aims. He was essentially a mining man and announced from the start that his object was the rehabilitation of that important western industry. He also believed that the farmer and stock grower should receive recognition; and on that platform he stood throughout his brief career as a Senator of the United States.

In dealing with problems of state, Senator NICHOLSON assumed the same attitude as he took when mayor of Leadville many years before. He believed law and order must be maintained at all hazards; that the rights of property must be preserved, but that men also have rights, and these are still more sacred. Thus he strove to bring happiness and prosperity to our individual citizens, while he also voted to properly encourage our great industries, especially those of the State of Colorado—metal mining, stock raising, and agricultural pursuits generally.

Senator NICHOLSON served on the following committees of the Senate: Mines and Mining, Naval Affairs, Manufactures, and Civil Service. The post on the Mines and Mining Committee was the one he prized particularly, and shortly before his death his crowning ambition was realized when he was named as chairman of the newly created Silver Commission. This commission, provided for by the so-called Nicholson resolution, was just preparing for an extensive investigation into the industry and into the question of world stabilization of silver prices when the Colorado Senator died.

One of Mr. NICHOLSON'S first acts after becoming a Member of the Senate was to move to secure greater governmental recognition for the mining industry. He introduced and advocated a bill to create a Department of Mines, with a separate member of the Cabinet at its head, and it was understood that this plan was to receive consideration in connection with the proposed reorganization of the Government departments. Mining organizations throughout the country voiced their approval of the measure.

Had the Senator lived, another honor would have been his, for he was in direct line for the chairmanship of the Committee on Mines, and would doubtless have been selected as its head at the convening of the Sixty-eighth Congress.

With that singleness of purpose for which he was so well known, Senator NICHOLSON devoted himself to those measures which he believed would bring added prosperity to the West, particularly the State of Colorado; and it was therefore a great pleasure to serve as his colleague. Many such proposals might be cited, including the various farm relief bills, the reestablishment of the War Finance Corporation, and the enactment of a tariff measure which gave proper protection, for the first time, to the agricultural products and minerals of the West. The Members of the Senate and the people of Colorado are fully aware and deeply appreciative of his well-directed activities along these lines while in Washington.

Several facts concerning Mr. NICHOLSON'S personal history should be mentioned. In 1887, he married Miss Anna Neary, of Clifton Springs, N. Y. There were two children, Edward and Ruth Helen, both of whom have lived in Denver for a number of years. His daughter is the wife of Max Melville, Denver attorney. The Senator had four sisters, two of whom are still living. There are five brothers, all of whom survive him. They are Murdoch A., formerly mayor of Leadville; Malcolm J., also of that city; John, a mining man in the State of Washington; A. F., an oil operator of Tulsa, Okla., and Daniel J., a sugar-refinery manager of Utah.

Mr. NICHOLSON did not confine his business activities to mining. Besides holding the presidency of the Western Mining Co., Leadville, he was a director of the American National Bank of that city; also of the Denver National Bank and the First National Bank of Monte Vista. He was a life member of the American Mining Congress and a member of the American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers, the Colorado Historical Society, the Masonic Fraternity, and the B. P. O. Elks. In religious faith he was a Presbyterian.

During January, 1923, Senator NICHOLSON'S health began to fail, although those who knew him could not believe that he was seriously ill, owing to the robustness of his constitution. In fact, until late in February, he and I looked forward to the pleasure of a journey together to the Canal Zone, in order to review the United States fleet. But, after a short stay at the naval hospital in Washington, he was taken to the Mayo Clinic, at Rochester, Minn., where his condition was pronounced hopeless. With but a few days to live, the Senator wished to be taken home to his beloved State of Colorado, where he died at his Denver residence on March 24, 1923.

Thus passed SAMUEL D. NICHOLSON; thus ended a useful, active, worthy life, filled with thoughtfulness and love for his fellow men. His was the strenuous life, of which another great American, Theodore Roosevelt, was wont to speak. You will recall his words:

> I wish to preach not the doctrine of ignoble ease, but the doctrine of the strenuous life, the life of toil and effort, of labor and strife; to preach the highest form of success, which comes not to the man who desires mere easy peace, but to the man who does not shrink from danger, from hardship, or from bitter toil, and who out of these wins the splendid, ultimate triumph.

SAMUEL D. NICHOLSON, miner, statesman, public benefactor, has gone from us. But his strength of character, his steadfastness of purpose, his sterling qualities, and his genial personality will always live in the minds and hearts of those of us who knew and loved him. He will not be forgotten. We shall cherish his memory and shall always be the better because of our contact with him, who was indeed one of "nature's noblemen." The loss is not that of Colorado alone. The splendid, forceful character of Senator NICHOLSON had a profound influence for good on State and National affairs. He will always have a place of honor in the hearts of his many friends, associates, and fellow citizens.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the life of SAMUEL D. NICHOLSON was a conspicuous example of the American application of the principle of opportunity. Beginning as a manual worker on the railroad and in the mine he rose to the highest positions in business and in government. His career is a message of hope to the toilers in the humbliest and the hardest place—an illustration of that freedom and facility for development which the American Republic must preserve for its citizenship if it shall continue to realize the philosophy of its origin. Perhaps the ideal qualities of his existence found a special inspiration in the magical environment of western America. There the vast mountain systems that first marked the emerging outlines of a continent from the seas primordial have combined with plain, plateau, and peak and gorge to frame for man a habitation invoking his best and happiest attributes. And nowhere in the enchanting west have these features formed a more commanding and exalting theater for the achievements and the dreams of humankind than is presented by the State of Colorado.

At Leadville, in that State, in 1881 SAMUEL D. NICHOLSON arrived at the age of 21 with only a few pennies in his pocket, but with steel in his muscles, and the vision of a true Americanism in his soul. He had been reared upon a farm—God's laboratory for the revelation of the best in man. He did not hesitate to accept the occupations that called for the severest physical effort and endurance. Whether it meant the swinging of the heavy hammer against the spike that knit the tie and rail, or the wielding of pick and shovel in the sunless reaches of the mine, he gave every energy he possessed to the task at hand. He united with a willingness to toil the practice of preserving his earnings, of living within his means no matter what the consequence to that false and devastating idol we term pride, and, above all, of looking forward and upward to wider fields of service.

Then came the slow but certain fruitage of such a course. He became foreman and then manager of the mine. Later he acquired mining properties of his own, applying in an executive capacity the knowledge he had gained from personal contact with all the problems of mining. His activities broadened until they included the management and control of mines in several States, as well as participation in farming and banking enterprises. His experience as a hand toiler had given him an insight into the feeling and the thought of the masses, a sympathy with their aspirations, that fitted him particularly for public action. The inhabitants of his home city, Leadville, were quick to recognize this fact and as a result his first public office was that of mayor of Leadville, a place he filled with distinction and credit for two terms. His reputation for soundness of character, unflagging energy, clearness of thought, devotion to duty and loyalty to conviction soon became state-wide and brought him a respect and popularity among the people regardless of class or party. He was called to places of responsibility in his own political party, as well as in nonpartisan organizations. He was chairman of the Roosevelt Memorial Campaign for Colorado. He took an active and far-reaching part in assembling the resources of his State for the World War, notably as State chairman of Liberty and Victory loan campaigns, State chairman of the national Salvation Army drive, and as a member of the United States fuel administration for his State.

He was elected United States Senator in 1920 by a pronounced majority and assumed his duties at Washington when the special session of the Senate of the Sixty-seventh Congress convened on March 4, 1921. He was of more than usual height and weight, with an appearance of robust health and exceptional physical strength, suggestive of massiveness and force in body and in mind. Little, therefore, did those who saw him walk down the center aisle, accompanied by Senator Phipps, to receive the oath of office think that he was fated to serve but for the duration of that Congress, to be gathered to eternity shortly after that Congress should expire on March 4, 1923.

While his senatorial service covered but one Congress, the Sixty-seventh—it was marked by his characteristic qualities of fidelity, ability, efficiency; all of the highest order. Early in the Sixty-seventh Congress he prepared and introduced a bill creating a Department of Mines to function under a Secretary of Mining who was to be a member of the Cabinet. This evidenced the supreme interest of his life, and no one was more completely qualified to press such a measure than was Senator NICHOLSON. On October 20, 1921, he delivered an address before the convention of the American Mining Congress at Chicago on the need of the mining industry for Cabinet representation. That occasion and that address made him a national figure and gave him a national influence. The address was published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by unanimous order of the Senate. It is a landmark in the history of mining in this country, and I shall briefly review it.

He referred at the outset to the course of the Government in assembling the essential resources of the Nation for the prosecution of its part in the World War, numbering among these resources the products and by-products of the mining and agricultural industries. He pointed out the fact that the Government was well equipped for the mobilizing of agriculture because a Department of Agriculture with a Secretary at its head who was a member of the Cabinet had existed since 1889 and had only to expand its field force to acquire complete touch with the situation. But no such condition, he added, prevailed as to mining. He paid a high tribute to the work of the Geological Survey and the Bureau of Mines in connection with the war emergency, but showed that the lack of an executive branch accustomed to deal with mining as the Department of Agriculture had dealt with farming found the country woefully unprepared as to the problems of mineral production in both war and peace.

With these thoughts in mind, he told the convention, he had introduced his bill to establish a Department of Mines with a Secretary of Mining in the Cabinet. He analyzed the rapid growth of the mining industry, showing that its output had increased from a value of $551,000,000 in 1889 to $6,707,000,000 in 1920, multiplying itself twelve times in that short period. He showed that the mining industry supplied to the railroads of the United Sates a freight traffic of 1,500,000,000 tons out of their total freight traffic of 2,307,000,000 tons in 1918, or more than 65 per cent. He referred to the fact that the iron, coal, oil, and copper reserves of the United States were greater than the developed reserves of all other nations combined, and added that practically all these nations regarded the mining industry of such importance that they had Departments of Mines. He cited reputable authority to demonstrate that there were approximately nineteen million wage earners in the United States whose employment depended directly or indirectly on the production of minerals and their manufacture into the machinery of industry, the implements of industry, and the tools of trade. He contended that the mining industry had outgrown the governmental machinery at its command, although its problems were fundamentally related to the progress of the country. He quoted the message to the miners of America which came from Lincoln shortly before his death:

Tell the miners for me that I shall promote their interests to the utmost of my ability because their prosperity is the prosperity of the nation.

The most important legislative measure before Congress during his brief career as a Senator was the Fordney-McCumber tariff bill. When the bill reached the floor of the Senate the debates were animated, thorough, and prolonged. He led the discussion of the tariff on graphite, magnesite, and manganese, and took a prominent part in the debates on the rates on sugar, rice, and iron, and on the presidential powers conferred by the bill. Other important subjects on which he was heard in the Senate were child labor in the beet fields, the Marine Corps occupation of San Domingo and Haiti, the railroad situation in Colorado, reclamation, adjusted compensation for the ex-service man, foreign loans, ship subsidy, and State tax levies. His bill to create a commission for the study of gold and silver production became a law and he was made chairman of that commission.

His speeches were notable for lucidity of statement and vigor of expression. He had a broad and practical grasp of the economic basis of American history and development. He was rapidly becoming one of the most useful members of the Senate, one of the Nation's strongest pillars, when his sudden and untimely death deprived us of his presence. He was tolerant, genial, and considerate. His manner bespoke a heart that felt, a brain that knew, the capabilities, the deficiencies, the virtues, the faults, and the misfortunes of humanity. He had known life in all its phases—had battled upward to success without ever giving a vicious blow or taking a mean advantage. When the fateful summons came to him in the apparent flush of strength and health he was ready for an immediate accounting with his God. What nobler end could be imagined? What better leave of earth could be desired?

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, Honorable SAMUEL D. NICHOLSON, of the State of Colorado, a highly respected and honored Member of the United States Senate, has joined the great silent majority.

Senator NICHOLSON served throughout the 67th Congress with distinguished ability. His service typified a deep concern for the Nation's welfare. He was intensely American. He was essentially a man of the West, a man among men, a real man in every sense that the word implies, courageous, kind, humble, and sympathetic, ever ready to combat a wrong, always a willing champion of the rights of the oppressed. His standard in public service was the according of justice to all classes.

A better appreciation may perhaps be had of the purposes and ideals of Senator NICHOLSON by quoting some of his public statements made during the campaign of 1920.

I wish the mark of Cain could be branded on the brow of every man who profiteers at the expense of innocent and defenseless children.

Another public statement of Senator NICHOLSON'S:

We are all dependent upon labor. When labor prospers, all classes of citizens prosper.

His interest in the welfare of the defender of the country was ever in his mind. He said:

The protection and welfare of those who fought for us must be given first consideration.

He never forgot the homeseeker. On this question Senator NICHOLSON said:

I am opposed to any policy which will bar the homeseeker or the miner from the public domain.

Upon another occasion Senator NICHOLSON is quoted as saying:

Man must ever be kept above the dollar.

On another occasion:

Profiteering is an unjust burden, and must be suppressed.

Senator NICHOLSON was a man of the highest appreciation and conception of lofty ideals in behalf of the public welfare. He loved his fellow men. He was ever devoted to his friends, generous to an antagonist, fair always. He possessed an unusually charming personality, and, regardless of party affiliations, he enjoyed the universal friendship of his colleagues in the Senate. Whenever Sam, as his friends lovingly were wont to call him, became interested in a measure, it was with great difficulty that any member answer "nay." Although ever solicitous for a nation-wide prosperity, he never forgot the home folks with whom he had shared and struggled during the pioneer days in the development of the great natural resources of his adopted State, Colorado. It was there where the earlier years of his active and useful life commenced. There were the scenes of his early experience, his struggles, and his triumphs. He commenced life a poor boy; and, as stated by his friends and neighbors of Leadville during the campaign of 1920—

SAM NICHOLSON arrived in Leadville in February, 1881, with the following assets: Ambition, a common-school education, 22 years of inexperience, and unbounded faith in his own ability and the future of Colorado, and 25 cents.

By sheer force of character, energy, rugged honesty, and faith, he accumulated a comfortable fortune. He retired from active business prior to his election as United States Senator.

Our Sam has left us. This august Chamber will not again be honored by his presence. We miss the charm of his personality, and the sympathetic spirit with which he pleaded the cause of human progress and human welfare. His absence is the Nation's loss. We cherish his memory.

I know of no more fitting tribute than the message of farewell written by his life-long friend and neighbor from his home town of Leadville, Colo., Mr. F. E. Vaughn, dated March 24, 1923, which reads:

HON. SAMUEL D. NICHOLSON.
(A tribute and a farewell.)

Strong as an oak; a fight in either hand;
Bold and ambitious, with genius for command.
A generous enemy and a loyal friend,
Quick to take umbrage and ready to defend
The things which he thought right,
He lived his life according to his light.
Wealth he acquired by energy and toil,
With talent which his origin did not dim;
A self-made man, a product of the soil;
This made him human—made a man of him.

'Tis Colorado's loss, that after years
Devoted to a study of her needs,
Just as the edifice he builded rears,
Its summit in the Senate—and his deeds,
Inspired by an energy that never tired,
Promised fruition in a brighter day
For much the mining industry deserved—desired,
He should be cut down and called away.
He played his part, with hand and heart,
Respected by the lowly and the great;
With belief unshaken in the mighty part
To greet the future of his favored State.
And Leadville mourns a famous favorite son,
Who from the ranks of "hard-rock" miners sprung;
Who well deserved the laurels he had won;
Who "single-jacked" his way to topmost rung
Of Fame's high ladder, and whose memory will Live in the minds of those he met in life's rough jam,
And we who knew best and loved him best
Can only bow in silent grief and think, "Good-bye, SAM."

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, SAMUEL NICHOLSON, while not born in the United States, knew but one flag. His loyalty to our Nation was not diluted or limited by any attachment or affection for any foreign nation or people.

Like a great rugged peak in the mountain ranges of his home State he towered above the other peaks and spurs of the range yet was of the same substance and nature. He was aware of the qualities which he shared with his neighbors, but was modestly unconscious of his own superiorities, which all his neighbors freely acknowledged.

The life of SAMUEL D. NICHOLSON is a source of inspiration and encouragement to coming generations.

The incomprehensible accomplishments of men of genius and brilliancy tend to discourage, while the life of one who has attained great success by the wise and efficient use of talents not beyond the capacities of many other men brings hope.

His courage, energy, and fine human qualities carried him forward from a miner with pick and shovel to mine owner and operator.

The young workman in the mines of Colorado from his first day received and held the confidence and esteem of his associates.

He was always a leader in the group of which he was a member.

He was not an office seeker, but his friends and neighbors frequently insisted on putting him into responsible public office, and he died an honored and respected Member of this body.

But we who knew him honor him not so much for what he did, as for what he was.

As a workman in the mines of Leadville he was genial, honest, and generous. In the days of struggle and of small things he was a friend to all who knew him, and all who knew him were his friends. But unlike many men, when success crowned his efforts, when he became prosperous financially, when he had acquired high place politically, when he was the recipient of attention from the great and the prominent, he was still genial and generous; he was still everybody's friend, and still held all his old with the hundreds of new friends.

Money did not chill his heart nor success turn his head. He never lost his interest in the common man or his sympathy for the unfortunate.

For years the preoccupations of business and public service required his almost constant absence from Leadville, yet in every one of the elections in which his name came before the voters of his old home, he received almost the unanimous vote, notwithstanding the people of his county were by a large majority devoted to the opposite party.

He experienced disappointments and defeats, but his genial and friendly nature was never for a moment soured.

No Senator ever sat in this body more loyal to his State or more earnest and eager to serve its interests.

His death inspires not only tributes of respect and esteem, but brought sincere sorrow and deep grief to thousands of affectionate friends.

SAMUEL NICHOLSON was faithful to his engagements, generous to his friends, loyal to every cause in which he enlisted, devoted to his State and country.

Mr. President, I ask for the adoption of the pending resolutions.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the late Senator KNUTE NELSON and the late Senator SAMUEL D. NICHOLSON, I move that the Senate adjourn until to-morrow at the usual hour of meeting.

The motion was unanimously agreed to, and the Senate (at 12 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Monday, March 10, 1924, at 12 o'clock meridian.

SENATE.

MONDAY, March 10, 1924.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, Thou art so gracious and merciful in Thy dealings with Thy children that we come this morning to thank Thee for the goodness that Thou hast shown unto us in the days of anxiety and of unrest. Grant to us that quietness and assurance that in the midst of the turmoil of life we may find a hiding place in the time of stress and strain. Be very gracious, we beseech of Thee. Answer the many prayers for our land and for those in authority, and guide us with Thy wisdom. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary (George A. Sanderson) read the following communication:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, D. C., March 10, 1924.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. GEORGE H. MOSES, a Senator from the State of New Hampshire, to perform the duties of the Chair this legislative day.

ALBERT B. CUMMINS,
President pro tempore.

Mr. MOSES thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer.

THE JOURNAL.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The principal legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Edge	Kendrick	Sheppard
Ashurst	Edwards	Keyes	Shields
Ball	Ernst	King	Shipstead

Dale	Johnson, Minn.	Ransdell	Willis
Dial	Jones, N. Mex.	Reed, Pa.
Dill	Jones, Wash.	Robinson

Mr. DIAL. I desire to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], is detained on account of illness in his family. I ask that this notice may continue through the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

APPENDIX TO THE REPORT OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL, 1922.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a letter from the Attorney General, transmitting an appendix to the annual report of the Attorney General for the year 1922, covering lawless disorders and their suppression. The letter of transmittal will be printed in the RECORD and the report and accompanying papers will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The letter is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., March 7, 1924.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE OF THE SENATE.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith the Appendix to the 1922 Annual Report of the Attorney General, covering "Lawless disorders and their suppression."

Very respectfully yours,

H. M. DAUGHERTY,
Attorney General.

"BIG FIVE" MEAT PACKING COMPANIES (S. DOC. NO. 61).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a report from the Attorney General, made in response to Senate Resolutions 145 and 167 (submitted by Mr. LADD and Mr. NORRIS, respectively), relating to the prosecution by the Department of Justice of the so-called packing cases. The report will be printed as a Senate document and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

EXPENDITURES OF THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair also lays before the Senate a report from the Secretary of Agriculture, with a letter of transmittal, relating to expenditures by the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year 1923. The letter of transmittal will be printed in the RECORD, and the report will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, March 6, 1924.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: As required by section 529, Revised Statutes, and the act of March 3, 1885 (23 Stat. L. 356), I have the honor to transmit herewith a detailed statement of expenditures of the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1923.

A copy of this report has also been transmitted to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Sincerely yours,

HENRY C. WALLACE, Secretary.

SALE OF FLOUR AND BREAD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair also lays before the Senate a letter from the chairman of the Federal Trade Commission relating to the inability of the commission to make, under present conditions, the investigation which it was directed to make under Senate Resolution 163 (submitted by Mr. LA FOLLETTE), which will be read by the Secretary and referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

The letter was read and referred to the Committee on Manufactures, as follows:

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., March 7, 1924.

SIR: The Federal Trade Commission has received Senate Resolution No. 163 agreed to by the Senate on February 16, 1924, wherein the commission is directed to investigate and report to the Senate with respect to the production, distribution, transportation, and sale of flour and bread, including by-products.

The commission has very carefully considered said resolution and has directed me to advise you as follows:

That it is now prosecuting an urgent inquiry into the gasoline situation, at the direction of the President, and is also engaged in the preparation of reports covering the cotton trade, the furniture industry, and the national debt, wealth, and income, all pursuant to Senate resolutions.

That the commission's work, under the statute making unlawful unfair methods of competition in commerce, is now several months in arrears because of lack of funds and personnel. Practically all proceedings instituted by the commission under said statute are based on complaints lodged with it by business men.

That the commission is without the funds necessary to enable it to comply with Senate Resolution No. 163, and can not do so without incurring a deficiency.

By direction of the commission.

Cordially yours,

HUSTON THOMPSON, Chairman.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 91) to authorize the National Society United States Daughters of 1812 to place a marble tablet on the Francis Scott Key Bridge.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6349) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes; requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and that Mr. MADDEN, Mr. VARE, and Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed enrolled bills of the following titles, and they were thereupon signed by the Presiding Officer (Mr. MOSES) as Acting President pro tempore:

H. R. 3444. An act for the relief of certain nations or tribes of Indians in Montana, Idaho, and Washington;

H. R. 4577. An act providing for the examination and survey of Mill Cut and Clubfoot Creek, N. C.; and

H. R. 5557. An act to authorize the settlement of the indebtedness of the Republic of Finland to the United States of America.

PERSONAL PRIVILEGE—REPLYING TO CERTAIN NEWSPAPER CRITICS ON HIS SPEECHES REGARDING LEASES OF NAVAL OIL LANDS.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama rises to a question of personal privilege, which he will state.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Washington Post of yesterday, quoting from the Philadelphia Public Ledger, the New York Times, the New York Tribune, the Philadelphia Inquirer, and the New York Herald, had some very scurrilous attacks upon myself, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY]. I will read only one of these statements carried in the Washington Post so as not to take up too much of the time of the Senate.

Speaking of the White House telegrams, which had been discussed in the Senate, the Philadelphia Public Ledger said:

Hardly were they in the RECORD before the filth batteries of the Senate, manned by the Three Mad Gunners, HARRISON, of Mississippi, CARAWAY, of Arkansas, and HEFLIN, of Alabama, went into action. Senate rifle pits spat venom. The drum fire of Senate innuendo was laid down upon the White House.

Mr. President, the New York Times proclaims through its columns that the "principal" mentioned in the trouble-making telegram sent by Bennett to Ed McLean was really the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS]. The New York Times in its overzealous desire to be of service to the interests it represents rushed into print in this instance just a little too soon. Senator CURTIS refuses to stand for the scapegoat arrangement provided for him. He denies that he is the "principal" referred to in that telegram and repudiates the statement of Bennett.

Certain subsidized Republican newspapers—those that I have named that are working in concert to nominate Mr. Coolidge and to bring about four years more of Republican rule—are sick and sore over the amazing and shocking disclosures revealed in the Republican oil scandal. They fear the force of the terrible facts that are being given to the country. At first they exhibited impatience at the conduct of Senators who seemed to listen to the dictates of their own consciences and to quickly respond to the demands of duty to their country. Then, as the facts coming out became more and more damaging to the paid-for plans and purposes of these subservient tools of the crooked interests, they became nervous and frantic lest there should be enough unintimidated and patriotic Senators to go through with the oil scandal investigation and make known the whole story to the people of the United States.

Since that time they have been trying to discredit and destroy every Senator who has earnestly and fearlessly gone into this thing with the view of exposing this hideous national crime and punishing the criminals responsible for it.

These brazen agents of the corrupt interests are doing nothing to hold the Government true to the purpose of its creation. They are doing nothing to keep alive the ideals and institutions of free constitutional government. They are trying to debauch and debase every Senator and every other public man who refuses to turn his back upon his country, to surrender his convictions, and obey the behest of selfish, sordid, contemptible, and corrupt dollar aristocracy.

Having themselves become the slaves of conscienceless predatory interests, they try to besmirch and belittle every public man who refuses to do as they have done—prove unworthy to bear the name of "citizen of the United States"—and betray his country to the enemies of his country.

In this day of encouraged conscienceless commercialism, of graft and corruption in the Republican administration, it is a distinct compliment to a United States Senator to have one of these corrupt and scurrilous sheets to assail him. It is a sure sign that he is not at all in favor with those "who shape their creed for their cravings" and sell their souls for gold. The inspired writer had such as these last named in mind when he said: "The ox knoweth his owner and the ass his master's crib."

The same secretive and corrupt forces that have wrought the overthrow of governments in the past are at work here. They have no lofty vision produced by a love of humanity—no ideals of constitutional government born of a love of liberty.

Mr. STANFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield for a question.

Mr. STANFIELD. Is it a letter the Senator from Alabama is reading or is it his remarks?

Mr. HEFLIN. The part that I am now reading is my own speech. I wrote these few lines on yesterday. "The better the day, the better the deed." I knew that the righteous forces that observe and honor the Sabbath were with me in this fight and I am to be pardoned for giving a little thought to this subject on Sunday.

Mr. President, the evil forces of which I was just speaking have grown and multiplied in the last three years until to-day they constitute a serious menace and danger to the life of the Republic. We have reached the point right here in the Capitol of the Nation where the Senator who dares to stand up and fight for clean government, for the old-time standards of civic honesty and fidelity to official duty, is beset, not only with scurrilous attacks by certain newspapers but with annoyances and insults in the form of anonymous letters from hirelings somehow protected in their insolent conduct.

A number of Senators who have done what they believed was their duty in exposing this oil-lease scandal have received anonymous, insulting letters. I have received quite a number of them. On last Friday I received one from New York in which the writer threatened to murder me if I did not cease my activities in the discussions of the oil-lease scandals. The person who wrote that letter evidently is a partisan Republican. The letter denounced southern Democrats and referred to Woodrow Wilson as "Wilson the damned."

I turned the letter and envelope over to the chief inspector of the Post Office Department. The letter was typewritten on a plain sheet of paper and the envelope was addressed with a typewriter, but had "personal" written on it with a pen.

I am doing my duty as I see it, and I owe it to the people of my State who honored me with a seat in this body and to the people of the country whose Government this is, to keep up this fight. I will not be deterred or intimidated by such cowardly and contemptible tactics. I will be one of a band of two or ten Senators to pledge my life and my all, if need be, to fight on and on until the truth in this terrible thing is made known and every corrupt official involved is driven from public office. I am willing to do that even if it becomes necessary for every Senator who really represents the people to go heavily armed and have a bodyguard.

The country will probably never know under what serious handicaps and difficulties we are carrying on this fight in the Nation's Capitol to promote common honesty in public office and preserve in their integrity the free institutions of our country.

Mr. President, a few days ago I commented on a telegram which had been sent to Mr. McLean by Mr. Bennett, who is employed by Mr. McLean. In that telegram Mr. Bennett said:

> Saw principal. Delivered message. He says greatly appreciates, and sends regards to you and Mrs. McLean. There will be no rocking of boat and no resignations. He expects reactions from unwarranted political attacks. (Signed) Bennett.

I submit that any intelligent man would have construed the word "principal" to have meant the President. I thought so; practically every newspaper man at the Capitol believes that he meant the President, and nearly all of the Senators in this body believe that he meant the President. I never said that the President authorized Bennett to say what he said in the telegram. I never said that he had had a conference with him in which he had instructed him to send such a message. My contention was that Bennett referred to the President when he said "Saw principal." Who but the President has the right in this Government to say that resignations will not be asked for and will not be accepted if tendered?

These newspapers attacking me and other Senators, these hirelings of the predatory interests, are not going to get away with this fight like they are planning to get away with it. The President is not a glass man or a hothouse plant; he will not break or freeze if discussed in the Senate. He ought to be a virile citizen, one who can stand up and give blow for blow. Whoever heard of Woodrow Wilson begging a question or Theodore Roosevelt or Old Hickory Jackson? Would there have been batteries whirling in here from outside in the States to shield from Senate debate such men as they? What offense has been committed by the Senators in this body from sovereign States when they rise and read a message in English and put their own construction upon it? That construction is the construction that the public puts upon it.

Then note what followed. Mr. Bennett goes before the committee, and, oh, yes, he says, "I recall that Senator CURTIS was the principal." To the first newspaper man who showed me what had happened before the committee I said, "It is not true; CHARLIE CURTIS is not the principal referred to in that telegram, and no other Senator believes that he was." The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] demanded to go before the committee, which he did, and then explained that he was not the man, and he repudiates the statement of this man Bennett. So this telegram is still unexplained, if I may say that as a United States Senator and be safe from bodily attack when I say that in the Senate.

Now, I wish to call the attention of those who think they are going to hide behind this camouflaging arrangement that the President did not hesitate to give out a statement regarding the telegram that he himself sent to Mr. McLean. That was all right; he had a right to give it out, and should have given it out; but he has not given out a statement as to this particular telegram. Why should he not give out a statement? If Senators for days are discussing a trouble-making telegram from which the inference is that the President is referred to—and you can not escape it, Mr. President—why should not the President give out a statement and say that he never saw Bennett or that he did not authorize Bennett to say for him that there would be no "rocking of the boat and no resignations accepted."

Senators, I think, have some rights left. There are some of us who are going to fight to preserve those rights. These galleries may now be infested with thugs who are armed. It may come to the time when we will have to instruct the doorkeepers to examine the persons of some of the men who sit in the gallery. I know some of them have sat there because I have had anonymous letters from some who stated that they heard the speeches and arguments and have written insulting things to me, as well as to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY].

So, Mr. President, I want the people of the country to get the other side of this picture when the effort is being made to make it appear that we are jumping on the President and making vicious attacks upon him. It is not true. I want them to know what sort of risks we ourselves are taking when we dare to fight on and on to expose those who have betrayed their trust and to drive from power those who have bartered for money the property of the people. While fighting to hold the Government true to the purpose of its creation we are being hammered by these subsidized newspapers, saying that the country is getting weary of us and that we have reached the danger point. Well, I suppose it would not shock them very seriously if they could hear of another Senator being shot—and there is some talk around Washington that the Senator who was shot, they say accidentally, was not the Senator that was intended to be shot. I do not know.

Mr President, here we are investigating the Department of Justice, with the agents of the Department of Justice doing what? Protecting us? Why, no; oh, no! Why, every Senator will have to protect himself. Are we coming to that in the Capital of the Nation?

Now, I want to call attention to what occurred over in that committee. Here is what the Washington Post says. That is Mr. Ed McLean's paper. This is the administration organ. Speaking of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] being before the committee, it says:

> At the outset Senator CURTIS, of Kansas, assistant Republican leader in the Senate, appeared voluntarily and denied under oath three separate stories told by Ira E. Bennett, an editorial writer for the Washington Post.

Mr. President, why was the Senator from Kansas picked out to be the scapegoat in that incident? Somebody might say that they were trying to find somebody to unload that thing on, to relieve the President. Far be it from me to suggest such a thing, but somebody might say that they were seeking somebody to unload on; but the Senator from Kansas would not be unloaded on, so Mr. Bennett's explanation does not explain. Now the question is, if I may be permitted to ask it as a Senator, To whom did he refer as "principal" in that telegram? He said he referred to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS]. The Senator from Kansas says it could not be so, and is not so. Then what is the trouble with it? What is there about that telegram that they do not want to explain it as it really is?

Here is another discrepancy in the statements of Mr. Bennett: He never saw the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] until the day after he sent this telegram. He sent this telegram on the 29th of January. He saw the Senator from Kansas on the 30th of January, so he could not mean the Senator from Kansas.

What right had the Senator from Kansas to say that there would be no resignations asked for, there would be no resignations accepted, or that there would be no resignations? Why, Mr. President, if a man were to go into a lumber camp to see about shipments of lumber and he were to come out and send a telegram saying, "Saw principal; he says lumber will continue to be shipped," whom would you think he had reference to? Somebody hired around the mill or the "principal," the man who owned the sawmill? If a man were to go into a big wholesale store and speak about shipping out goods and shipping in goods and wire back, "Saw principal; he says he will take no more goods now; there will be no more goods bought soon," whom would you think he saw—a clerk or the "principal," the man who owned the business? Why, of course, you would think he meant the man who owned the business. Who in this Government, above us all, is "principal" and holds the principal office of the Nation? It is the Chief Executive of the Nation—the President, of course.

I hope I am not guilty of crime when I say that I believe as I live that when Bennett said principal in that telegram to McLean he meant the President. You can not change my thoughts on that subject, because I do believe I understand the English language. "Saw principal; appreciates message, and so forth. There will be no rocking of the boat. Thinks reaction will come from these political attacks. There will be no resignations." Why, Mr. President, I could assemble a jury of men and women anywhere in this country—six men and six women—and read that telegram to them and discuss it with anybody, and the unanimous verdict would be that Bennett meant the President.

I understand that Bennett was at the White House on the morning of the 29th of January. The newspaper boys were all there that morning, I understand, and the inference was that Mr. Bennett remained a while and had a talk with the President. Well, he had a right to do that if he wanted to. He had a right to send a message to this mysterious Ed McLean down in Florida if he wanted to, but what we are interested in is the meaning of these things when we have to dig in with a pick and shovel to get these facts out, to drag out these telegrams one by one and expose them to the light. One of the telegrams sent to McLean, giving him the story of Sinclair's testimony before the committee, cost $70. McLean is interested at the other end of the line. The Secretary to the President goes to Florida. An official in the White House wires McLean that the President's secretary is on his way to Florida. The President himself wires to McLean and asks him to see his secretary and find out whom he—the President—should confer with back here about appointments in the District of Columbia, and Bennett's telegram comes along and says to McLean, "Saw principal." To whom does he say that? He says it to Ed McLean. "Saw principal. He says there will be no rocking of boat and no resignations."

When the President explains the telegram that he received from McLean he says, in effect, it was in regard to his position in refusing to accept the resignation of Denby. Why, Mr. President, this other telegram referring to "principal" dovetails right in with it, saying that there will be no resignations; and then here comes one, finally, from McLean congratulating him on refusing to accept the resignation of Denby at that time. How are you going to get away from those things, Senators?

These matters are open to discussion. Thank God, we have no king in this country yet! The acts and doings and policies of a President are the legitimate subject of debate in the Senate. We have a right to discuss them; and these big papers that sit back and make their millions by bartering their columns to the crooked interests are not going to get away with the program that they have just framed up.

Why, take this man Shaffer, with four or five big newspapers. What was necessary to silence his batteries? What was necessary to put him to sleep? They gave him a dose of soothing sirup, $92,500, and he fell asleep like a babe in its mother's arms, and you never heard another word out of him complaining against the oil interests or any other interests; and you find in the testimony that he stated that Fall stated that he was going to have Sinclair set aside 100 acres of the Government's land in the property in possession of Sinclair.

Mr. President, these things are matters of legitimate discussion. Why should we not discuss them in the Senate?

The first morning after I discussed this telegram, the Washington Herald, in big headlines, said: "Coolidge ignores Heflin's charges." That telegram can not be ignored by anybody. When that matter has been the subject of discussion in the Senate and before the investigating committee, and when one of the leaders on the Republican side takes the stand in the committee and in the press of the country, repudiates the effort to unload it on him, repudiates it outright, I submit to the Senate and to the country that with the thing left up in the air like that, still unexplained, the President might say, if it is true, that he saw Mr. Bennett after the other boys left on the morning of the 29th, and that he did say, as he had stated to the newspaper representatives, that there would be no resignations. If he had done that, that would have explained it; but the President, it seems to me, if he is big enough to be President of the United States, does not need to have these papers on the outside hammering and misrepresenting and scurrilously attacking United States Senators for doing what they conceive to be their duty in the premises.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. HEFLIN. I am glad to yield to my friend from Florida.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Did not Mr. Bennett, when he appeared before the committee last week in explanation, state that he did go to the White House with other representatives of the press, and that he got the impression from the statement made by the President that there would be no resignations, and so on, and state that he had rather poorly expressed it, or had not expressed it just as he should, in that telegram when he said there would be no rocking of the boat? My recollection is that he made a statement of that kind before the committee.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BURSUM. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Alabama to the fact that Mr. Bennett, under oath before the committee, stated that his expressions were his conclusions; that the President had not made any statement to him specifically; that it was a general statement, made to all of the newspaper men in public; and that the statements contained in the telegram from Mr. Bennett were his personal conclusions. He stated that under oath.

Mr. TRAMMELL. He stated, however, did he not, that he drew those conclusions from statements made by the President to members of the press who called at the White House?

Mr. BURSUM. Exactly.

Mr. TRAMMELL. He gained that impression. That is what he stated.

Mr. BURSUM. From the public statement.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Therefore is it probable that in his telegram he had reference to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] when he referred to "the principal" and sought to relate impressions that he had gained from an interview at the White House?

Mr. BURSUM. I can not speculate on probabilities. I can only judge by sworn testimony.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask what is the order of business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama is addressing the Senate on a question of privilege.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator hardly claims that it is a question of privilege, does he?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes; I am discussing these attacks on me and two other Senators. I shall be through in a few minutes, unless I am disturbed.

Mr. WARREN. I do not wish to disturb the Senator, but I did not suppose he was hurt enough by those articles to take so much time.

Mr. HEFLIN. I will say to my friend from Wyoming that I shall be through in just a moment.

Mr. President, before I sit down I want to say that there is not any doubt that Mr. Bennett meant to convey the idea to Ed McLean that he had seen the President and was conveying to him a message from the President. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM] admits that Bennett said that he talked to the President about these things, or he heard him make a general statement to the other members of the press, and evidently in this instance they were seeking somebody to unload this live-wire "principal" telegram on when they laid it on the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS]. Now, I will tell you what I think about that, if a Senator may give his conclusions still and not be subject to bodily attack by some agent of these crooked interests. I think they said something like this, just as they did when they said, "Just say that Ed McLean let Fall have that $100,000. Do not connect Doheny up with it. Say Ed McLean let him have it. Ed will say he let him have it. Fall will swear he let him have it, and that will end it." Well, it did not work. Now, I think they said, "The Senator from Kansas is a good Republican. He is one of the leaders of the Senate, and he does not come up for election until two years hence, and if we just unload this thing on him he will smile and say nothing and bear it." But the Senator from Kansas surprised and disappointed them. He said, "No; I have had nothing to do with this blasted oil scandal and you are not going to connect me up with it;" and he refused to stand for Bennett's explanation. Bennett is still up in the air and the "principal" telegram is still unexplained.

Now, there is one other question that I want to touch on, and that is Mr. Prescott.

The President said when he wired McLean he was trying to find out where Prescott was. Prescott, the chairman of the Republican committee of the District of Columbia, has returned, it seems, and he came out and said he was "boss of this District." He handles the patronage for the District of Columbia. This is where the Congress sits. This is where the Supreme Court judges reside. This is the seat of government. This is the Capital of the Nation. Yet a partisan Republican politician openly and boldly declares that he is the boss of appointments in the District of Columbia. Oh, Mr. President, it looks as if the game of politics was being extensively played in connection with this thing and reaching close up to the White House.

One other word and I am through, Mr. President. This Government is sick. It is sick at heart. There are more bold and brazen grafters feeding on the Government now, there are more crooks and corruptionists in official position now, than at any time in the history of the Government. A duty rests upon Senators and Members of the House and on people outside. All should set their faces resolutely to the front and fight on and on until justice and right shall triumph and the Government is relieved from the evils that now so sorely afflict it. We may have to do unpleasant things. We may have to do dangerous things, but it will all result in good to our common country. What matters it if we are broken and fail in the fight—

> Great is the facile conqueror,
> But haply yet is he who, wounded sore,
> And covered o'er with blood and sweat,
> Sinks foiled, but fighting evermore,
> Is greater yet.
> If not I, others will succeed.
> For freedom's battle once begun,
> Bequeathed by bleeding sire to son,
> Though baffled oft, is ever won.

The fight has just begun. It will go on until this whole scandalous, criminal thing is laid bare and the hideous tree of corruption from which it sprang is dug up, root and branch.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6349) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, that it accept the invitation of the House for the appointment of conferees, and that the Presiding Officer appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. SMOOT, Mr. MOSES, Mr. OVERMAN, and Mr. GLASS conferees on the part of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHEPPARD. At the request of the El Paso Chamber of Commerce I present two resolutions and ask that they be inserted in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD and referred as follows:

EL PASO CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
El Paso, Tex., November 28, 1923.

Resolution adopted by executive committee El Paso Chamber of Commerce.

Whereas certain changes are being proposed in the transportation act of 1920;

Whereas insufficient time has elapsed in order to properly test the practicability of the present transportation statute;

Whereas the railroads now are efficiently transporting a greater volume of traffic than ever before and are with large expenditures rehabilitating and extending railroad facilities: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the El Paso Chamber of Commerce, That we oppose any change in the present transportation act until there has been better opportunity to determine whether or not the change is justified or necessary, and decidedly oppose Government ownership of railroads.

A. SCHWARTZ,
President El Paso Chamber of Commerce.

Attest:

D. A. BANDEEN,
Secretary El Paso Chamber of Commerce.

To the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

EL PASO CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
El Paso, Tex., March 5, 1924.

Resolution.

Resolved by the El Paso Chamber of Commerce, That it favors the appointment of a board of tax appeals by the President of the United States, such board of tax appeals to function entirely outside of the Treasury Department and to be in all respects independent thereof, and that such board of tax appeals hold hearings at such points within the United States as may contribute to the convenience of taxpayers.

A. SCHWARTZ,
President El Paso Chamber of Commerce.

Attest:

D. A. BANDEEN, Secretary.

To the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 168) authorizing the appointment of a special committee to investigate the Bureau of Internal Revenue, reported it with amendments.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to:

A bill (S. 1381) for the relief of Edward S. Farrow; and

A bill (S. 1577) authorizing the President to reappoint Maj. Adrian K. Polhemus, United States Army (retired), to the position and rank of major in the United States Army.

Mr. BORAH. What are these bills?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Each bill is for the special appointment of an officer to the active list of the Army. The committee is opposed to any such legislation and the report is unanimous against the bills. I move that the bills be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2431) to authorize the Secretary of War to convey to the Commissioners of Lewes certain land in the county of Sussex, State of Delaware, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 214) thereon.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 605) for the relief of Obadiah Simpson, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to, and the bill was indefinitely postponed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 2764) authorizing the President to order Leo P. Quinn before a retiring board for a rehearing of his case and upon the findings of such board either confirm his discharge or place him on the retired list with the rank and pay held by him at the time of his discharge, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 215) thereon.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1011) for the relief of Michael Sweeney, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 216) thereon.

Mr. HARRELD, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2187) authorizing the Comptroller General of the United States to consider and settle the claim of Mrs. John D. Hall, widow of the late Colonel John D. Hall, United States Army, retired, for personal property destroyed in the earthquake at San Francisco, Calif., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 217) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 2481) for the relief of John H. Gattis, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 218) thereon.

Mr. STANFIELD, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 935) for the relief of the Erie Railroad Co. (Rept. No. 219); and

A bill (S. 1930) for the relief of the San Diego Consolidated Gas & Electric Co. (Rept. No. 220).

Mr. STANFIELD also, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1941) for the relief of Ezra S.

Pond, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 221) thereon.

Mr. LADD, from the Committee on Commerce, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 5633) granting the consent of Congress to the Board of Supervisors of Hinds County, Miss., to construct a bridge across the Pearl River in the State of Mississippi (Rept. No. 222);

A bill (H. R. 5737) granting the consent of Congress to the county of Kankakee, State of Illinois, and the counties of Lake and Newton, State of Indiana, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Kankakee River at or near the State line between section 19, township 31 north, range 15 east of the third principal meridian, in the county of Kankakee, State of Illinois, and section 1, township 31 north, range 10 west of the second principal meridian, in the counties of Lake and Newton, State of Indiana (Rept. No. 223);

A bill (H. R. 6420) to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River in section 17, township 28 north, range 23 west of the fourth principal meridian, in the State of Minnesota (Rept. No. 224); and

A bill (H. R. 6925) granting the consent of Congress to the city of Chicago to construct a bridge across the Calumet River at or near One hundred and thirtieth Street, in the city of Chicago, county of Cook, State of Illinois (Rept. No. 225).

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1307) for the relief of Albert Andrews for loss of personal effects while serving with the military forces of the United States, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 226) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 1573) for the relief of Samuel S. Weaver, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 227) thereon.

Mr. BROOKHART, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1557) to give military status and discharges to the members of the Russian Railway Service Corps, organized by the War Department under authority of the President of the United States for service during the war with Germany, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 228) thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 969) for the relief of Clotilda Freund, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 229) thereon.

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 47) to permit the correction of the general account of Charles B. Strecker, former Assistant Treasurer United States (Rept. No. 230);

A bill (S. 196) for the relief of Charles S. Fries (Rept. No. 231);

A bill (S. 828) for the relief of the receiver of the Gulf, Florida & Alabama Railway Co. (Rept. No. 232); and

A bill (S. 2527) for the payment of claims for damages to and loss of private property incident to the training, practice, operation, or maintenance of the Army (Rept. No. 233).

Mr. CAPPER also, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 608) for the relief of James E. Fitzgerald, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 234) thereon.

Mr. BRUCE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 245) for the relief of Henry P. Collins, alias Patrick Collins, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report (No. 235) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 723) for the relief of Benjamin F. Burch, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to, and the bill was indefinitely postponed.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 1316) for the relief of Annie H. Martin (Rept. No. 236); and

A bill (S. 1568) for the relief of certain officers in the United States Army (Rept. No. 237).

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED.

Mr. WATSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on the 7th instant they presented to the President of the United States the enrolled joint resolution (S. J. Res. 57) authorizing the erection on public grounds in the District of Columbia of a statue by Jose Clara personifying "Serenity."

MEMORIAL ADDRESS ON THE LATE PRESIDENT HARDING.

Mr. FESS. From the Committee on Printing, I report back favorably with an amendment in the nature of a substitute Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 5, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution as reported will be read for the information of the Senate.

The amendment was to strike out all after the resolving clause and to insert:

That there shall be compiled, printed with illustrations, and bound, as may be directed by the Joint Committee on Printing, 25,000 copies of the oration delivered by the Hon. Charles Evans Hughes in the House of Representatives during the exercises held in memory of the late President Warren G. Harding on February 27, 1924, including all the proceedings and the program of exercises, of which 8,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 17,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Is it an amendment of a House resolution?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is a Senate concurrent resolution.

Mr. FLETCHER. With an amendment reported striking out all after the resolving clause and inserting——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Florida that it is a concurrent resolution upon which the committee was polled. The Senator from Florida signed the poll. The changes were made in order to make the resolution conform to what it was desired to bring about.

Mr. FLETCHER. I could not understand exactly why it was being reported in that way. I did not know but that it was a House concurrent resolution that was being amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

REFUNDS OF TAXES ERRONEOUSLY COLLECTED.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I report favorably from the Committee on Finance the bill (H. R. 6901) to amend section 252 of the revenue act of 1921 in respect of credits and refunds, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that the bill be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The reading clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the second proviso of subdivision (a) of section 252 of the revenue act of 1921 as amended by the act entitled "An act to amend the revenue act of 1921 in respect to credits and refunds," approved March 4, 1923, is amended to read as follows: "Provided further, That if the taxpayer has, within five years from the time the return for the taxable year 1917 was due, filed a waiver of his right to have the taxes due for such taxable year determined and assessed within five years after the return was filed, or if he has, on or before June 15, 1924, filed such a waiver in respect of the taxes due for the taxable year 1918, then such credit or refund relating to the taxes for the year in respect of which the waiver was filed shall be allowed or made if claim therefor is filed either on or before April 1, 1925, or within two years from the time the tax was paid."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I do not object to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania. I understand that the legislation is necessary in order to prevent the statute of limitations from attaching to claims of persons for credits and refunds of taxes erroneously collected.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That is precisely the case, Mr. President.

Mr. ROBINSON. I understand it is necessary that the bill should pass promptly, and be signed by the President——

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Before the 15th of the month.

Mr. ROBINSON. Otherwise the limitations will attach immediately. I have no objection to the bill being passed.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF COTTON FUTURES ACT.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, over three months ago I introduced a bill (S. 386) to amend section 5 of the United States cotton futures act, approved August 11, 1916, as amended, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. That committee has not reported on the bill. Of course, I realize that they are quite busy, but this is a very important measure, and recently the Legislature of South Carolina passed a resolution indorsing the measure.

I would like to have the bill disposed of at as early a date as possible, and as I notice that the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is in the Chamber, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be placed upon the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill 386, and that the bill be placed upon the calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry ought to have an opportunity to determine whether it will act upon the bill and report it or whether it desires to be discharged from the consideration of the bill. In order that the members of the committee may have that opportunity I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Edge	Kendrick	Robinson
Ashurst	Edwards	Keyes	Sheppard
Bayard	Ernst	King	Shields
Borah	Ferris	Ladd	Shipstead
Brandegee	Fess	Lodge	Shortridge
Brookhart	Fletcher	McKellar	Simmons
Broussard	Frazier	McLean	Smoot
Bruce	George	McNary	Stanfield
Bursum	Gerry	Mayfield	Stephens
Cameron	Glass	Moses	Trammell
Capper	Gooding	Neely	Wadsworth
Caraway	Hale	Norris	Walsh, Mont.
Colt	Harreld	Oddie	Warren
Copeland	Harris	Pepper	Watson
Couzens	Harrison	Phipps	Weller
Curtis	Heflin	Pittman	Wheeler
Dale	Howell	Ralston	Willis
Dial	Johnson, Minn.	Ransdell
Dill	Jones, Wash.	Reed, Pa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. ROBINSON. I call attention to the fact that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] has submitted a request for unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was about to state it. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill 386, and that the bill be placed upon the calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. RANSDELL. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, with regard to my request for unanimous consent that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill 386, and that the bill be placed upon the calendar, I desire to say that I have the highest regard for that committee. The chairman of the committee is pronouncedly a fair man, able, honest, and candid. I want to appeal to his fairness and ask him why they chloroformed the bill and placed it in a pigeonhole? I introduced it in good faith. The South Carolina Legislature has indorsed it. The Alabama Legislature has indorsed it. The Manufacturers' Record, of Baltimore, one of the ablest edited papers in the United States, in an editorial the other day said no honest man could oppose the proposition.

I am not here asking for an appropriation, as some Senators do. I am here demanding, as far as within my power lies, that Congress shall enact a just law, giving the poor people of the South who produce cotton with which to clothe the world a fair living. I am trying to correct a one-sided, unjust, top-heavy, lopsided, confiscatory law. No man yet has risen on this floor to combat the justice and the honesty of my proposition.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. DIAL. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will permit me, the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has been very busy since the convening of Congress.

Mr. DIAL. Yes; that is true. The committee has had three months, and not a single hearing on the bill has been held.

Mr. NORRIS. That is true. A similar bill was introduced during the last Congress and was referred to a subcommittee. The difficulty is in the fact that the cotton men on the committee are opposed to the Senator's bill. If the Senator will make a motion under the rule to discharge the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and place the bill on the calendar, and thus comply with the rule, I am going to vote for that motion. I think the Senator's bill ought to have been acted on long ago. I have always told him that. At this session of Congress, however, it has been a physical impossibility for the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to take it up and have any hearings.

The Senator asked unanimous consent that the committee be discharged. I was here and made no objection. Objection comes from the other cotton men. It is a dispute between cotton men. The expert cotton men do not agree. They will have to fight it out on the floor of the Senate no matter what the Agricultural Committee does. I would be very glad indeed if the Senator would make that motion and the Senate would agree to it and place his bill on the calendar. For some time yet it will be an impossibility for the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to hold hearings that will in any way be satisfactory. We have been engaged every day, practically all day long and several times during the evening, in holding hearings. It has been the busiest committee I think without any doubt of any committee in the Senate during this session of Congress.

The Agricultural Committee, or most of its members at least, confess, I do for one, that the bill presents to us a problem that needs the expert consideration of the cotton men.

All the cotton men on the committee are opposed to it apparently and there are quite a number of them on the committee. It is not right to accuse the Agricultural Committee of not doing the best it could under the circumstances. I have told the Senator several times when he has talked to me that if he would make a motion to discharge the committee and place the bill on the calendar, which motion under the rule would have to go over one day, when the time comes I expect to vote for the motion myself.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I thought I was doing the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry a favor in asking that it be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, upon which it seems that they were deadlocked. I made the request through kindness to that committee.

However, Mr. President, I do not wish to let go unchallenged the statement that all of the Senators who are on the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry from the Southern States are opposed to the proposition which is embodied in the bill. I very much question the accuracy of that statement. Of course, I do not question the sincerity of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], who made the statement, but that is not the information which I have in reference to the proposed legislation; in fact, I know of but one Senator, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], who is really opposed to my proposition.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to a question?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina has the floor. Does the Senator yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. DIAL. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LODGE. I demand the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. DIAL. I move that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be placed on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion will be received under the rule.

CONSIDERATION OF TREATY WITH GREAT BRITAIN.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to give a notice that on Thursday next, at the close of morning business, I shall ask the Senate to go into executive session to consider the treaty with Great Britain, which ought to be disposed of at this time.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. LODGE:

A bill (S. 2784) authorizing the President to issue an appropriate commission and honorable discharge to Joseph B. Maccabe; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McLEAN:

A bill (S. 2785) granting a pension to Mary A. Paul (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McLEAN (by request):

A bill (S. 2786) to provide a civil government for the Virgin Islands, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 2787) for the relief of Henry von Hess; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SWANSON:

A bill (S. 2788) for the relief of Chief Boatswain John W. Stoakley (retired), United States Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. GOODING:

A bill (S. 2789) extending the boundaries of the Boise National Forest; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. NORRIS:

A bill (S. 2790) to provide for the conservation and utilization of the natural resources of the Nation, the coordination of flood control and navigation of streams, the development of hydroelectric energy and the distribution of the same, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 2791) for the relief of George Boiko;

A bill (S. 2792) for the relief of C. F. E. Peterson;

A bill (S. 2793) for the relief of the estate of Anne C. Shymer; and

A bill (S. 2794) for the relief of Margaret B. Knapp; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SIMMONS:

A bill (S. 2795) for the relief of May Adelaide Sharp; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DILL:

A bill (S. 2796) to regulate radio communication, to provide for the collection of license and radio station fees, and for other purposes; to the Committtee on Commerce.

By Mr. ODDIE:

A bill (S. 2797) to authorize the payment of claims under the provisions of the so-called war minerals relief act; to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

By Mr. HARRELD:

A bill (S. 2798) to authorize the leasing for mining purposes of unallotted lands in the Kaw Reservation in the State of Oklahoma; and

A bill (S. 2799) to provide for quarters, fuel, and light for employees of the Indian field service; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. WATSON:

A bill (S. 2800) granting an increase of pension to William Hemphill; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HARRIS:

A joint solution (S. J. Res. 94) for the investigation of the advisability and cost of securing lands in the Southern Appalachian Mountains for perpetual preservation as a national park; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

ELECTION AND QUALIFICATION OF JUDGES.

Mr. DILL. I introduce a joint resolution which I ask may be read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 93) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to election and qualification of judges, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment be proposed to the legislatures of the several States as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by three-fourths of said legislatures, shall be valid as part of the Constitution, namely:

ARTICLE III.

"SECTION 1. The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one supreme court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges of the supreme court shall be appointed from the elected judges of the inferior courts, and shall hold office during good behavior, unless Congress shall otherwise provide for their election, and length of term of office. The judges of the inferior courts shall be elected by the qualified electors of the districts over which they have jurisdiction, in such manner and for such term of office as Congress shall provide, and Congress may provide by law for the appointment by the President of the judges of the appellate courts of the United States. Congress shall fix the compensation of all judges of the courts of the United States, and such compensation shall not be diminished during their continuance in office."

ADJUSTED COMPENSATION OF WORLD WAR VETERANS.

Mr. COPELAND. I submit an amendment in the nature of a substitute intended to be proposed by me to the bill (S. 1969) to provide adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War, and for other purposes, and with it a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury relating to the bonus, which I ask permission to have printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be printed and referred to the Committee on Finance, and, without objection, the accompanying letter of the Secretary of the Treasury will be printed as a Senate document (S. Doc. No. 60), views of the Secretary of the Treasury on S. 1969, providing for a cash bonus.

AMENDMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McNARY submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $100,000 for repairing and improving aids to navigation and establishing new aids in the Columbia River, and for constructing or purchasing a suitable power boat for tending aids to navigation in such river, intended to be proposed by him to the Commerce and Labor Departments appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no resolutions coming over from a previous day, the calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that in considering the calendar the Senate take up Order of Business No. 144, being the bill (S. 1014) for the relief of F. J. Belcher, jr., trustee for Ed Fletcher, that being the point at which the Senate left off the consideration of the calendar when it was last before us.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. A parliamentary inquiry. My understanding was that the unfinished business, being the so-called Norbeck bill, was to be taken up this morning and to be the subject of consideration until 3 o'clock, at which time——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state for the information of the Senator from Utah that that is not the form in which the unanimous-consent agreement was finally entered into. The morning hour will run until 2 o'clock, at which time the Norbeck bill, the unfinished business, will be laid before the Senate. The time at which the limitation of debate will go into effect, under the unanimous-consent agreement, will be 3 o'clock.

Mr. KING. A further parliamentary inquiry. Under the unanimous-consent agreement asked by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] will debate be possible on the so-called Norbeck bill; and if so——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. From 2 o'clock until 3 o'clock debate will be in order without limitation upon any Senator.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, my understanding was that at the conclusion of routine morning business to-day we should proceed, if we desired, with the discussion of the so-called Norbeck bill and continue the discussion after 3 o'clock under the terms laid down by the unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the rule, to-day being Calendar Monday, the calendar is clearly in order; and the form of the unanimous-consent agreement as printed on the calendar is clearly in opposition to the view which has been presented by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Then I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent asked by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of Washington. I was just going to state to the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] that even if the unanimous-consent agreement which I have asked should not be granted, under the rule we must take up the calendar, unless that be dispensed with by unanimous consent.

Mr. ROBINSON. What is the request of the Senator from Washington?

Mr. JONES of Washington. My request was that we begin the consideration of the calendar with Order of Business No. 144.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is the point at which we left off the consideration of the calendar when it was last before the Senate?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; that is where the consideration of the calendar was then left off.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think that will probably be satisfactory.

Mr. KING. I desire to make one further inquiry. Does the Senator from Washington understand that under the rule, which will probably be invoked, debate will be limited to five minutes?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; I so understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], that the consideration of the calendar be begun at the point where it was left off when the calendar was last before the Senate? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will state the first bill on the calendar under the unanimous-consent agreement.

F. J. BELCHER.

The bill (S. 1014) for the relief of F. J. Belcher, jr., trustee for Ed Fletcher, was announced as first in order.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to F. J. Belcher, jr., trustee for the benefit of Ed Fletcher, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $21,838, in full payment of damage to lands owned by said Ed Fletcher inflicted thereon by the Government while occupying said lands as an Army training camp.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall ask that that bill go over unless some explanation of it shall be made. I can not understand why the claim covered in the bill should not go to the Court of Claims for adjudication.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I withhold the objection for a moment.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. This bill is in exactly the same form in which it was introduced by me at the last session, at which time it was passed by the Senate. It was very carefully examined by the committee at the former session and unanimously reported. It has been similarly examined by the committee at this session and in like manner the committee has unanimously reported in favor of its passage. It is a meritorious measure. The printed committee report shows that the Government itself made examination of the property to determine the extent of the damage. The property lies in or near Camp Kearny, in San Diego County, Calif. The property was turned over to the Government for the nominal consideration of $1. In and about the activities of the Army during the war the property suffered damage to the extent ascertained by the Government itself, and thereupon a bill was introduced and passed at the last session, and a similar bill comes before us now. I have never heard anyone object to the bill itself or as to the amount fixed by the Government. The committee's report is, of course, before the Senator from Utah and the Senate, and I can imagine no valid objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator that it seems to me this is a rather large amount to allow without its going to the Court of Claims?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. It went to the Committee on Claims, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. KING. I refer to judicial proceeding before the Court of Claims.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. While it did not take the form of an inquiry by the Committee on the Judiciary, the merit of the claim as a legal matter seems to be conceded on all hands. To repeat, perhaps unnecessarily, this property was turned over for the use of the Government. The Government entered upon its possession, and in and about the training of soldiers vast trenches were dug and various other works incidental to the preliminary study and training of large numbers of our soldiers in anticipation of their activities on the field of battle were constructed upon the physical property to restore which will involve an expenditure in the amount stated.

As to the justice of it I have nothing more to say, but as to the amount it has been ascertained.

Mr. KING. It seems from the report—and I have not had time to read it all; it is a very long one—that there was a stipulated rental of $1 for the demised term.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Precisely.

Mr. KING. And there was taken into account the financial benefits the owners of the property might derive from having the camp located at San Diego. It would seem—and I state this with a good deal of hesitancy, because the report may qualify the observation which I am about to make——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). The Senator from California has occupied his five minutes.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I can only express the hope that the Senator will permit the bill to come to a vote.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall speak briefly in my own time. It would seem, notwithstanding the lease for $1 a year, and notwithstanding the possible benefits that were to be derived not only by the city but by the owners themselves, they now put in a bill here for $21,000. May I say that so far as I can determine there was no permanent injury to the land so taken except the construction of some trenches. I should like the Senator to explain in my time what is the reason to justify this large appropriation, when the owners leased the premises for $1.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. First, there were no incidental or consequent benefits to the owners of the property. The leasing of the land was a patriotic act on the part of the owners. I can not, in a few moments, tell the Senator or the Senate the extent of the excavations or the work done on this property, but it has been left in a condition which makes it necessary to fill the trenches and restore, in a measure, the physical property to the condition in which it was when turned over to the Government. It is not a mere theory; it is the physical condition in which the property is left.

The Army authorities recognize the facts. They made investigation, and diagrams and figures would justify what I am saying. The fact that the property was turned over to the Government as a patriotic act for a nominal consideration should rather persuade us to pass the measure, because we impliedly obligated the Government to restore the property at least to the condition in which it was turned over for the use of the Government. That is the theory of the bill.

I think it just. I think it meritorious, and I was only concerned as to the amount involved, and that amount was ascertained by the Government engineers. Hence the bill came before us at the former session and was passed, and is now before us again. I feel warranted in asking the Senate to pass the measure, and I feel warranted in asking the Senator from Utah, who is more than careful and diligent in looking to the finances of the Government, to withhold any objection to its present consideration.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I know that the able Senator from California is fair and just and would not make any request that he did not think was warranted. I am afraid this bill will constitute a precedent, and I beg the Senator to permit it to go over until next Monday. In the meantime I shall examine it, and if I find that the precedent I have in mind is not a dangerous one, or that it will not constitute a precedent, I shall join with the Senator in asking for its immediate consideration.

Mr. CAPPER. I call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the recommendation of General Lord, at that time Chief of Finance, found at the conclusion of this report, in which he finds that the claim is a just one, and says:

The War Department Claims Board has examined the facts in the case and recommends an award in favor of the claimant in the amount of $21,838, in full and complete settlement.

The release conditioned in said amount is herewith.

It is the opinion of this office that the damage as recommended by the board is equitable and just and payment in said amount is recommended.

The Director of the Budget also gave considerable attention to this claim and also recommended it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

J. G. SEUPELT.

The bill (S. 1703) for the relief of J. G. Seupelt was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to permit one J. G. Seupelt to enter under the homestead laws, at the appraised price, a certain unsurveyed island in the Colville Indian Reservation, Wash., known as "Hog Island," containing about 152 acres, located in the Columbia River, and within sections 26 and 35 township 30 north, range 36 east of the Willamette meridian, in the State of Washington: Provided, That proceeds arising hereunder shall be subject to the provisions of section 6 of the act of March 22, 1906 (vol. 34, U. S. Stat. L., p. 81): Provided further, That the right of entry by the said Seupelt shall be exercised within 90 days after the execution and acceptance of the survey of the island: And provided further, That the land hereby disposed of shall be subject to all the laws of the United States prohibiting the introduction of intoxicants into the Indian country, until otherwise provided by Congress.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I did not know that we had more than one Hog Island in this country; but that of itself is no objection to the passage of the bill, and I see that Secretary Work has recommended its passage. I have no objection to it. I request, however, as part of my remarks, that there be inserted in the RECORD an editorial from the Tampa Morning Tribune of March 5, 1924, entitled "The real oil issue"; an editorial from the Washington Daily News of March 7, 1924, entitled "The Coolidge to McLean telegrams"; and an editorial from the New York Herald of yesterday, March 9, entitled "Mr. Daugherty's conduct."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the editorials will be inserted in the RECORD.

The editorials are as follows:

THE REAL OIL ISSUE.

Through the wilderness of waving arms and thunderclouds of political balderdash with which Washington thus far has shrouded its examination of the oil scandal, one inexorable fact still stands out as clear and unmistakable as a lighthouse.

It is this: The indubitable intention of the persons who originally created the naval reserves at Teapot Dome, Elk Hill, and other places, as made manifest by congressional debate at the time, was that the oil in these sections was to remain underground and inviolate until the United States had found itself reduced by a most desperate emergency to its employment in defense of the very existence of the Nation.

It was the intention of the legislators and officials responsible for the reserve policy that as long as oil was available in the open markets of America or the world, as long as it was possible to purchase oil in Mexico or Central or South America or Mesopotamia or the Far East, whether in time of peace or of ordinary war emergency, the oil in these naval reserves was to remain in the ground as America's last ace in the hole, her last trump in a fight to the death. It was to be used only when America, cut off from every other source of oil, had been reduced to utter dependence on her own resources to preserve her very life.

The only conceivable situation which would warrant its withdrawal is another conflict of even greater magnitude than the World War, in which America, beset by a combination of powerful adversaries, has been completely isolated by an enemy force from any contact with outside sources of oil. It was expected, and it is a fact, that in time of peace or even in a conflict of the character of the late war the American Navy can obtain oil in regular course from regular sources here and abroad, and it is unthinkable that this oil will not suffice until oil in the naval reserves can be produced if a grave emergency looms ahead.

If this priceless oil was being drained from Teapot Dome by private exploiters in the vicinity, it is not public policy to remove the reserve oil from the safest depository on earth, which is the ground itself, and strew it around the world, to be used while there still is plenty of other oil, and if not at once used subjecting it to the concentrated attack of any adversary with a navy and an air force. It is wrong, because the Government's power to enjoin this drainage is practically unlimited. Who is fatuous enough to say that a government of 110,000,000 people is powerless to stem the loss of oil which may in this very generation prove the salvation of the land? To deny the Government's power of domain over its own soil is the most fallacious stand any American public official can possibly assume.

The question then of the validity of the leases of these reserves to Doheny or Sinclair is simply not relevant. The leases are contrary to public policy and the vital necessities of national existence. They have thwarted every intention of the creators of the reserve policy and the American public.

THE COOLIDGE TO M'LEAN TELEGRAMS.

(An editorial.)

The gray wolf pack is in full cry denouncing Senator WALSH for "dragging the name of President Coolidge" into the oil scandal.

A cheap, mean attempt to villify the President is the way the New York Tribune refers to the introduction of the Coolidge telegrams to McLean into the Senate committee record.

In our view neither Senator WALSH nor any other member of the Senate committee "dragged" the President into the oil investigation.

Whatever "dragging" there was was done by the President himself.

On January 11, at Palm Beach, McLean testified under oath to Senator WALSH that he did not lend Fall $100,000 as he had previously told the Senate committee through his attorney that he had.

McLean's testimony was published in the Washington evening newspapers of January 11 and the Washington morning newspapers of January 12.

It goes without saying that in a matter of so grave importance involving the administration, the President was perfectly familiar with McLean's testimony when he sent him a personal telegram at 9 o'clock, evening of January 12.

To say that a telegram, ambiguous in text, sent by the Chief Executive to one of the most important figures in the oil investigation at this critical period is not a proper matter for the Senate committee record, and for the knowledge of the public, seems to us both irrational and illogical.

President Coolidge says that the telegram had no reference to oil; that it referred to District of Columbia matters. The country has read the telegram and it has the President's explanation.

It also has read the telegram from the President to McLean dated February 12 and it has the President's explanation of that. The country will judge whether or not there was any connection between these telegrams and the oil investigation.

The country also will judge as to the propriety of the President being in friendly, even intimate, telegraphic correspondence with McLean at these times and under these circumstances.

The atmosphere surrounding this oil scandal is quite as important as the separate facts, and the Coolidge to McLean telegrams certainly are vital contributions to the atmosphere.

Then there is another aspect of the oil scandal which makes these telegrams, particularly the first one, significant as exhibits in the case of the people versus the oil thieves.

It will be remembered that the President's secretary, Slemp, testified before the committee that during the month he was in Florida he saw McLean only "occasionally and accidentally."

The President sending a message to Slemp through McLean runs to the credibility of Slemp's testimony.

The White House apparently thought the contact between McLean and Slemp was more than "occasional and accidental."

For the purpose of testing Slemp's testimony the first presidential telegram was as useful to the case as the telegram from Slemp's office attendant at the White House advising McLean of Slemp's departure for Florida, and a similar message from one of McLean's Washington agents to the same effect.

As to the second presidential message—it was about the Denby resignation and was most decidedly a part of the oil scandal. The President was telegraphing one of the chief actors in the scandal—McLean—about another of the chief actors—Denby.

MR. DAUGHERTY'S CONDUCT.

If it is not refuted no other charge against Mr. Daugherty is so damaging as the testimony of Ira E. Bennett, one of E. B. McLean's employees, before the Senate investigating committee, upon the Attorney General's alleged messages to McLean.

Mr. Daugherty's alleged messages of comfort and advice to McLean were not sent direct, but were written by Bennett at what the latter says was Daugherty's prompting. At the time they were sent, everybody knew that McLean had tried to shield Fall from exposure. The publisher had made a misstatement for that purpose, and later, under oath, had repudiated it. He was subpœnaed on February 14 to appear before the Walsh committee, which expected his testimony to be of great importance.

The seriousness of Bennett's statements hence is clear. We should expect Mr. Daugherty at that moment to be helping the oil inquiry and taking an attitude of sharp condemnation toward any man who tried to obstruct it. Yet Bennett says that Daugherty sent word to McLean "not to worry," and wanted him assured that "all that is possible to do will be done by us; you should worry delay selection of prosecutor." The Attorney General, according to Bennett, said: "I am attending to things. I am getting posted and will do what I can to help." By this Bennett declares that Mr. Daugherty meant he would help McLean escape giving testimony.

If these messages were actually authorized by Daugherty, they would suggest that the Attorney General was hostile to the oil inquiry and was willing to interfere with it. If the testimony were not contradicted, it would show that the officer charged with the Federal prosecution of lawbreakers was in sympathy with a man who had tried to cover up the trail of a suspected offender. It would indicate a willingness to let personal considerations interfere with justice to an extent inexcusable in any Attorney General.

Mr. Daugherty should demand at once an opportunity to testify as to these charges before the Senate investigating committee, as Senator CURTIS demanded Friday, when Bennett made statements to the committee that the Senator denounced as false.

If this testimony of Bennett's is not promptly denied by Mr. Daugherty before the Senate investigating committee, it will constitute a clear charge against him of his unfitness for his office, a charge admitting no defense. Apart from this information dug out of the McLean telegrams, there has been nothing in the Senate charges against Daugherty of a definite nature. This Bennett testimony is very definite—extremely damaging.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OSAGE INDIAN LANDS, OKLAHOMA.

The bill (S. 2315) to amend an act entitled "An act for the division of the lands and funds of the Osage Indians in Oklahoma, and for other purposes," approved June 28, 1906, and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, with an amendment, on page 2, line 1, before the word "Indian," to strike out "Osage," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That any right to or interest in the lands, money, or mineral interests, as provided in the act of Congress approved June 28, 1906 (34th Stats. L., p. 539), entitled "An act for the division of the lands and funds of the Osage Indians in Oklahoma, and for other purposes," and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, vested in, determined, or adjudged to be the right or property of any person not an Indian by blood, shall be subject to sale, assignment, and transfer under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENSE ACT.

The bill (S. 2169) to amend in certain particulars the national defense act of June 3, 1916, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this seems to be a revision of the entire act. Apparently it will take considerable time to dispose of the bill. There are 8 or 10 pages here.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, this is a sort of an omnibus bill, clearing up several matters in the national defense act. I think there is no objection to it. I am a member of the Military Affairs Committee, and there are several amendments that I was authorized to suggest on the floor of the Senate since the bill was reported. I think the mere suggestion of them will be sufficient.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, in the naval bills and these omnibus measures there oftentimes creep in provisions that are advantageous to certain persons and certain elements in the Navy, and later we are compelled to dissent; we feel that perhaps they are more comprehensive than we anticipated. It seems to me that it will be a little difficult for us under the five-minute rule to make as searching an investigation as we should of any bill that amends the naval act or the Army act, especially a comprehensive bill such as this, containing six or seven pages.

Mr. BROOKHART. Most of these amendments are for the benefit of the National Guard, and I know personally that all of those are very much to be desired.

Mr. KING. Does the chairman of this committee desire this bill to be passed?

Mr. BROOKHART. Yes; the chairman of the committee will be here in a moment. The committee was unanimous in regard to everything recommended here. The bill was carefully considered by the committee.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Chair if the bill can be temporarily laid aside and the next bill taken up, meanwhile sending for the chairman of the committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill can be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. BROOKHART. I have already sent for the chairman of the committee, and I understand that he is on the way to the Senate Chamber. I should not like to have something else get in that would prevent the consideration of this bill.

Mr. KING. The Chair indicates that it can be laid aside temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill may be passed over temporarily.

Mr. BROOKHART. Very well.

Mr. WADSWORTH subsequently said: Mr. President, I understand that Senate bill 2169, Order of Business 148, was temporarily passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent that we may revert to it. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] reported the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will return to Order of Business 148, Senate bill 2169.

The principal legislative clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, this bill is rather long, and perhaps I should say something as to what it purports to do.

The bill is in the nature of an omnibus bill. It contains a number of amendments to the national defense act, unrelated one with the other, but gathered together in one bill. I think it fair to say that this omnibus bill is one which picks up and corrects a number of comparatively minor matters which have been shown to need correction as a result of the experience of the Army for two or three years since 1920.

The first section makes a change in the percentage of the noncommissioned grades in the regular service.

The second section makes certain changes in what is known as the Manchu law, that law which governs the length of time which officers of the regular service may serve away from troops and the length of time they must serve with troops.

The next section relates to the commissioning of reserve officers and straightens out a technical difficulty in that regard, so that the National Guard officers shall have exactly the same status as reserve officers.

Then there is a section relating to the National Guard on page 4, relating to the issue of forage and bedding to the mounted units of the guard, with a proviso to be inserted on line 9, page 5.

Mr. FLETCHER. Does the bill accomplish what the National Guard have been urging for some time?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It does. The sections of this bill relating to the National Guard were drawn by a committee of the National Guard Association and a committee of the General Staff of the War Department, participated in by reserve and guard officers attached to the War Department. It has been approved by the General Staff and the Secretary of War and is the unanimous conclusion of everybody who has studied the subject. There are several minor matters of that kind, no one of them of great importance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 7, after line 14, to insert a new section, to be numbered 7, as follows:

SEC. 7. That, pursuant to section 63 of the national defense act of June 3, 1916, as amended, the First Corps Cadets, antedating, and continuously existing in the State of Massachusetts since, the act of May 8, 1792, now designated as the Second Battalion, Two hundred and eleventh Artillery, Antiaircraft, Coast Artillery Corps, First Corps Cadets, Massachusetts National Guard, hereby declared to be such a corps as is defined in said section 63 for all the purposes thereof and now incorporated in the Organized Militia and a part of the National Guard of Massachusetts, shall be allowed to retain its ancient privileges and organization. Said First Corps Cadets is hereby further declared to be entitled to a lieutenant colonel in command and a major second in command; and said officers, when federally recognized, shall receive, in accordance with the provisions of said national defense act and the pay readjustment act of June 10, 1922, the pay of their respective grades: Provided, That nothing in this section or other provisions of law shall be deemed to be in derogation of any other ancient privileges to which said First Corps Cadets is entitled under the laws, customs, or usages of the State of Massachusetts.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter the respective grade percentages prescribed in section 4 (b) of the national defense act of June 3, 1916, as amended, of the total authorized number of enlisted men shall not exceed seventy-nine one-hundredths of 1 per cent for the first grade, 2.17 per cent for the second grade, 2.99 per cent for the third grade, 10.11 per cent for the fourth grade, 9.5 per cent for the fifth grade, and 25 per cent for the sixth grade; and aforementioned section 4 (b) is hereby amended accordingly.

SEC. 2. That all that part of section 4 (c) of said national defense act, as amended, relating to General Staff details and duty with troops and beginning with the words "in time of peace" and ending with the words "with combatant arms," be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"In time of peace no officer of the line shall be or remain detailed as a member of the General Staff Corps unless he shall have served as a commissioned officer for two of the next preceding six years in actual command of troops of one or more of the combatant arms, and no other officer shall be or remain so detailed unless he shall have served as a commissioned officer for two years with a command composed entirely or in part of units of combatant arms in the active service of the United States. In time of peace every officer of the line serving in a grade below that of brigadier general shall serve with troops of one or more of the combatant arms for one year in every period of five consecutive years of his active commissioned service, and every other officer serving in a grade below that of brigadier general, except a professor and the present military storekeeper, shall, during the first 10 years of his active commissioned service, serve with a command composed entirely or in part of units of combatant arms in the active service of the United States for such periods as shall, with periods of like service heretofore or hereafter rendered, aggregate two years. In the administration of this provision all duty performed between April 6, 1917, and July 1, 1920, inclusive, and all duty heretofore performed as a student at service schools, other than those of the noncombatant branches, shall be regarded as satisfying the requirements of service with or in command of troops of one or more of the combatant arms and of service with a command composed entirely or in part of units of combatant arms in the active service of the United States; and for officers commissioned in combatant arms service as students at any service school at any time shall also be so regarded."

SEC. 3. That said national defense act, as amended, be, and the same is hereby, further amended by inserting therein, immediately after section 37 thereof, a new section to be known as section 38, in lieu of original section 38 struck out by section 31 of the amendatory act of June 4, 1920, and to read as follows:

"SEC. 38. Commissions of reserve officers: All persons appointed reserve officers shall be commissioned in the Army of the United States. Officers of the National Guard, federally recognized as such under the provisions of this act who are appointed reserve officers under the provisions of section 37 of this act, shall be appointed for the period during which such recognition shall continue in effect and terminating at the expiration thereof in lieu of the five-year period hereinbefore prescribed, and in time of peace shall be governed by such special regulations appropriate for this class of reserve officers as the Secretary of War may prescribe."

SEC. 4. That section 69 of said national defense act, as amended, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 69. Original enlistments in the National Guard shall be for a period of three years, and subsequent enlistments for periods of one year or three years each."

SEC. 5. That section 90 of said national defense act, as amended, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 90. That funds allotted by the Secretary of War for the support of the National Guard shall be available for the purchase and issue of forage, bedding, shoeing, and veterinary services, and supplies for the Government animals issued to any organization, and for animals owned or hired by any State, Territory, District of Columbia, or National Guard organization, not exceeding the number of animals authorized by Federal law for such organization and used solely for military purposes, and for the compensation of competent help for the care of material, animals, armament, and equipment of organizations of all kinds, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe: Provided, That the men to be so compensated shall not exceed five for each organization, except heavier-than-air squadrons, for each of which a maximum of 10 to be so compensated is hereby authorized, and shall, save as otherwise provided in the next succeeding proviso, be duly enlisted therein and detailed by the organization commander, and shall be paid by the United States disbursing officer in each State, Territory, and the District of Columbia: Provided further, That whenever it shall be found impracticable to secure the necessary competent enlisted caretakers for the material, animals, armament, or equipment of any organization from the duly enlisted personnel thereof, the organization commander may employ one civilian caretaker therefor who shall be entitled to such compensation as may be fixed by the Secretary of War."

SEC. 6. That section 109 of said national defense act, as amended, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 109. Pay for the National Guard Officers: Captains, lieutenants, and warrant officers belonging to organizations of the National Guard shall receive compensation at the rate of one-thirtieth of the monthly base pay prescribed for them in sections 3 and 9 of the pay readjustment act of June 10, 1922, for each regular drill or other period of instruction authorized by the Secretary of War, not exceeding 8 in any one calendar month and not exceeding 60 in one year, at which they shall have been officially present for the entire required period and at which at least 50 per cent of the commissioned strength and 60 per cent of the enlisted strength attend and participate for not less than one and one-half hours. Officers above the grade of captain shall receive not more than $500 a year, and officers below the grade of major, not belonging to organizations, shall receive not more than four-thirtieths of the monthly base pay prescribed for them in section 3 of said pay readjustment act for satisfactory performance of their appropriate duties under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe. In addition to pay hereinbefore provided, officers commanding organizations less than a brigade and having administrative functions connected therewith shall, whether or not such officers belong to such organizations, receive not more than $240 a year for the faithful performance of such administrative functions under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe; and for the purpose of determining how much shall be paid to such officers so performing such functions the Secretary of War may from time to time divide them into classes and fix the amount payable to the officers in each class. Pay under the provisions of this section shall not accrue to any officer during a period when he shall be entitled under any provision of law to the full rate of his base pay prescribed in section 3 or section 9, as the case may be, of the pay readjustment act of June 10, 1922: Provided, That section 9 of an act entitled 'An act amending the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917,' approved August 31, 1918, shall also apply to the purchase of uniforms, accouterments, and equipment for cash by officers of the National Guard and National Guard Reserve, whether in State or Federal service, on proper identification and under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe."

SEC. 7. That pursuant to section 63 of the national defense act of June 3, 1916, as amended, the First Corps Cadets, antedating and continuously existing in the State of Massachusetts since the act of May 8, 1792, now designated as the Second Battalion, Two hundred and eleventh Artillery, Antiaircraft, Coast Artillery Corps, First Corps Cadets, Massachusetts National Guard, hereby declared to be such a corps as is defined in said section 63 for all the purposes thereof and now incorporated in the Organized Militia and a part of the National Guard of Massachusetts, shall be allowed to retain its ancient privileges and organization. Said First Corps Cadets is hereby further declared to be entitled to a lieutenant colonel in command and a major second in command; and said officers when Federally recognized shall receive, in accordance with the provisions of said national defense act and the pay readjustment act of June 10, 1922, the pay of their respective grades: Provided, That nothing in this section or other provisions of law shall be deemed to be in derogation of any other ancient privileges to which said First Corps Cadets is entitled under the laws, customs, or usages of the State of Massachusetts.

SEC. 8. That the first paragraph of section 110 of said national defense act, as amended, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 110. Pay for National Guard Enlisted Men: Each enlisted man belonging to an organization of the National Guard, other than enlisted men of the sixth and seventh grades, shall receive compensation at the rate of one-thirtieth of the initial monthly pay of his grade in the Regular Army, and each of those of the sixth and seventh grades shall receive compensation as is provided in section 14 of the pay readjustment act of June 10, 1922, for each drill ordered for his organization where he is officially present and in which he participates for not less than one and one-half hours, not exceeding 8 in any one calendar month and not exceeding 60 drills in one year: Provided, That the proviso contained in section 92 of this act shall not operate to prevent the payment of enlisted men actually present at any duly ordered drill or other exercise: Provided further, That periods of any actual military duty equivalent to the drills herein prescribed (except those periods of service provided for in sections 94, 97, 99, and 101 of the national defense act as amended) may be accepted as service in lieu of such drills when so provided by the Secretary of War: And provided further, That any enlisted man shall, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, receive compensation under the provisions of this section for any drill had in accordance with such provisions where he is officially present and in which he participates for not less than one and one-half hours with a National Guard organization within the same State at a station other than his own, upon presentation of a certificate, in form prescribed in said regulations, from the organization commander to the commanding officer of the organization of which he is a member, showing such drill participation."

SEC. 9. That retired enlisted men of the Army heretofore or hereafter retired who served honorably as commissioned officers of the Army of the United States at some time between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, shall be entitled to receive the pay of retired warrant officers of the Army; and retired enlisted men of the regular Navy and Marine Corps heretofore or hereafter retired who served honorably as commissioned officers, regular, temporary, or reserve, in the naval service at some time between the aforesaid dates, and who at the time of their retirement were members of the regular Navy or Marine Corps, shall be entitled to receive the pay of retired warrant officers of the Navy and Marine Corps, respectively: Provided, That such enlisted man retired prior to July 1, 1922, shall be entitled to receive the pay provided by law for retired warrant officers of equal length of service retired prior to that date, and that any such enlisted man retired subsequent to June 30, 1922, shall be entitled to receive the pay provided by law for retired warrant officers of equal length of service retired subsequent to that date: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall operate to prevent any person from receiving the pay and allowances of his grade, rank, or rating on the retired list when such pay and allowances exceed the pay to which he would be entitled under this act by virtue of his commissioned service.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I am authorized by the committee to offer from the floor the following amendments: On page 2, line 17, after the word "general," to insert the words "and above that of captain."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROOKHART. On page 2, line 18, after the word "for," to insert the words "not less than."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROOKHART. On page 2, line 19, after the word "service," to insert the words:

And every officer of the line serving in a grade below that of major shall serve with troops of one or more of the combatant arms for not less than three years in every period of five consecutive years of his active commissioned service.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROOKHART. On page 3, line 4, after the word "heretofore," to insert the words "and hereafter."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROOKHART. On page 3, line 5, after the word "branches," to insert the words "or as director of civilian marksmanship."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROOKHART. On page 3, line 12, before the period, to insert a colon and the words:

Provided, That in time of peace no officer serving in grades below that of colonel, other than officers of the Medical, Judge Advocate General's, and Finance Departments, shall be or remain assigned to duty or station in Washington for more than four of the next preceding six years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend in certain particulars the national defense act of June 3, 1916, as amended, and for other purposes."

BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1932) to change the name of Thirty-seventh Street between Chevy Chase Circle and Reno Road, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRUCE. I ask that that bill be temporarily laid aside. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL], the chairman of the committee, is not here, and I happen to know that there are some objections to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over if the Senator objects.

Mr. BRUCE. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 60) to stimulate crop production in the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

SEARCH FOR BODY OF JOHN PAUL JONES.

The bill (S. 2392) authorizing an appropriation to indemnify damages caused by the search for the body of Admiral John Paul Jones was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask about this measure. It seems to me we have been paying damages ever since I have been in the Senate, and for a hundred years before that, for alleged injuries resulting to property and individuals in searching for the remains of the great naval hero, John Paul Jones.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator has made the inquiry, because it gives me a chance within the 5-minute rule to make an explanation. The Senate passed this bill at the last session, but owing to the jam in the House it did not go through.

The facts, briefly, are these:

When John Paul Jones died in France in the last decade of the eighteenth century his own Government, which he had served so well, did not even pay for his burial. The commissioner of police in Paris at that time, out of his own pocket, paid for the embalming and the burial of the body, and it was admirably done, I may say, because they had a lead casket filled with alcohol—that was before the passage of the Volstead law—and the body was sealed up and buried in good order; and when it came to be excavated, in the year 1905 I think, it was found in a state of perfect preservation, and was brought back to this country, and it now lies in state at Annapolis.

The work of excavation and discovery of the body was undertaken by Ambassador Porter as his own personal enterprise. The Government was not responsible for what he did, but he was indemnified for his principal expenses. They were not quite sure where the body was. It had been buried in an old Protestant cemetery on the left bank in Paris, and that cemetery had been closed up and built over with dwelling houses. They dug for quite a while and did not find the body, and finally their trenches led to the house of Mme. Crignier, and Ambassador Porter went to her and said, "Will you not please let us excavate under your house, because we think we know where this body is?" The old lady—she is an old lady; she is over 80 now—said, "Very good, Mr. Ambassador; go ahead and do it"; and, without any bond or security of any kind, she gave him carte blanche to dig away under the foundations of her house.

Mr. KING. And they were damaged?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. They were terribly damaged.

Mr. KING. And this is to compensate her?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I will not go into the details, but the damage was so terrible that it drove out all of the tenants in the first place, and in the next place it caused the collapse of a large part of the foundations.

Mr. KING. I think the bill ought to pass.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. May I just add one more word? The payment of the bill has been urged twice by President Wilson in messages to Congress, once by President Harding in a message to Congress, and now, a month ago, in a message by President Coolidge. I think everybody is agreed that it ought to be done. It is a debt of honor.

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The appropriation includes no interest, and the old lady has been out of her money for nearly 25 years.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the claim is not presented as a liability upon the part of the Government of the United States, but under the circumstances, as stated by the Senator from Pennsylvania, I believe the bill ought to have been paid a long while ago. As a matter of fact, it will be an act of injustice, as it appears to me, to refuse to pay it.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I thank the Senator. It is stated as a matter of grace and not a matter of liability.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the word "France," to insert "as a matter of grace and without reference to the question of liability therefor," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That an appropriation is authorized to be made for $13,511.13 to be paid to the Government of the Republic of France as a matter of grace and without reference to the question of liability therefor as full indemnity for loss and damage to property suffered by Mme. Crignier, a citizen of France, by reason of the search for the body of Admiral John Paul Jones, undertaken in 1899 by Gen. Horace Porter, at that time American ambassador to France, and completed by the finding of the body in 1905, as set forth in the messages of the President of the United States to the Senate and the House of Representatives dated June 4, 1918; July 21, 1919; July 11, 1921; and January 3, 1924.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF CHEROKEE INDIANS.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to Order of Business No. 112, Senate bill 2115, conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in any claims which the Cherokee Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes, and I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

Let me state that an identical bill has already passed the House of Representatives, House bill 4457, and is on the table. If the request which I ask is granted, I shall ask to take up the House bill in lieu of the Senate bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to recur to Senate bill 2115. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that there be taken from the table House bill 4457, which is identical with the Senate bill, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of that bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4457) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in any claims which the Cherokee Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction be, and is hereby, conferred upon the Court of Claims, notwithstanding the lapse of time or statutes of limitation, to hear, examine, and adjudicate and render judgment in any and all legal and equitable claims arising under or growing out of any treaty or agreement between the United States and the Cherokee Indian Nation or Tribe, or arising under or growing out of any act of Congress in relation to Indian affairs, which said Cherokee Nation or Tribe may have against the United States, which claims have not heretofore been determined and adjudicated on their merits by the Court of Claims or the Supreme Court of the United States.

SEC. 2. Any and all claims against the United States within the purview of this act shall be forever barred unless suit be instituted or petition filed as herein provided in the Court of Claims within five years from the date of approval of this act, and such suit shall make the Cherokee Nation party plaintiff and the United States party defendant. The petition shall be verified by the attorney or attorneys employed to prosecute such claim or claims under contract with the Cherokees approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior; and said contract shall be executed in their behalf by a committee chosen by them under the direction and approval of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior. Official letters, papers, documents, and records, or certified copies thereof, may be used in evidence, and the departments of the Government shall give access to the attorney or attorneys of said Indian nation to such treaties, papers, correspondence, or records as may be needed by the attorney or attorneys of said Indian nation.

SEC. 3. In said suit the court shall also hear, examine, consider, and adjudicate any claims which the United States may have against said Indian nation, but any payment which may have been made by the United States upon any claim against the United States shall not operate as an estoppel, but may be pleaded as an offset in such suit.

SEC. 4. That from the decision of the Court of Claims in any suit prosecuted under the authority of this act an appeal may be taken by either party as in other cases to the Supreme Court of the United States.

SEC. 5. That upon the final determination of any suit instituted under this act the Court of Claims shall decree such amount or amounts as it may find reasonable to be paid the attorney or attorneys so employed by said Indian nation for the services and expenses of said attorneys rendered or incurred prior or subsequent to the date of approval of this act: Provided, That in no case shall the aggregate amounts decreed by said Court of Claims for fees be in excess of the amount or amounts stipulated in the contract of employment, or in excess of a sum equal to 10 per cent of the amount of recovery against the United States.

SEC. 6. The Court of Claims shall have full authority by proper orders and process to bring in and make parties to such suit any or all persons deemed by it necessary or proper to the final determination of the matters in controversy.

SEC. 7. A copy of the petition shall, in such case, be served upon the Attorney General of the United States, and he, or some attorney from the Department of Justice to be designated by him, is hereby directed to appear and defend the interests of the United States in such case.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senate bill 2115 will be indefinitely postponed.

TENNESSEE RIVER BRIDGE AT KNOXVILLE.

The bill (S. 2108) to grant the consent of Congress to the Southern Railway Co. to maintain a bridge across the Tennessee River at Knoxville, in the county of Knox, State of Tennessee, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Southern Railway Co., and its successors and assigns, to maintain and operate a bridge and approaches thereto, originally constructed by the Knoxville & Charleston Railroad Co., across the Tennessee River at Knoxville, in the county of Knox, State of Tennessee, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE, SOUTH DAKOTA.

The bill (S. 2332) granting the consent of Congress to the State of South Dakota for the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between Hughes County and Stanley County, S. Dak., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, on page 2, after line 2, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the State of South Dakota to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, between Hughes County and Stanley County, S. Dak., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAM AND SPILLWAY ACROSS WACCAMAW RIVER, N. C.

The bill (H. R. 2818) to grant the consent of Congress to construct, maintain, and operate a dam and spillway across the Waccamaw River, in North Carolina, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to K. C. Council, F. B. Gault, and Oscar High, or their legal representatives or assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a dam and spillway, together with the embankments necessary to its protection and operation, across the Waccamaw River, or in Waccamaw Lake, in North Carolina, at or near the outlet of said lake into said river and at a point suitable to the interests of navigation: Provided, That the work shall not be commenced until the plans therefor have been submitted to and approved by the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, and by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That this act shall not be construed to authorize the use of said dam and spillway to develop water power or generate electricity: Provided further, That there shall be placed and maintained in connection with said dam and spillway such fishways as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce.

SEC. 2. That this act shall be null and void unless the actual construction of the dam and spillway hereby authorized is commenced within two years and completed within four years from the date of the approval of this act.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CALUMET RIVER BRIDGE, ILLINOIS.

The bill (H. R. 3845) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Little Calumet River, at Riverdale, Ill., was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Acme Steel Goods Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, its successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Little Calumet River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation in the village of Riverdale and State of Illinois, and at or near the south city limits of the city of Chicago, in the State of Illinois, in accordance with act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges across navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL DIVERSIFICATION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2250) to promote a permanent system of self-supporting agriculture in regions adversely affected by the stimulation of wheat production during the war and aggravated by many years of small yields and high production costs of wheat.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] to add a new section to the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I submitted some remarks a few days ago on the pending bill, and since then I have received a number of communications from various portions of the country. Just a few of them, rather brief but to the point, I have in my hand and would like to have inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks: First, a letter from Mr. Fred Underwood, of Enderlin, N. Dak., dated March 4, 1924; next a letter from Mr. James C. Craig, of Lewistown, Mont., dated March 4; a letter from Mr. Robert F. Constant, of Buffalo Hart, Ill., dated March 4; another letter from Mr. R. N. Bruyere, of Salt Lake City, Utah; and another communication from Mr. Fred Underwood, of Enderlin, N. Dak., submitting a short editorial from the Fargo Forum. I ask to have these letters inserted in the RECORD, as they bear directly upon the merits of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Florida? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The letters are as follows:

ENDERLIN, N. DAK., March 4, 1924.

Hon. Senator FLETCHER,

Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: The writer notes by the press that you have expressed opposition to the Norbeck-Burtness bill now before Congress purporting to be for the purpose of financing farm diversification.

It interests the writer as being the first note of opposition heard. Washington has gone completely wild on the idea of loaning us of the Northwest more money, and either do not see or have no wish to see our real needs.

That is one of our present difficulties, that we have had too much money loaned to us already. For goodness sake stop it. We need no more credit. But what we do need is an opportunity to obtain a fair price for what we need, purchase for our needs at a fair price, a chance to produce and to pay off what we do owe.

An honest medical practitioner called to attend a member of your family first seeks to discover and remove the cause of the illness. It is not likely that he would seek to cure a candy-colicky sick child by giving it more candy when it required pills.

There is no need for congressional aid for diversification whatsoever. This has been advocated and practiced for years, and at this time and in view of the present extreme financial crisis with us I do not believe that there are any farmers within this State, except as to small localities, who are worthy of financial assistance but who can obtain all the local financial aid to which he is entitled for the purposes of diversification.

We are now indebted more than may be paid within a generation. So why should Congress insist upon giving more funds to put us in still deeper; in other words, to give more candy to the sick patient?

Ours is an agricultural community, and we have been for years paying tribute to the industrial East, and the legislators from the East have not the moral courage to afford us the proper relief, but instead persist in the hullabaloo of lending us more money and thus befog the issue and permit the present conditions to continue.

The writer could readily indicate many of our real ailments, but space forbids.

In event Congress refuses to recognize and rectify our real difficulties and will do nothing but lend us more money, the inevitable results will be a ruined and abandoned Northwest.

And again, yours is the first note of protest or touching upon our real issues, and although only just a Mr. Common Citizen, the writer is exceedingly glad to note one lone attempt to get on the right trail.

With apologies I am,

Yours very truly,

FRED UNDERWOOD.

MARCH 4, 1924.

Senator FLETCHER, Florida.

DEAR SIR: I see by the press that you are opposing the Norbeck-Burtness bill. It is time to call a halt on such measures to hurt the real farmer for the benefit of certain individuals. The real farmers in the Northwest don't want such bills to be passed; we want more markets and better markets; then we want to be left alone—all the farmers in the Northwest. I who wanted to do mixed farming for years. In Montana the records will show that we have nearly doubled our milch cows in number in the last two years—nearly every farmer has milch cows to sell and can't sell them—why should we have more livestock men who are producing cattle at a loss; why should they produce more? I have written to Senators WHEELER, LADD, LA FOLLETTE, BROOKHART, Congressman LEAVITT, and others trying to show them that the Coulter bill and other like bills were knocking the farming industry in the Northwest. We don't want gifts for seed grain, livestock, or anything else; we just want markets; then we want to be left alone. You can't loan money to the farmers in the Northwest who would want it, it would be a gift, and the real farmers don't want any more debt; they want to get out of debt. Seed-grain gifts and other gifts to the farmers who are failures only help to put the real farmers in the hole. The real farmers are tired of paying their bills and other people's bills. Somebody has to pay for those gifts in the shape of taxes, and the people all over want to pay less taxes. All the people who don't understand the situation want to get this truth into their heads: The farmers who get seed-grain loans and livestock loans from the county, State, or Nation are the people that the Government can't get anything from. You ask those Congressmen and Senators who want the United States Treasury to be opened to individuals who are failures if they will loan their own money to such people. It is not the failure of crops that is hurting the Nation, it is the unbusinesslike methods that have been pursued to many individuals who are trying to pull off schemes for their own benefit. Some are pulling off such schemes for political effect; some because they expect to benefit by handling Government money; and some because they don't understand the situation. I think that you will agree with me that there is a great lack of sincerity in our Nation. I will give you one example of preaching the benefits of diversifying in the spring of 1919: A bunch of cull dairy cows were shipped into Montana and sold as high as $150 each; that fall and winter the buyers had to buy shipped-in hay from $30 to $50 per ton, and they could not have sold those cows for any price. The dairymen back East got rid of their culls at a big price, the railroads were paid, the banker got a good rake-off, the man who shipped them in got a good rake-off, and the buyers got h——l.

This mixed farming is no new stunt in the Northwest to relieve the wheat situation. By breaking down the price of the farmers' other products is pure bunk; to raise more cattle, milch cows, pigs, and poultry means for the farmer more work and less money. There is land in the Northwest that should never have been homesteaded—that applies to all sections of the country. The best thing those people can do is to go where they can raise something. We have lots of good land where a good farmer can raise crops every year, and such land can be bought as low as $15 per acre. The solution of the whole farming question North, South, and East and West is more markets and better markets. The bill for a wheat-export commission is un-American; we would charge our own countrymen double rates for their bread and give foreigners theirs cheap; that is what we have been blaming the harvester trust for doing with their goods. If I was at Washington I could tell Congress about the true state of affairs in the Northwest, and I repeat it again that the real farmers—the men who want to get out of debt—only want more markets and better markets, then they want to be left alone. If you Senators and Congressmen listen to everyone who has some pet scheme for their own individual benefit, the American dollar will soon be like the German mark. I have been in Montana about 20 years, homesteaded and own a ranch. I know what I am talking about.

Sincerely yours, JAMES C. CRAIG.

BONNIE BRAE FARM,
Buffalo Hart, Ill., March 4, 1924.

Senator FLETCHER,
Washington, D. C.,

DEAR SIR: I want to congratulate you on what you are reported to have said in the Senate yesterday in regard to some of the provisions of the Norbeck-Burtness bill, which should never become a law. Reference to "bolstering busted banks" was timely and good. Loaning Government money to the banks would not help the farmer. By the time it reached him the high rate of interest would soon eat him out of house and home trying to produce crops at less than cost of production. The farmer does not want more debt piled on his already overburdened shoulders, but instead wants a better price for his products so that he can give his family a decent living and keep his property and pay his debts. We believe that the McNary-Haugen bill is the only one so far proposed that would give relief to any large number of the people that actually need relief.

Yours truly,

R. F. CONSTANT.

LINDEN HOTEL,
Salt Lake City, Utah, March 5, 1924.

DEAR SENATOR: The newspapers state that you are trying to head off the Norbeck bill to secure some $75,000,000 out of "Uncle Sam's" treasure box. I hope you will secure a lot of help to head off this graft at the Treasury. I lived up in that country for over 40 years. Most of the farmers after seeding their crop in the spring hang about town watching the trains going through. Every little station where there is two or three grain elevators has a store and a bank. The county tax money is portioned out for the use of these banks. During the Townley administration of North Dakota some 40 banks closed their doors. All public moneys had to be sent to Bismarck; county, township, and city money had to be audited at the "capital." I have seen crops lost by hail, frost, smut, rust, and blight. Fifty cents per bushel was the prevailing price for wheat during the eighties and nineties. If you are going to help the farmer up there out of the muddle he has got into you may as well apply to the Government to spray your orange trees and kill off the snakes in the Everglades or to help the copper men to get the metals out of these mountains.

Head off this "grab" if possible. I am with you and write this to encourage you in your laudable work. The United States Treasury needs a "watch dog."

Sincerely,

R. N. BAUYERR.

ENDERLIN, N. DAK., March 6, 1924.

Hon. SENATOR FLETCHER,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Herewith clippings from the Fargo Forum of the 5th instant, self-explanatory, the most prominent newspaper within the State.

Why loan us more money with which to diversify with these records available?

But we do need relief, and badly, but not in this direction.

Respectfully,

FRED UNDERWOOD.

[From the Fargo Forum, Wednesday evening, March 5, 1924.]

HELPING THE FARMER TO HELP HIMSELF.

In a discussion of the new finance corporation organized for the purpose of aiding business and agriculture in the Northwest, the Farmer, published in St. Paul, says:

> "It seems to us that this organization of a private relief corporation by the bankers and business men of America to rediscount and hold agricultural paper that is already due and doubtful is one of the finest gestures of cooperation with agriculture that we have seen the business interests of America make. As a matter of fact, we would rather trust the reconstruction of agriculture to the wisdom and experience and integrity of a group of big, sound, successful, public-spirited business men, backed by business in general, than to all the politicians in Washington and all their heelers in town and country back home."

The thing that should make the finance corporation a real power in aiding the agricultural Northwest is the very fact that the plan is being operated on a strictly business basis. There is no politics in it. There is no necessity to wait for legislation and permit the program to become a political football. The emergency, which the organization is expected to aid, exists right now and the corporation proposes to help right now.

The farmers, if the Forum understands their desire, do not want more credit, but they are vitally interested in seeing that the credit they already have is not withdrawn.

The finance corporation proposes to aid them in maintaining that credit. As Mr. C. T. Jaffray, chairman of the corporation's board, points out, quick relief will be extended to farmers burdened by delinquent taxes and it will protect worthy farmers against the foreclosure of their mortgages and it will uphold sound banks.

Such a policy will make for greater confidence and will help the farmer to help himself.

THE PROOF OF FARMING CHANGE.

The progress being made by North Dakota in diversified agricultural production was very clearly emphasized by Mr. Joseph M. Devine, Commissioner of Immigration, in an address before the North Dakota Dairymen's Association meeting in Grand Forks.

To quote Mr. Devine:

> "When North Dakota produced only $17,000,000 worth of creamery products in 1919 and $34,000,000 worth in 1923, when North Dakota had but 18,000,000 bushels of corn in 1919 and 30,000,000 bushels in 1923, when North Dakota had but 18,000 acres of sweet clover in 1918 and 370,000 acres in 1923, when poultry production jumped from $3,070,000 in 1918 to $10,000,000 in 1923, we know we are on the way to a bigger, better North Dakota."

These figures are interesting not only in showing the change that is coming in North Dakota but the rapidity with which it is coming. With the movement toward diversification gaining greater impetus in recent months, the increased production of North Dakota farms in diversified crops can be expected to reach new high levels in the years just ahead.

Diversified methods bring a more intensified farming and make for a more profitable farming. And the greater the production per acre the greater becomes the value of North Dakota land.

Mr. FLETCHER. I shall not take up the time in further discussion, because the time is now limited, and there are others who will want to present their views regarding the measure. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Dial	Johnson, Minn.	Ralston
Ashurst	Dill	Jones, N. Mex.	Ransdell
Ball	Edge	Jones, Wash.	Reed, Pa.
Bayard	Edwards	Kendrick	Robinson
Borah	Ernst	King	Sheppard
Brandegee	Ferris	Ladd	Shields
Brookhart	Fess	McKellar	Shipstead
Broussard	Fletcher	McLean	Simmons
Bruce	Frazier	McNary	Stanfield
Bursum	George	Mayfield	Stephens
Cameron	Glass	Moses	Swanson
Capper	Hale	Neely	Trammell
Caraway	Harreld	Norris	Wadsworth
Copeland	Harris	Oddie	Walsh, Mont.
Couzens	Harrison	Pepper	Willis
Curtis	Heflin	Phipps
Dale	Howell	Pittman

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-six Senators having responded to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I wish to submit a few observations upon the measure that is now before the Senate for consideration. As a rule, I do not believe in this sort of legislation. I am of the opinion that it is justified only on the basis of an emergency. I have listened to all the arguments that have been made pro and con and have a good deal of sympathy with the argument of the opposition, but I think every Senator will agree that the situation in the Northwest is of such a character that something ought to be done to relieve it. There certainly is one of two alternatives. One is to permit the natural course which would be largely bankruptcy, and the other to offer some remedy that could not only defer that condition but would probably make it unnecessary.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. FESS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Ohio is quite correct in saying that there is an emergency, an exigency which ought to be taken care of; but the serious question is whether the pending measure will do it or not.

Mr. FESS. I was about to come to that. I am of the opinion that it will at least give some relief to prevent bankruptcy. With the situation of the banking interests in the Northwest and the heavy obligations of the large percentage of farmers, both the owners and the tenants, because the tenants would have encumbrance upon their crops, I am thoroughly convinced that unless something is done bankruptcy is inevitable. While some Members of the Senate think that would be probably the best thing in the long run, I can not bring myself to that attitude of thought.

I made a trip into the Northwest last year in order that I might see the situation at first hand. I had occasion to talk with farmers who were well established. I talked with one man who had three farms. He said to me, "If we were not encumbered with heavy obligations this would be an easy problem with us. We could pay our taxes all right, but taxes are heavy here. We do not have great corporations from which to draw, and therefore the burden of taxation is almost exclusively on the farmer. We must have schools and good roads, and taxes will not be reduced, the taxes will largely be increased, and for that reason this burden is on us, and without an opportunity of good prices for our products there is no possibility of a payment in cash and no possibility of borrowing money and deferring payment." I was convinced as I looked over the situation in both the eastern and western sections of the Northwest that something must be done.

In addition to that, I think all students of economics will agree that the one-crop idea is dangerous.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. FESS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator is quite correct in saying that the question of taxes is one of the oppressive features of the burden which they bear. I do not see Congress doing anything towards relieving the taxes. In about three or four weeks we will be putting somewhere between three and four billion dollars more upon the people of the United States, and anything we may do in handing a little help to the farmers in the country while we are proceeding with that kind of a program will not help them at all.

Mr. FESS. I would say to the Senator with reference to the tax burden, and, of course, he will agree with me, that the heavy burden of the farmer in the way of taxes is State and not Federal.

Mr. BORAH. Yes, of course it is; and the State people say "The source of your difficulty is at Washington. See how they continue to pile up their obligations at Washington." The people at Washington say, "The trouble with your difficulty is back at the State capital. See how they are piling up taxes at the State capital." The fact is, of course, that the relief from the burden of taxation is a double duty. It belongs to the State, but it also belongs to us. We can only deal with that which is here, and if we do our duty here it will be a great relief directly and a great relief indirectly, and may possibly be an encouragement to the people in the States to do their part.

Mr. FESS. I would say to my friend from Idaho that while I appreciate the considerations to which he has referred, and I will join him in carrying out our pledge to reduce taxes upon the part of the Federal Government, there are some obligations that hang over from the World War that probably we can not relieve. That is a question yet to be discussed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. FESS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Ohio spoke about the question of taxation. I hold in my hand the North Dakota Industrial Program, which is compiled and issued by the commission from North Dakota. They boast of the fact that the taxes in North Dakota are less than those in Minnesota, Nebraska, Colorado, Kansas, Wisconsin, and other States. Lest I be inaccurate, let me read from this document.

The per capita State tax in 1919 in North Dakota was only $3.56; in Minnesota, $4.74; in Nebraska, $5.68; in Colorado, $4.85; in South Dakota, $4.90; in Oklahoma, $2.37; in the State of Washington, $6.42. Including the taxes for soldiers' bonus funds in the three States which have provided such funds we get the following result:

Minnesota per capita tax $6.05; Wisconsin, $5.45; North Dakota, $4.49.

I have received reports from North and South Dakota which indicate that taxation in those States is much less than in many other States of the Union.

Mr. FESS. The Senator, I presume, would not mean to indicate that the taxes in the Northwest, including the Dakotas, are not burdensome?

Mr. KING. Yes, I do. I think, if the Senator will pardon me, that the taxes in North Dakota and South Dakota, measured by those in other States, are less. Of course, every tax is a burden; that is what taxes are; they are to get money out of the pockets of the people; and all taxation is burdensome; but it is less burdensome in the Dakotas than in some of the other States of the Union.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, both North and South Dakota are comparatively new States. They must have modern conveniences in education; also in road building; and, whatever be the status of taxation in that section at present it will not be less, but will be increased gradually in the future, as everyone must recognize, at once. The burden of taxation upon the farm is heavier than it is upon other property, even in the sections where there is abundance of other property. For example——

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. FESS. I will do so as soon as I shall have finished the sentence. For example, the percentage of farm tax to income from the farm is much higher than the percentage of the industrial tax to the incomes of the industrialists. Now, I yield to my friend from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does not the Senator conceive that the tariff duties which are levied upon everything which the farmer consumes bear a very material relationship to the prosperity of the farmer? Does he not further understand that if the tariff rates were reduced, and the burden of taxes which the farmer pays on the things which he is compelled to consume diminished, it would operate greatly to the benefit of the farmer?

Mr. FESS. I will say to my friend from Arkansas that a minister whom I once heard said that he never could preach unless he ultimately touched on the subject of baptism, and I have noticed that some of my friends on the other side of the Chamber never can make a speech on taxation that they do not discuss the tariff question.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Ohio can not belittle the issue by a jest like that. The party to which he belongs, by the passage of the Fordney-McCumber law, has imposed an intolerable burden of taxation on the American people; and that burden falls heavily upon the backs of the American farmers. It does not lie in the mouth of the Senator to belittle the importance of the relationship of Federal taxes to the prosperity of the American farmer.

Mr. FESS. It is very evident that when anyone speaks in derogation of anything that certain gentlemen believe in it is an effort to belittle. I am simply mentioning that there are some people who can not avoid discussing the tariff question when we have before us the question of taxation.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio be good enough to yield further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio further yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Why should the subject be avoided? Why should not the issue be met? Why should the Senator from Ohio seek to avoid answering the question which I have asked him?

Mr. FESS. The Senator from Ohio does not seek to avoid the question. The Senator from Ohio will now state to the Senator from Arkansas that under the Underwood tariff law for the last full year of its operation the revenue collected was but $320,000,000, while under the present tariff law last year the revenue was $560,000,000. The difference represents the prosperity of the country under the Republican tariff and depression under the Democratic tariff.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio further yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I presume the Senator from Ohio thinks that he has answered in a statesmanlike manner the question which I asked him as to the relationship of the present tariff law to the prosperity of the American farmers. If he is content with his performance, I assure him that I shall not complain.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. FESS. The Senator from Ohio would like first to state to the Senator from Arkansas that he is quite as content with his performance as he is with the performance of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. Then we are both satisfied.

Mr. FESS. I now yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. EDGE. The Senator from New Jersey merely sought the floor to remark that it is rather marvelous that the American people have been contented, 80 per cent, I think, of the time, to live under a high protective tariff.

Mr. FESS. Not only that but the American people are perfectly content to live under a constructive policy, which gives investment to American capital and employment to American labor at such wages that American standards can be preserved. While that is not very pleasant to certain publicists and theorists, it is perfectly satisfactory to the American people.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I can not decline to yield, although I should like to proceed. I yield to my friend from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to ask the Senator a question in view of his statement as to the revenue received under the present tariff law as compared with the revenue derived under the Underwood tariff law. Of course, the Senator realizes that the balance of trade is a very good index as to the comparative operations of various tariff laws. Can the Senator state what was the balance of trade in our favor during the last year under the present tariff law?

Mr. FESS. The Senator from Ohio has not those figures at hand.

Mr. HARRISON. May I say to the Senator that, including silver and gold bullion which was imported, it was against us to the amount of some $50,000,000; while under the Underwood tariff law we had a balance in our favor in normal times of $3,000,000,000 a year.

Mr. FESS. Well, under Democratic rule our ability to purchase imported goods is not very great, while under Republican rule we can both sell and buy. That has been the history heretofore.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield to me while I put into the RECORD some statistics? As the Senator has been speaking about the lamentable conditions in the Northwest, may I engage his attention for a moment on that subject?

Mr. FESS. I should be very glad to have the Senator bring us back to the discussion of the issue.

Mr. KING. I will do so, and I will not transgress. I have here a report showing the production in South Dakota for the last year. Does the Senator know that the gain was more than $61,000,000, and that on marketings outside the State alone the gain was $33,618,580.30? Does the Senator further know that, instead of there being just one crop last year, 1923, the production of wheat was 32,540,720 bushels; of corn—and I give merely the round numbers—23,000,000 bushels; of oats, 21,000,000 bushels; of barley, 8,000,000 bushels; of rye, 6,000,000 bushels; of flax, 539,000 bushels; of horses, 13,373 head—that is, these were sold outside the State; of cattle, 585,957,667 pounds; of sheep, more than 23,000,000 pounds; and of other products more than $27,500,000? The total marketed outside the State of these farm products was $175,893,929; and the production in the State just in those crops to which I have called attention, amounted to $339,360,000, showing a gain of exports from the State in one year of $61,097,000. If I had time and could intrude further on the Senator—and I shall not do so——

Mr. FESS. From what report is the Senator reading?

Mr. KING. The figures I am reading relate to South Dakota alone, and are taken from the "Progress of South Dakota in 1923," compiled by the department of history of that State—the twenty-third annual review.

Mr. FESS. Is it confined to South Dakota?

Mr. KING. Yes; it is confined to South Dakota, but I also have reports here from North Dakota.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I am glad to have those figures. They demonstrate at least one thing, and that is that a diversity of crops is possible in that section; but it does not indicate that there is as great diversity there as is within the range of possibility.

I have noticed that the experiments conducted by the agricultural college demonstrate the various crops that can be produced in North Dakota. Almost all of the crops produced in Ohio also grow in North Dakota on experimental farms. I visited certain farms, which were said to be more or less exemplars, on which there could be studied the possibilities, and I found on the farms almost all sorts of livestock. I also found that in addition to growing wheat, clover, alfalfa, oats, and corn are cultivated. I found that there was a possibility of a great diversification of crops; but, on the other hand, there was followed for many years the practice of confining farming activities to one crop. That was largely because that section was looked upon as the wheat-growing region of the world. I recall that from my own section in Ohio people went into the Dakotas, which were widely known as great wheat-growing sections, and took up great landed estates and planted them all in wheat. I found that the maximum crop was something like 14 bushels to the acre. After long-continued cultivation of the ground in one crop that yield has been reduced, until, instead of being 14 or 15 bushels to the acre, it has been reduced to 9, and in some places as low as 5 bushels to the acre. I also noted that the ground becomes weedy or "dirty," as we would say on the farm, and that disease is likely to afflict the one crop. As a result what was once a great wheat production has ceased to be such, and it is largely due to the wearing out of the soil.

Many persons may raise the question, Why should we be concerned about that situation? One reason—and I think it is a valid one in the judgment of every Senator—why we should be interested in relieving such a situation is that no one section of the country can suffer without that suffering being largely shared by a considerable portion of the other sections of the country; in other words, we in Ohio ought to be interested in the prosperity of the people of North and South Dakota, Montana, Wyoming, and every section of the country. Not only that, but if possible—and I think it is possible—we ought to relieve the situation where the soil is being worn out, or where it is becoming filthy, and in that way destroying very largely the source of the wealth of that section.

I am thoroughly convinced that there is no doubt about farming in the Northwest becoming greatly diversified. Diversification will at once relieve the surplus, for if they cease to raise wheat and raise other things the surplus crop, which is wheat, will be reduced in its amount, and therefore a little closer relationship will exist between the supply and the demand.

I think everyone must recognize that no section of the country can ever safely be entirely a wheat-raising country. It may safely be a cotton-raising country, but it can not safely be a wheat-raising country, for cotton never will have the great competition throughout the world that wheat will have. Almost every country will raise wheat, and those States of the Union that could raise other crops and avoid wheat will not avoid wheat. My own State will continue to raise wheat, not because we can raise it cheaper than we can buy it but because our system of farming, in the rotation of crops, necessitates the sowing of wheat as a part of the program of general agriculture. Therefore Ohio and all of the States about her which now raise wheat will continue to raise wheat, not primarily to get the product of flour, because they can buy that, but because of the organization of agriculture in our section; so that wheat can never be safely a one-crop product, and any State that goes on that basis must of necessity feel the burden of overcompetition. So the Northwest must get away from the one-crop raising of wheat for that reason if for no other.

Therefore this bill in the assistance of diversification will reduce the surplus. It will do another thing. It will turn the attention of the farmer to supplying himself with food products which heretofore he has been buying, and it will do another thing. It will relieve him of the necessity of transporting heavy, bulky products, and enable him to turn his attention to such things as livestock and livestock products, such as dairy products, where a greater value is compressed into smaller space, and in that way the transportation problem or the heavy freight problem will be largely relieved.

There are a great many reasons why we ought to facilitate to the very limit of our ability this effort to diversify. I think the Government ought to do it, because it was through the Government during the war that these States, that had already started in on diversification, were led back to the sowing of wheat. The facts here tell us that 8,000,000 additional acres of pasture were plowed up for wheat under the stress of the demand for more wheat to produce flour for the soldiers.

So in view, first, of the present situation in the Northwest, direful and serious, and, second, in view of the possibilities of relief which certainly are within our range, and especially the real, substantial value to the country at large resulting from relieving the suffering of that great section of the country, I am going to do what I do not very often do—vote for a measure that can not receive my full adherence on economic grounds. I do believe, however, that it will give us a remedy in this emergency, and for that reason I am not going to hesitate very much about giving it my support.

I say this with full respect for the position taken by such men as the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], who argues the matter purely upon economic grounds. As he knows, I am not an adherent of anything like governmental interference where we can avoid it; but I think the situation here is such that the Government ought to come to the rescue and give these people the assistance necessary to enable them to diversify, to put them in a way on their feet, to help them to be self-supporting, and then leave them to shift for themselves. That is better than bankruptcy, and I am sure the alternative is bankruptcy.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, we have listened to the able address from the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] with interest, though we may not agree with his position. If I correctly interpret the statements made by some Senators during the discussion of the pending measure, then I am compelled to disagree with views submitted by them. Undoubtedly the condition of agriculture in the United States is such as to cause serious concern and to impress upon Congress the necessity of doing everything which is legitimate and proper to aid the farmers of the United States. Even those who evince the liveliest interest in the welfare of agriculture do not arrive at the same conclusion regarding the projects to aid the farmers.

This bill which on its face seems to promise aid to the wheat growers of a certain section of the United States is opposed by many who reside within the section referred to, as well as many who are concededly friends of the farmers and who reside in other parts of our country. There are many things, Mr. President, which legislation can not remedy. Financial depression and economic crises in the United States, as elsewhere, bring forth a multitude of so-called remedies to alleviate conditions and "to help the people." Most of them are unsound economically. Many of them are wholly unconstitutional and a few are temporary palliatives, but seldom are any found which, if put into operation, would bring substantial relief to those in distress.

A number of Senators who have been earnest in seeking to find means to help the farmers are not supporting this bill. One of the leading Senators from the Northwest [Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota] has stated that the farmers need markets for their surplus products and not more credit. It is a fact that not only the farmers but manufacturers and millions of American people in all activities of life are heavily involved in debt. The aggregate indebtedness of the United States—by that I mean the Federal Government, the State governments and all of their political subdivisions, corporations, and private persons—amounts to more than $120,000,000,000. This stupendous sum carries interest charges amounting to perhaps six or seven billion dollars annually. This huge indebtedness is an intolerable burden and a menace to the prosperity of the country. The farmers of the United States are heavily involved; the farms of many are mortgaged, and their credit in some sections is exhausted. Their financial condition is serious, and it is important that every proper step be taken to bring relief to them. I do not believe the farmers of the United States want mere palliative measures; nor do they want paternalistic schemes inaugurated which promise much but in the long run will not only prove disappointing but disadvantageous. The farmers are suffering from the high-tariff exactions to which they are subjected by the terms of the McCumber tariff law. Their export markets have been curtailed by the unwise international policies pursued by the administration.

I repeat that the farmers require wider markets for their products. The bill before us does not reach the situation. It is sectional and partisan, and is a belated measure supposed to aid the present administration in its efforts to win the next election. Undoubtedly some sincere and patriotic men and women have promoted the measure and believe that it will be of some advantage, but there has been too much of the political atmosphere of the White House about it and too much political zeal by persons who have never evinced concern in the welfare of the farmers of the United States.

Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio and others who have spoken in favor of the bill have not shown a familiarity with conditions in the Northwest, particularly in North and South Dakota and Minnesota. Some have confessed the lack of power upon the part of Congress to enact legislation of this kind, and others who say they will vote for it have confessed that it is paternalistic, if not socialistic, and is not to be defended upon economic and sound political considerations. The position of some in defending the bill has impressed me with the thought that they regard the General Government as having unlimited power to deal with questions coming before it, particularly if it could be said that an "emergency" existed. That is the position of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] as I understood his remarks.

Of course, if there is no limitation upon the authority of Congress to deal with what it may believe to be "emergencies," and the Constitution does not define what "emergencies" are, then it is manifest that in the activities of Congress there will be no prohibition upon any measure which it may determine is required to meet an "emergency."

People believe that more laws are required to meet emergencies. Tax bills, tariff measures, appropriation bills, and the vast volume of classified and unclassified bills thrown into the hoppers of legislative bodies are to meet emergencies. So in practice under the Senator's view, whenever a majority in Congress desires to enact a law which is not within the power of Congress to enact, because in contravention of the Constitution, all that Congress needs to do is to declare that it is to meet an "emergency."

The position of the Senator and others who have supported the bill before us is that in a certain section of the United States some banks have failed, the farmers are in debt, and some desire to purchase livestock and perhaps various commodities; therefore a situation is created which constitutes an "emergency," calling for an appropriation by Congress of millions of dollars derived from the taxation of the people to be loaned to the farmers residing within the section referred to.

Of course, such a position can not be sustained by any fair or reasonable construction of the Constitution of the United States. Nor can it be defended in morals or upon any sound, rational basis. The Constitution of the United States can not be frittered away by misinterpretation. There are those who think that it were better to burn the Constitution and deny to it any validity than to pretend devotion to its provisions, while wantonly and brazenly or secretly and covertly defying or ignoring them. Senators often avow their devotion to law and aver that a failure to obey the law breaks down the morals of the people and undermines the foundations of the Government. Can it not be said with more reason that political morality is destroyed and the Government menaced when measures are enacted by Congress which are directly or by implication forbidden by the organic law of the Republic or where no authority for their enactment is granted, and particularly when the passage of such measures is accompanied by declarations that the Constitution is sacred and its preservation is vital for the liberty and welfare of the people?

There is a growing disposition to regard the will of Congress as supreme, notwithstanding constitutional limitations. Even in Great Britain, where there is no written constitution, there are limitations upon Parliament. The statement is sometimes made that Parliament is supreme, but that is not true, as I could show by numerous examples if time permitted.

We should remember that the Constitution was "ordained and established" by the people for the United States of America. They purposely limited the power of the General Government; they foresaw that attempts would be made to centralize power and authority and to deprive the States and the people within the States of inalienable rights. They gave us a written Constitution, the terms of which are not ambiguous, and limit the fields into which the General Government may enter. A former Member of this body, now an honored member of the Supreme Court of the United States [Mr. Justice Sutherland], has stated, that—

> The limitations of the Constitution are not bonds which fetter the people; they are restraints imposed by the people themselves upon the Government which they have created as an instrumentality through which they rule in order that their creature may never forget that it has a creator. * * * To destroy the Constitution would therefore be to destroy this high evidence that ultimate sovereignty remains with the people, that the Government is a mere instrumentality which exists for the sake of the people instead of the people existing for the sake of the Government, and, moreover, as the fathers thought, to open the door of opportunity for stealthy appropriations of power on the part of our governmental agencies which might finally reach dangerous proportions.

Mr. President, the totality of all political power is vested in the National Government or reserved to the States or it is held by the people themselves. There was no grant of power to the Federal Government to tax the people, except for national purposes; and taxes, when laid by the Federal Government, may be used for Federal purposes only. It were well if Congress constantly kept in mind the origin of the Federal Government and the provisions of the Constitution, which we have sworn to support and defend.

There are many things which we might like to do. There are many measures which Congress might desire to enact, but it is important to determine whether the power exists to support such desire or justify such enactment. If the taxing power may be employed for an "emergency" not national, then emergencies will increase, and soon the Federal Government will be called upon to deal with local and domestic questions and to employ the taxing power to satisfy the requests and demands which will emanate from all parts of the land. This will undermine the States and constitute the Federal Government a government of unrestrained and unlimited power.

Mr. President, I am speaking now not particularly with reference to the bill before us, but having in mind what I conceive to be the inevitable results which will flow from the adoption of the views expounded by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] and other Senators who have spoken on this bill.

The Senator from Ohio says that I treat the question under consideration as an "economic" one. He implies that I do not consider the political or social questions involved. Mr. President, the Senator is in error. It is true I regard the legislation as unsound from an economic standpoint. I believe that to exercise the taxing power of the Government for the purpose of obtaining money to loan directly or indirectly to classes of individuals, or to industries, is, generally speaking, economically unsound. Its reactions will be unfortunate and, in substantially all cases, disastrous. But the question must be considered from a political and constitutional standpoint. Many measures are advocated for alleged economic reasons which are in fact political; and political questions may not always be separated from economic policies and their consequences.

As I interpret the position of the Senator and others who are supporting the bill, it is that the vaults of the Treasury are available to any section of the country, large or small, in which it is believed an "emergency" exists. What is an emergency, as I have heretofore indicated, is not defined, nor can it be defined. Does it mean that an emergency exists if the crop of an individual or a county or a State is destroyed? Undoubtedly such a result would prove most serious to the persons affected. If that condition is an emergency which calls for general Federal taxation to repair the losses, or to provide loans to the suffering individual, or distressed inhabitants of a State, then it is clear that emergencies exist daily in various parts of the United States. And if an emergency is created when the farmers of a State lose one or more crops then an emergency exists when an individual loses one or more crops and his credit is impaired or destroyed. It is simply a question of degree.

If Congress can repair the losses of the farmers of the State or open the Treasury vaults to loan money under the conditions above referred to, then it has the right to loan money to each individual whose crop has been destroyed. And if the people may be taxed to loan to one individual for loss of crop, they may be taxed to loan money to all persons in the United States whose crops have been lost. And if it is an emergency for farmers when they have lost their crops, is it not an emergency for the sheepmen and cattlemen who have lost their flocks and herds? In some of the Western States during 1920 and 1921 nearly all mines were closed. In many instances they have not been reopened. Tens of thousands of persons were ruined, and their properties, owing to the fall in the price of metals and the increase in the cost of mining operations, have become and are practically valueless. Many towns and mining camps were practically abandoned, and thousands of families were compelled to seek new homes and new employment.

In Arizona the farmers during the war were appealed to to grow long-staple cotton, which was needed for military as well as other purposes. Many of them plowed up their fields and planted them to cotton. They sold their dairy cows and devoted their capital and their energies to the production of a commodity imperatively required in the prosecution of the war. When the war was over they found themselves with no market, or at least a restricted one, for their cotton. Many were ruined, and thousands were involved in debt, which will rest upon them as an intolerable burden for many years to come.

I know of many cases where men, who were asked by the Government to find manganese ores as well as other metals needed by our country and our allies, borrowed large sums of money, opened up mining claims, and invested all their possessions, as well as large sums which they had borrowed. They lost their investments and are still struggling under the heavy obligations incurred. Many were forced into bankruptcy as a result of their patriotic efforts to aid their country in a great crisis. And in many parts of the United States large numbers of patriotic people engaged in business enterprises for the production of commodities which our country and our allies imperatively required. The sudden termination of the war found them with large investments and heavy obligations. Sheep and cattle men were urged to produce wool to supply clothing and blankets for our soldiers and meat and food products for the military forces of the United States and the allied nations. The sheep and cattle men of the West were caught in the catastrophic decline of prices following the war, and tens of thousands were ruined. I could enumerate a multitude of cases where losses which forced tens of thousands into bankruptcy resulted from conditions developed during and following the war.

The entire country was shaken by "emergencies" which the war and its aftermath created. Property values in most States were reduced, the aggregate being billions of dollars. These losses have been estimated by publicists and financial critics at from seventy-five to a hundred billion dollars. And in many sections of the United States, even yet, the oppressive hand of debt rests upon the people who turn with heavy hearts from the toil and labor of the hour hoping for some light to guide them in their distress, and some hand to relieve them from the oppressive burdens which are still crushing them.

Mr. President, in a sense these are "emergency" cases if the definition of "emergency" given by the proponents of this bill is to be accepted. Perhaps I would be more accurate if I were to say they have given no definition of "emergency," but have stated that, because the farmers of certain sections planted wheat instead of a variety of crops, and thereby lost money, and are now in financial distress, an emergency exists. However, their statements as to conditions must not be taken without qualification, as I shall show later. I repeat, Mr. President, under this applied definition of emergency there is no limit to the emergencies which do and will arise and which will be the basis for appeals for Federal assistance. And if an emergency such as indicated in this bill constitutes ground for direct loans by the Federal Government to the people, then a precedent will have been found to warrant appropriations whenever financial difficulties come to any industry, section, or class.

If mines become unprofitable through a decline in metal prices or from other causes, and the owners and their employees are faced with financial trouble or threatened with financial ruin, then appeals may be made to the Federal Government for relief and for appropriations from the Federal Treasury. If periods of depression and distress come to manufacturing industries, as they have come in the past and will recur in the future, then, if the principle supported by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] is to be applied and the precedent created by this bill if it shall become a law should be invoked, other industries not so stricken would be taxed for the benefit of the manufacturers. And manifestly if owners of the plants suffer and their business is ruined, their employees will be deprived of work and their sufferings will constitute such an emergency as to demand appropriations for their relief from the General Treasury.

In 1921–22 millions of men were out of employment in the United States. They and their families were subjected to trials and extreme hardships; indeed, hunger and want visited the homes of countless numbers, and doubtless many, through malnutrition, exposure, and want, came to untimely ends. Certainly if the interpretation placed by the supporters of this bill on the Constitution of the United States is correct, a grave emergency then existed and millions of dollars should have been appropriated from the Treasury to alleviate their sufferings.

Mr. President, in a country with an area so extensive as that of the United States, with climatic conditions so different and industries so diversified, it is certain that uniform conditions, either of prosperity or adversity, will not always be found. Indeed, they will seldom exist. The industrial activities of the people are subject to great mutations, in part due to our internal and varied conditions, and in part resultant from the vast foreign trade and commerce which our country enjoys. Nations are being brought into closer relations, commercially and economically, and conditions in one continent or hemisphere—indeed, in one country—affect economic and industrial conditions throughout the world.

If our foreign exports are interfered with, either by unwise domestic legislation or by foolish and improvident legislation on the part of other nations, the reactions upon our economic life are immediate. If the people of other countries, because of their dislocated economic conditions, are unable to buy our surplus products, immediately the tide of our prosperity begins to recede. If Europe is unable to purchase American copper, the copper mines close, ruin overtakes those who have large investments in mines and mills and plants, and thousands, and perhaps tens of thousands, of industrious workmen are thrown out of employment. And if our steel exports and our surplus manufactured products find no markets abroad, disaster overtakes these industries in the United States, and the hundreds of thousands, if not millions, dependent upon them for support are brought to penury and want. The farmers likewise suffer when there are inadequate markets for their products, and when disaster comes to the farmers they can not purchase the commodities produced in mills and factories, and hardships are visited upon multitudes of people.

No matter what governmental system prevails there will be political and industrial problems. No economic system which the wisdom of man has ever devised will produce perfect happiness, uninterrupted prosperity, satisfactory economic and industrial conditions, and the highest felicity. Many experiments, political and economic, have been tried to bring about political freedom and social and economic conditions so just and fair as to meet all rational standards. Thousands of years ago oriental monarchs, some of them wise and benevolent despots, established comprehensive paternalistic schemes which embraced all the people and determined their activities. The state was the guardian of all, administering to their wants and ordering their lives. But such a situation produced stagnation, devitalized the people, and ultimately brought destruction upon the government and indescribable woes to the people. It were well to remember the words of Adam Smith:

> A man is generally considered by statesmen and projectors as the materials of a sort of political mechanics. Projectors disturb nature in the course of her operations on human affairs, and it requires no more than to leave her alone and give her fair play in the pursuit of her ends, that she may establish her own designs. * * * Little else is required to carry a state to the highest degree of affluence from the lowest barbarism but peace, easy taxes, and a tolerable administration of justice, all the rest being brought about by the natural course of things.

The fathers of this Republic, with the lessons of history before them, conceived a system of government so perfect in form and so adjusted in all of its relationships as to bring material prosperity and a high degree of liberty and felicity to those living within its borders. Having been subjects of what they conceived to be the oppression of a centralized government, they determined that all sovereignty should rest with the people, and that the General Government should be so limited in its authority as to be prohibited from performing acts or inaugurating policies not authorized by the Constitution.

Even under British authority they had been trained in the art of local self-government and had developed those heroic qualities essential to the enjoyment of liberty. They denied the right of the General Government to impose certain forms of taxation, and in the Constitution they limited the power of the Federal Government to impose taxation for Federal purposes only. They believed, as was stated by Lincoln in his first message to Congress, that—

> To maintain inviolate the rights of the States to order and control, under the Constitution, their own affairs by their own judgment exclusively is essential for the preservation of that balance of power on which our institutions rest.

They perceived the necessity of separating the functions of the States and the Federal Government. To the latter they committed authority to deal with national questions. The States and the people themselves were the reservoir of all other power. In the Constitutional Convention James Wilson, one of the strongest of that mighty group, with his centralizing predilections, appreciated that, even without limitations upon the Federal Government, its functions must be limited, and that the States should have spheres in which to operate and exercise their functions free from interference from the central authority.

The founders of the Republic knew that with the development and growth of the United States new States would be formed and the new Republic would become a dominant force in the world. They saw that a democratic government must be in constant contact with the people; that if too far removed it would fail in its purpose. As Professor Thompson has said:

> It is difficult to see how democracy in government can remain a vital thing unless the individuality and autonomy of local governmental institutions is retained in which people can take an interest, where they can have personal contact with the leaders, and where they can see the actual results of democracy. Without this the demos becomes disinterested, and a democracy with a disinterested demos is probably less fortunate than a despotism with a benevolent despot.

Mr. President, one of the problems of European nations to-day is to decentralize and to meet the growing demands of the people for local self-government and authority to manage and control their domestic affairs. The French people complain of the centralizing forces operating in their country which have drawn to Paris the authority and the power which should rest in local regions and Provinces. The course of the British Empire during the past few years is a lesson in democracy and representative government which may be instructive even to Americans.

The demand has been made by the British dominions for control of their domestic affairs; and Canada, Australia, South Africa, Ireland, and other States of the British Commonwealth have won for themselves the status of independent states, in so far as their local and domestic questions, political and economic, are concerned.

While the people of nearly all the countries of the world are stripping power from central governments and are strengthening regional governments and Provinces and local political subdivisions and thus developing the capacity of the people for self-government we set our faces in the opposite direction and persist in the transference of the power belonging to the people and the States to the Federal Government. The States are becoming atrophied. They are ceasing to function as designed by the Constitution and a powerful federalism is developing which, if unchecked, will inevitably draw to itself the reserved rights of the people and the States and culminate in a centralized government so colossal, so far-reaching, and so omnipotent that it will become despotic or fall by its own weight.

One of the strongest weapons of a tyrant or of a powerful centralized government is that of taxation. Unjust and unwarranted taxes are often laid to extend the functions and the power of despotic rulers or of usurping government. One of the most insidious methods employed to destroy political subdivisions and to concentrate power in a central government is through the taxing system. Intriguing and often subtle and dangerous general officials seek to weaken the faith of the people in their own local governments and in their capacity to control their own domestic affairs. They promise benefits of a material nature and largesses and contributions from the general government and induce the people to contend for the extension of the authority of the central government. Invasions of states and local subdivisions soon result in abandonment of that fine spirit of individualism essential to the preservation of liberty, and abdication of individual and local powers and authority soon follow.

The central government is thus able by its usurped authority to protect its stolen power and to solace the people who have been robbed by dispensing from the central treasury, which the people have been taxed to fill, largesses and bounties and gratuities.

Hamilton insisted in one of his Federalist articles "that the State governments should clearly retain all the rights of sovereignty which they then had and which were not by that act exclusively delegated to the United States." And Madison in one of his powerful statements said:

> The powers delegated to the proposed Constitution of the Federal Government are few and definite. Those which remain in the State governments are numerous and indefinite.

Mr. President, I repeat that there are limitations upon the taxing power of the Federal Government. It may not tax for the purposes indicated in the bill before us. The people of one State may not be taxed to aid industry in another State or to loan moneys to individuals in some other jurisdiction who have met with adversity or who are the victims of economic and industrial depression. The taxing power of the Federal Government is limited to the raising of revenue to meet the expenses of the Federal Government and essential to the exercise of its delegated powers. It may not tax for the purpose of performing the functions of the States or taking over the police powers of the States. This is not a unitary system of government. Nor has Congress the power, in order to secure industrial equality of all persons within the United States or social solidarity, to enact laws aimed to secure such results or to employ the taxing power to promote such end.

This Nation is a "Republic of republics." It is not the sea from which the authority is drawn to control the States or the people, but the people within the States are the springs of life and power.

There are those who would make Washington a kind of "Hegelian harmonization" of all differences and variations existing in the States and among the people of all the States. Professor Freund seems to think that with the attainment of national unity, progress toward a unitary state is inevitable. He evidently bases this view upon historical precedents or analogies and the corroborative evidence found in our Federal legislation and policies.

Mr. President, the struggle now is to prevent the absorption of the States by the Federal Government. The question is not to save the Federal Government, but the problem now is to save the States. The States are the bulwarks against antirepublican movements—against the evil forces which have robbed people of their liberty and destroyed powerful States. When legislation is the result of hysteria or emotionalism, there is grave danger as to its consequences. People of high ideals, of charitable impulses, of that spirit of service so essential in the complexities of our modern life, are easily moved when appeals are made for the relief of the oppressed or those who are in want. It is natural, indeed, it is proper, that such should be the case. But men sworn to uphold and defend the Constitution of the United States may not do as legislators what they would do as individuals, or what they would be willing and perhaps authorized to do if they were serving in the legislatures of their respective States.

A judge is guided by the law. He has, and should have, sympathies and proper human feelings, but the law in its majesty must determine his course. There must be a sure foundation somewhere in our governmental system. There are certitudes and fundamentals in religion, in science, and in political philosophy.

We have a written Constitution and it gives no authority to impose taxes upon the people other than to meet the expenses of the Government, economically administered, and to execute the powers delegated to it. If there are no limitations upon the taxing power, then property rights are of little value. If one may be deprived of his property under the guise of taxation, it is but a short step to socialism and communism. I have heard people say that they would sooner live in a communistic State where the government owned all the property than under a government that was not restricted in the exercise of the taxing power.

Mr. President, it is unpleasant to oppose measures which, it is claimed, seek to benefit one or more classes of people who have sustained losses and are experiencing serious financial difficulties. The natural inclination is to help people in periods of disaster and to lighten the burdens of those who are heavily laden. But, as I have indicated, there are limitations beyond which we may not go as Federal legislators. Precedents established have often proven the overthrow of institutions and governments which ought to have been preserved. I repeat, if Congress can loan money, with or without security, to individuals because they have had financial reverses, then the character of our legislation will take a new form. The relations between the States and the Federal Government will be destroyed. Indeed, the States themselves will be reduced to mere shadows, if they are not extinguished, and the Federal Government will become a huge machine employed to extract taxes from those who have property and distribute them to those who have but little or are empty-handed. And if Congress has the power to buy livestock for those who seek to diversify their agricultural activities, it will be compelled to supply the needs of other classes of our citizens and to assume a guardianship, indeed a paternalism, over all, which inevitably will end in the destruction of our economic and political system.

I know, Mr. President, that it is old-fashioned to advocate an adherence to the Constitution and to challenge attention to the limitations upon the Federal Government. Notwithstanding the historical facts revealing the evils of paternalism and centralized power, and the destructive effects of socialism upon the political and economic life of a people, there is a growing school in the United States which advocates heresies condemned by experience and manifestly at variance with the theory upon which this Republic was founded. It is paradoxical that this school claims its members to be exponents of liberalism, and denounces those who believe in maintaining this Republic, as illiberal, unresponsive to and unsympathetic toward ethical and moral advancement and industrial and political freedom; and yet all history teaches that the policies of this school lead to tyranny and industrial despotism or chaos. I repeat that history and political philosophy alike announce that the greatest progress in all fields of human endeavor is made where personal and property rights are respected, where security under stable laws and governments is obtained, and where the hand of bureaucracy and paternalism does not rest upon the people. Against despotism and bureaucracy and communism the people have struggled, seeking to secure personal rights and free opportunity for development along the lines of their own choosing. Projects for governmental aid and control of individuals and of their lives and activities are oftentimes presented in most alluring form and the people are silenced in their opposition or seduced into ardent support of the same—only to discover when it is too late that they have bartered away precious rights for a mess of pottage, and personal and individual liberty for a corrupting paternalism and a most deadly bureaucracy. It is regrettable that those who advocate the putting of crutches under the arms of everybody find hearty support even among those who profess adherence to the principles of Jefferson and to those democratic institutions established by our fathers.

We must not forget, as Tom Paine says, that "government at its best is a necessary evil, but at its worst it is an intolerable one." The best is that in which there is the greatest personal liberty and the worst and most intolerable one is that of an oppressive paternalism or corrupt bureaucracy. And it may be added as a corollary that all paternalisms and bureaucracies in the end become despotic and corrupt. Those who have been most fanatical in pushing socialistic and centralizing policies have been loudest in proclaiming their devotion to liberty, and they have maintained that it was a manifestation of personal liberty or at least the realization of individual rights and liberty to voluntarily transfer to bureaus and executive agencies authority and power which individuals and the States possess and should exercise.

It is remarkable that people will struggle for centuries to wrest power from tyrannous governments and oppressive bureaucracies only to reconfer the same upon these unsceptered agencies. Mr. John Stuart Blackie has said that the crimes of history may be summed up in the words "abuse of power." The teaching of history is that power is always abused, and yet when people have won liberty they soon forget their struggles and the despotism from which they have been freed and complacently or at least apathetically view insidious efforts by defeated forces to regain authority, and too often they actively participate in movements which inevitably result in the establishment of old and tyrannous conditions from which by their vigor they had been emancipated.

An examination of the centralizing forces in our Government will reveal how far along the path toward paternalism and centralized authority we have gone. The States are losing their importance, and there is a devolution of many of their functions upon the Federal Government. Before Congress now are bills which would increase the authority of the Federal Government and impose tax burdens upon the people of several billions of dollars. Why can we not remember the words of Jefferson when he said that "a single consolidated government would become the most corrupt government on the earth"? And may I again refer to words of this immortal leader:

> Were we directed from Washington when to sow and when to reap, we would soon want bread.

And yet Washington is infested with lobbyists and representatives of hundreds of organizations, many of whom seek legislation which would weaken the States and devitalize the people and augment the powers of the Federal Government. A nation-wide propaganda is carried on by many of these agencies, and methods are employed of cajolery and often of intimidation, for the purpose of forcing through measures which are violative of the spirit and letter of the Constitution and of the theory which underlies our political system.

Mr. President, the bill before us is entitled "A bill to promote a permanent system of self-supporting agriculture in regions adversely affected by the stimulation of wheat production during the war and aggravated by many years of small yields and high production costs of wheat." It was introduced by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] on January 8, 1924, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry on that date. On February 1 it was reported to the Senate by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD]. The report accompanying the bill affords no information respecting the measure and gives no reason why it should become law. The title of the bill, as well as its provisions, show that it is sectional and discriminatory. It is of local character only. It carries an appropriation of $50,000,000, which the Secretary of Agriculture shall advance to farmers in what is called the wheat-growing district, where it is alleged the one-crop system prevails.

The Secretary is authorized to buy dairy products, cattle, hogs, sheep, and poultry, and supply the same at cost to farmers within this region. The loans may be made for five years, and a lien shall be taken upon the chickens, hogs, and cattle purchased by the Secretary of Agriculture or purchased by the farmers with the money advanced to them.

How this lien is to be enforced no satisfactory explanation has been given. It is rather perplexing to determine just how the Government will be protected when it is understood that the money is to be advanced or the cattle, livestock, chickens, hogs, and so forth, are to be supplied by the Government to persons who are without credit and whose properties are now subject to mortgages and other forms of indebtedness, and it is likewise difficult to understand how the liens upon chickens and hogs and calves can be enforced.

The execution of this measure means the establishment of a tremendous Federal organization. Thousands of Federal employees will be necessary to enforce its terms and supervise its administration. The condition of all the farms within the section of the country where the loans are made will have to be ascertained. Agencies will have to be set up for the buying of cattle and all forms of livestock; lawyers will be needed to examine titles, prepare mortgages, and so forth; a multitude of agencies will be needed to look after the domestic animals and farm products bought and delivered to the farmers and to execute partial releases of the liens in order that chickens and calves and pigs may be disposed of. Indeed, an extensive organization must be set up at an enormous cost to the Government and to the taxpayers of the United States.

No valid reason has been given why the War Finance Corporation, which is still functioning and has nearly $40,000,000 of Federal moneys under its control, was not selected as the instrumentality to carry out the provisions of this bill. Senators are familiar with the fact that this corporation was organized during the war to aid enterprises which were engaged in supplying to the Government and the Allies munitions, foodstuffs, and other articles imperatively required in the prosecution of the war. By an amendment to the act creating the corporation its life was extended, its functions enlarged, and loans authorized to livestock and agricultural interests.

The officers of this organization became well acquainted with the conditions of agriculture and with the situation of the farmers in the Dakotas and surrounding States. If the Federal Government is to make loans, or buy livestock for the farmers of a certain section, then prudence would dictate that an organization now functioning should be selected for such purpose. But we are caught in the maelstrom of bureaucracy and we must create more bureaus and Federal agencies and develop new units and organizations within existing departments.

The sectionalism of this bill is obvious, as I have said. It is not intended to provide for farmers and agriculturalists in other sections of the country, or to loan money to millions of people in the United States who are greatly in need of the same. However, an amendment has been proposed, because of the manifest sectionalism of the bill, which it is hoped by the proponents of the measure will dull the sharp edge of legitimate and proper criticism. This amendment provides that $25,000,000 shall be appropriated "for carrying out the purposes of this act in respect of other areas"; $50,000,000, therefore, are to go to the Dakotas and a section of Montana, and possibly a limited area within the States of Minnesota, and Wyoming; and $25,000,000 are to be distributed elsewhere. This provision is a palpable sop to secure support for the bill.

Mr. President, for weeks we have heard about the conditions of the Dakotas. The Republican leaders have been exceedingly alarmed lest the Dakotas should drift into a third-party movement. If the facts could be obtained, I feel sure it would be discovered that certain Republican bankers of Minnesota and North Dakota had inspired the bill, or at least were largely instrumental in originating it and in working up sentiment in its behalf. I have learned from sources which I regard as reliable that political factors have been important in the promotion of this measure, and that certain bankers have sedulously labored to secure its passage.

There are farmers in North Dakota who are opposing this bill, and some have written to Senators voicing their opposition to its passage. The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] has placed a few letters in the RECORD; they show that no conditions exist warranting this measure, even if Congress had the authority to make the appropriation called for and to set up the machinery provided in the bill under discussion.

Mr. President, the facts will show that South Dakota and Minnesota are in a prosperous condition. To urge the passage of this bill in order to give relief to these States it would appear is an act of insincerity if not audacity. I have figures before me which show that there has been a rather large increase both in population and in wealth in these States during the last five years. Later I shall deal with North Dakota and show its condition.

I feel sure, Mr. President, that many sections of the United States do not exhibit as favorable balance sheets as those presented by Minnesota and South Dakota. Their wealth has increased, their bank deposits have multiplied, and in all fields of endeavor they have exhibited satisfactory progress. Of course, during the past four or five years many parts of the United States have been affected seriously by unfavorable economic conditions. In some of the Western States there has been great financial depression. In my own State I am informed that nearly 40 per cent of the farms were sold last year for taxes. Agriculture there has suffered, and nearly all branches of industry have been in a precarious situation. I stated a few minutes ago that in the West most of the mines, following the war, were closed down. In mining States this was a disaster the seriousness of which can not be appreciated by those living in other sections of the country. For a number of years there have been droughts and blights and pests which have destroyed the crops of perhaps millions of agriculturists in various parts of the United States.

In many sections of the South the boll weevil has destroyed the cotton crop in extensive areas, and many districts have been so stricken that poverty and distress have brought the people to the verge of despair. This bill does not propose relief for these sections or for many industries which have been sorely afflicted. Senators will remember that a few years ago many—perhaps a majority—of the cotton growers of the South were brought to bankruptcy. The price of cotton was as low as 4 and 5 cents a pound, as I now recall.

The distress among the cotton growers can not be exaggerated. Congress made no provision for them, and they had to patiently and heroically work out their own destiny. Many industries and sections of our country have been ruined in the past and many will come to grief in the future. The Government is not a guarantor of prosperity nor can it insure labor and industry that profits will be made. There are those, however, who would have the Government control business, direct industry, and assume a guardianship over all the people.

Mr. President, there is no real need for this ill-advised legislation. It has been stated by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] that his State has been exporting large quantities of dairy products, not only to surrounding States but to some beyond the Pacific. Minnesota has produced millions of bushels of wheat and enormous quantities of farm products, and has also exported from its borders livestock and dairy products. The same is true of South Dakota and Montana, and even North Dakota during 1923 has shown increased production and gives evidence of a revival in all lines of business, including agriculture.

In 1920 the farm population of South Dakota was 362,221. The census shows, and it is conceded that it underestimated, that for the same year there were in South Dakota 803,415 horses, 15,727 mules, 2,368,398 cattle, nearly 2,000,000 swine, and nearly 1,000,000 sheep. There were, of course, many chickens and various other kinds of livestock. This would mean that there were more than 2 horses for every man, woman, and child in South Dakota, approximately 8 head of cattle for every person on the farms, also 6 pigs and 2 sheep.

An article which appears under date of March 1 in the Christian Science Monitor is illuminating with respect to conditions in South Dakota. It says that the talk of bankruptcy is a myth, and the writer claims that the chambers of commerce, boards of trade, Rotary clubs, and various other organizations, including farm bureaus, have united to see that the State is set right before the people of other States, in view of depression caused by bank failures in some parts of the State.

Mr. President, I ask that the Secretary read the article.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the article, as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows from the Christian Science Monitor for March 1, 1924:

STATE'S RESOURCES EVIDENCE STABILITY—SOUTH DAKOTA PRODUCTION PROVES "BANKRUPTCY" A MYTH—EXPERTS SEE NORMAL IN NEAR FUTURE.

[Chambers of commerce, commercial clubs, Rotary clubs, Kiwanis clubs, farm bureaus, and other organizations of business men and farmers in South Dakota have united to set that State right before the people of other States in view of the impression created by bank failures in Sioux Falls and other cities. This story sets forth the resources of South Dakota, shows its great production, and proves that the State is far from bankruptcy.]

SIOUX FALLS, S. Dak., March 1 (Special).—Some years ago the question "What's the matter with Kansas?" attracted national attention. Recently many persons of States other than South Dakota, in view of several bank failures in Sioux Falls and other cities, have been asking much the same question about South Dakota. But the fact is that there is nothing the matter with South Dakota, and the State is far from "bankruptcy."

With deposits of more than $140,000,000 in the State and national banks of South Dakota, and with unsold crops valued at tens of millions of dollars yet on the farms of the State, South Dakota speedily will reach a normal condition. For 12 or 15 years the State has produced more new wealth per capita in the form of crops, livestock, gold, and other minerals than any other State in the Union. With a population of only 650,000 it has more than held its own with States having populations of 2,000,000 and upward.

The nine principal railways operating in South Dakota report annually to the State department of history on the grain and livestock which their lines haul from South Dakota to markets in other States. The latest available figures, those for 1922, show that during that year wheat, corn, oats, barley, rye, flax, horses, cattle, hogs, sheep, and other produce brought the farmers of the State an aggregate sum of $175,893,929.30.

GAINS IN PRODUCTION.

The production for 1923, as compiled in the final reports of the United States Department of Agriculture, was 6.22 per cent greater than in 1922. It appears fair to assume that the marketing will be greater this year; but using the same figures, it shows that South Dakota farmers, on the average, sold outside of the State's borders and brought into South Dakota $2,345 each. In addition, the farmers fed all town dwellers as well as their own families.

The marketing of the 1922 crop was $33,018,500 greater than the preceding year. It was only a comparatively few years ago that the average income per farm in the United States was about $450. So in production the farmers of South Dakota were able to make a gain in one season over the recent entire average income.

The production of grain in South Dakota for 1923 amounted to 438 bushels for every person in the State, town and country alike. This would make seven big wagonloads of 62 bushels of grain for every resident of South Dakota, including the Sioux Indians on the various Indian reservations.

South Dakota many years ago used to be termed a purely wheat-raising State, but the farmers during recent years have been extending to other branches of farming. To-day those other branches, such as dairying, are bringing to the farmers incomes throughout the year, mostly at times when they have no income from their grain crops.

DAIRYING INDUSTRY.

Trains each day in the farming districts are loaded with cans of cream which they pick up at every little station, it being nothing uncommon for farmers of a limited district adjacent to a village on the railroad to receive each month many thousands of dollars in the aggregate for cream marketed by them. A report recently made by A. P. Ryger, secretary of the South Dakota Dairy Association, shows that the value of South Dakota dairy products for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, was $29,693,053.

Creamery production alone during the last 10 years shows an increase of 99.8 per cent. For the fiscal year farmers sold to creameries, both in and out of South Dakota, a total of 103,872,550 pounds of cream, an increase of 7.7 per cent over the previous year.

The total amount of butter manufactured in South Dakota during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, was 41,842,371 pounds. Of this total, only 13 per cent was consumed in South Dakota, the remainder being sold in markets outside the State for more than $12,000,000.

The total value of the butter manufactured in South Dakota during the fiscal year stated was $16,585,822. The dairy butter sold by farmers during the fiscal year represented another $2,149,680. The milk and cream used in households was valued at $7,923,712. Milk, skim milk, and buttermilk used for feed had a value of $2,185,839.

Although South Dakota stands thirty-seventh in population among the States, it stands seventh in number of cattle, close to seventh in number of hogs, twenty-second in number of milch cows, eleventh in number of horses, eleventh in the value of all farm property, which reaches $2,823,870,000. Only six States were listed to exceed 3,000,000 hogs; South Dakota had 3,029,000 in December, 1923.

South Dakota has become one of the great corn-growing States of the Union, having produced 145,176,000 bushels in 1923, which on December 1, 1923, was worth $75,492,000.

In 1923 the total agricultural production of South Dakota was $374,325,493.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have examined recent statistics obtained from the Department of Agriculture, reports from State officials of South Dakota, and have obtained information from other sources, and I state, without any fear of successful contradiction, that the article just read quite accurately shows the business and agricultural conditions in South Dakota. When the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] was speaking I called his attention to the fact that in 1923 South Dakota exported products of the value of nearly $200,000,000. This fact alone conclusively negatives the contention that South Dakota is so impoverished that contributions from the Federal Treasury must be made to her inhabitants. The article just read states that the production for 1923, as compiled by the Department of Agriculture, shows 6.22 per cent increase in agricultural products over 1922, and that the farmers of South Dakota, on the average, sold outside of the State borders and brought into South Dakota $2,345 each. And it must be remembered that their crops fed the cities and industrial centers of the State.

The writer also refers to the increase in the dairy industry, and states that trains each day carry the dairy products from the farms to the cities. I invite Senators' attention to the fact that for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, the dairy products alone amounted to more than $29,000,000, and that creamery products show an increase in 10 years of nearly 100 per cent.

When Senators contend that this bill is to develop the district which has only one crop, namely, wheat, I challenge their attention to the statement just read that South Dakota is one of the great corn-growing States of the Union and produced in 1923 a corn crop of the value of more than $75,000,000. And when the facts show that for the year 1923 the agricultural production of the State was more than $374,000,000, one would suppose that Senators would not have the temerity to rise here and proclaim that this splendid and progressive American Commonwealth is unable to survive the present economic crisis and is chained to the rock of despair.

Mr. President, I know something of the people of South Dakota, as well as those in the region for which this bill is designed. No finer citizens and no more stalwart and vigorous people can be found in the United States. Many of them came from Germany and the Scandinavian countries. They brought with them fine bodies and stout hearts, courage, and initiative. They have not been afraid to try new experiments. This is particularly true in North Dakota. Some of their experiments were a failure and some of their policies were not wisely conceived nor properly executed. But, nevertheless, they are people of whom all Americans can be proud, and they possess those qualities in a preeminent degree which are needed to develop the resources of this country and to give to it that dominating position, materially and morally, which it should maintain among the nations of the earth.

I called the attention of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS], when he was speaking, to a report showing the condition of South Dakota at the close of 1923. This report is a review of the State by the department of history of South Dakota. It shows that the assessed valuation of the property for 1923 was $1,997,127,560, and the State taxes aggregated $3,458,000. The report further shows that a large sum was appropriated by the State legislature for the promotion of agriculture, and that the State had, from time to time, exercised its plenary powers in behalf of agriculture, and had incurred obligations amounting to $44,000,000 to extend rural credits. May I add, what is apparent to all, that the State may do what the Federal Government may not do? It is within the power of the States to extend relief to their citizens. Of course State constitutions may contain prohibitions against paternalistic activities, and may have such provisions with respect to uniformity of taxes and the purpose to which revenues may be devoted as to prevent loans to agriculture or to any other industry or to any class of citizens.

The police powers of the States are broad, and the people of the various States may write into their State constitutions such provisions, liberal or restrictive, as they may determine to be wise and proper. And South Dakota, as I have stated, has incurred an indebtedness of $44,000,000 to aid the agriculturists of that State.

Continuing, the report just read states that in 1923 there were 405 new corporations organized, and foreign corporations licensed to enter the State numbered 44. There were 11 new banks chartered, and the number of automobile licenses for the year ending December 26, 1923, was 121,149. The number of trucks licensed was 10,554, and 786 dealers were licensed to sell automobiles and trucks. I was not able to obtain definite figures as to the number of automobiles and trucks upon the farms of the State. In 1920, however, the farmers owned one-half of the trucks and automobiles, the other half being owned by residents of the towns and cities. It is known that many farmers reside within the towns and cities, and it is reasonable to suppose that a portion of the number credited to the cities, as a matter of fact, are owned by farmers.

South Dakota devoted $4,089,000 to education in 1923 and $2,639,000 to the construction and improvement of highways. Eight hundred and fifty thousand dollars were paid to soldiers under the compensation or bonus act passed by the State. After paying all State operating expenses and providing for a sinking fund, at the end of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, there was a balance in the treasury of $5,637,000. An examination of the financial report of the State for the year shows that the State government is not only solvent but is in an excellent condition. The total deposits in the State and National banks as of June 30, 1923, amounted to $233,804,000, an increase of more than $14,000,000 over the year 1922. Under the head of "Farm statistics," the report from which I have quoted states that the total number of farms amounted to 76,000, with a farm acreage of 23,043,000. This report shows a great diversification of crops. One hundred and ninety thousand acres were devoted to silage corn, 4,076,000 acres to field corn, 2,133,000 acres to oats, 828,000 acres to barley, 336,000 acres to rye, 70,000 acres to winter wheat, and 2,708,000 acres to spring wheat, 102,000 acres to spelt, a considerable acreage to the raising of alfalfa seed, 254,000 acres to flax, 31,600 acres to millet, 75,000 acres to potatoes, 2,113,000 acres to hay, 3,147,000 acres to pasturage, and several thousand acres to buckwheat and sugar beets and field beans.

My investigations show that there was also a large area devoted to other crops, including vegetables of various kinds, and thousands of acres were used for the grazing of cattle. Upon the farms there were more than 441,000 dairy cows. The spring calves numbered 446,000, and the spring colts more than 28,000. The number of spring hogs was nearly 300,000, and the spring lambs 262,000; and there were marketed outside the State during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, more than $175,000,000 worth of farm products. Of this amount, more than fifty millions were received from the sale of hogs, and more than $32,000,000 from the sale of cattle.

More than $13,000,000 were the receipts from corn sold, and $32,000,000 were obtained from the sale of wheat. I am advised that during the last six months of 1923 the sales of all kinds of agricultural and livestock products were very great, so that the products of the State for the calendar year 1923 were greatly in excess of the calendar year 1922. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, the grain and livestock marketed outside the State exceeded in value $33,000,000 over the sales for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922.

The figures of the Federal Department of Agriculture show the value of the products of agriculture and livestock for 1923 to have been more than $339,000,000, a gain of more than $61,000,000 over 1922. The individual deposits of all banks in the State reported in June of last year to the Comptroller of the Currency amounted to more than $214,000,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOSES in the chair). The hour of 3 o'clock having arrived, under the unanimous-consent agreement previously entered into, no Senator may now speak more than once nor longer than 10 minutes upon the bill or any amendment which may be offered thereto.

Mr. KING. As I understand, I have 10 minutes more to speak upon the bill, and also 10 minutes to speak upon any amendment pending.

To continue, I might add that Minnesota's deposits for the same period exceeded $855,000,000, and Montana's deposits were more than $133,000,000. The deposits in Kansas amounted to $390,000,000, and in Nebraska, $396,000,000. Idaho's deposits were only $69,000,000 and Oregon only $255,000,000. Colorado, which is reputed to be a rich State, had deposits of but $276,000,000, and the State of Washington, with its large fisheries and marine interests, and mines and lumber interests, had individual deposits of but $348,000,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. KING. Just for a question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. I wish to inform the Senator that the author of this bill, Senator NORBECK, is from South Dakota, and he stated recently in the committee that the bill has nothing to do with his State, or only a small portion of it, he added afterwards. So I do not think it is of much use for the Senator from Utah to mention South Dakota.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not consume too much of my time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. I am not going to speak any longer. I merely wanted to correct the Senator in that one respect, if the Senator will allow another second. The northwestern part of the State of Minnesota, the States of North Dakota and Montana, and a small portion of South Dakota are affected.

Mr. KING. I am glad to receive this information from the Senator, because the facts which I have presented clearly place South Dakota outside the spirit and letter of the bill. However, South Dakota has been held up as one of the terrible examples of distress and hardship, resulting from the growing of only wheat; and the condition of the agriculturists of South Dakota has been urged as one of the reasons for the passage of this bill. All speakers, so far as I now recall, who have advocated this bill have referred to the Dakotas, or the "Northwestern States," as the beneficiaries of this bill, and have given the impression to the Senate that South Dakota was in great distress and required this proposed legislation.

This is the first intimation that I have received that Minnesota—that magnificent State, with its great wealth, with its progressive and stalwart population, typified by the Senator from Minnesota—was in such distress and was so helpless that its representatives must come and ask relief from the taxpayers of the United States through contributions from the Federal Treasury. The Senator from Minnesota, as I understand him, now becomes the Aaron for the Moses of South Dakota, Mr. NORBECK, and, speaking for the latter, avows that this bill is not needed by the people of South Dakota. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS], however, claimed to speak with knowledge. He stated that he had visited the Northwest and, as I understood him, was giving us the result of his personal observations, and he declared to us with very great earnestness that the conditions there were terrible and that this bill must be passed.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, does the Senator yield?

I now yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. My remarks were specifically directed to North Dakota, the only State in which I was present last year, and I did not mean to include South Dakota. On the other hand, I have read the statements made in the hearings with reference to South Dakota giving the facts which the Senator is now giving to the Senate.

Mr. KING. I am glad that the Senator has corrected the impression which Senators, I am sure, obtained from his remarks. I know that I did not understand from his speech that he was limiting his appeals for relief to North Dakota. May I add, Mr. President, that the wheat production in South Dakota for 1923 was $24,488,000, whereas the aggregate value of the agriculture and livestock products was more than $339,000,000? I repeat that Senators who have advocated this bill have left the impression with those who listened to them that the farmers of South Dakota and North Dakota and the regions that were to receive loans under this bill had been raising wheat only, and that their distress grew out of the fact that they were producing but one crop per year. I am glad that the facts are coming out. South Dakota is now to be excluded; but no avowal, so far as I recall, has come from Senators that the provisions of this bill would not relate to South Dakota until facts were presented upon the floor of the Senate showing reasonable prosperity and satisfactory progress in that State and the great diversity of agricultural and livestock interests of the people.

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. GOODING. I merely wish to say to the Senator from Utah that the bill does not apply to all of the State of North Dakota. Very prominent citizens, one at least, appeared before the committee and said it would be of no benefit to some parts of North Dakota and therefore opposed the bill.

Mr. KING. If this debate is continued a little longer, I think it will be shown that the bill will be of benefit to no section, and we may get down to but one county that will seek relief under it and possibly one precinct. It is possible, indeed quite likely, that if a microscope were employed, we would find that there is not any spot in North Dakota that calls for this legislation.

Mr. President, I will now invite attention to conditions in North Dakota. According to the census of 1920, there were 77,690 farms in that State, with an assessed valuation of $1,759,742,995. The census of the United States for 1920 reports that upon 72,021 farms there were 1,334,552 cattle of the value of $68,000,000. It is generally conceded that the census returns do not show the full number of domestic animals owned by the people. The same census also reports various other kinds of livestock, as follows:

Horses	874,722
Mules	8,306
Swine	464,100
Sheep	301,076

There are also goats and other domestic animals within the State. These figures would indicate that for each person—men, women, and children—upon the farms of North Dakota there were four head of cattle.

Comparative data for a number of counties of North Dakota as of January 1, 1920, reveal that the average acreage per farm was between 408 and 627, and the average improved acreage per farm was from 237 in Morton County to 436 in Foster County. Within the counties referred to, upon each farm there were from 7 to 15 beef cattle, 6 to 10 dairy cows, 5 to 8 swine, and 43 to 70 chickens. I might add that in a number of reporting counties from Montana the average acreage per farm in such counties was 480 minimum and 652 maximum, and upon these reporting farms the minimum number of beef cattle was 6 and the maximum 21. The number of dairy cows ranged between a minimum of 1 and a maximum of 6.

The Industrial Commission of North Dakota, on May 1, 1920, issued a report which has some interesting information concerning that State. The present junior Senator [Mr. FRAZIER] was then governor of the State and chairman of the commission. Reference is made in the report to the extensive scientific investigations carried on by the State's agricultural college and the Federal experts connected with the same. This work, the report states, "has been going on for a generation and has been carried to the homes of the State by extension workers, the press, and political discussion in repeated political campaigns." An agricultural and State program was based upon this information and the experience of the people. The report shows that the movement began as far back as 1911 to diversify farming and to build up "a prosperous livestock, dairy, and poultry industry."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOSES in the chair). The time of the Senator from Utah for the discussion of the bill has expired.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have 10 minutes to discuss the pending amendment.

Reference is also made to the amendment to the State constitution authorizing the State to acquire grain elevators, and to operate the same, and to engage in other enterprises, important, as it was believed by the people, to their industrial and economic welfare. A State bank was organized and the State organizations more thoroughly coordinated. Bonds were issued by the State to support State industries and finance farm loans. The report states that up to May 15 the loans to farmers amounted to $2,507,450, "and the bank expects to increase this amount to $3,600,000 within the next few weeks." Provision was made by law, enacted in 1919, in order to encourage and promote agriculture, commerce, and industry, that the State should engage in the business of manufacturing and marketing farm products, and should establish warehouses, elevators, flour mills, factories, plants, machinery, and equipments under the name of the North Dakota Mill Elevator Association.

An elaborate system of State aid was provided, as shown by the report of the industrial commission just referred to. This report reveals North Dakota in a prosperous state and upon the high road to agricultural prosperity and important economic development. The budget exhibited in the report presents a very fair showing, and by comparison with some other States reveals that North Dakota occupies an advantageous position. The report states that "though Minnesota has less than three times the population of North Dakota its total taxes for all purposes were $109,000,000 as against $29,000,000 in North Dakota." The total of all property taxes for general State purposes in North Dakota was shown to be $3,742,000, and in Minnesota $14,514,000. The total of all State taxes for general purposes in North Dakota for that year was $5,250,000, whereas in Minnesota it was $27,000,000.

The report also states that on the basis of population the per capita of all State taxes in North Dakota was $6.20 and $11.40 in Minnesota. It is stated that "all general taxes levied on farm land amount to $86 per average quarter section in North Dakota and $188 in Minnesota. Notwithstanding the levy for the soldiers' bonus, which the State of North Dakota provided for and to carry out its policy to support new State industries, the per capita expenditures were but $4.30, whereas in Minnesota they were $9.80.

The report refers to the wise plan which the State had adopted of not only constructing public buildings and buildings for State institutions, but also maintaining and keeping them in proper condition out of the general appropriations covered by tax revenues for each biennial period. The report shows that in comparison with Montana and other States the taxes and the State expenditures are less per capita in North Dakota. For instance, in Montana the State taxes amount to $6.37 per capita as against $6.20 in North Dakota. In a table presented it is shown that the State taxes in North Dakota for 1919 were but $2,914,166, and that the per capita State tax was but $3.56. In Minnesota the per capita State tax for the same year was $4.74; in Nebraska, $5.68; Colorado, $4.85; South Dakota, $4.90; Washington, $6.42. The per capita tax, however, for the States of Kansas, Oklahoma, and Wisconsin was less than in any of the other States mentioned. But the report shows that if these States had made provisions for their returned soldiers equal to that of North Dakota, their per capita tax would have been as great as, or greater than, that of North Dakota.

Reference is made in the report to the dairy association law, enacted in 1919, which provides for the issuance of county bonds for the purchase of dairy cows to be sold to farmers, and for the organization of dairy associations for the purchase of such animals and for farm improvements and for the guaranteeing of the loans made.

The legislature of 1919 enacted a law under which county commissioners of the various counties may issue bonds for the purpose of making loans to farmers "who had serious crop losses for the purchase of feed and seed."

The seventeenth biennial report of the commissioner of agriculture and labor, submitted to the Governor of North Dakota, for the term ending June 30, 1922, contains valuable information concerning the agricultural conditions of North Dakota. Among other things, it states that "there has been a practical development of dairy cattle, beef cattle, poultry, and a larger acreage of cultivated crops, such as potatoes, corn, and so forth. Many more acres have been reduced to pastures and hay meadows. This has naturally reduced our large wheat acreage." Reference is made to the fact that the spring rye shows a marked increase in 1922 over 1921, and that the area of land seeded to flax in 1922 was an increase of 22 per cent over 1921. The report also shows that in 1920 there were harvested 7,502,238 acres of wheat, 602,000 acres of flax, 1,969,000 acres of oats, 944,425 acres of barley, 735,000 acres of rye, 85,000 acres of spelt, and 588,000 acres of corn for fodder and husked. It also shows a large production of butter, cream, eggs, wool, and various other kinds of agricultural crops and livestock products.

The report of the dairy commissioner for the same year states that dairying has become an important industry in North Dakota and "is now an approved activity." Reference is also made to the "herd improvement, the introduction of purebred foundation herds, and of better and more economical dairy methods." This report indicates that assistance has been given by the State to the farmers to aid in stimulating the dairy industry. An act was passed in 1919 providing for the issuing of bonds or warrants by the various counties for the purpose of purchasing cattle to be sold to farmers. The dairying industry has made substantial gains, the report stating that for the year ending June 30, 1922, the butterfat increase was more than 30 per cent over the year 1921.

The contention has been made during the debate on this bill that, owing to representations made by the Government, the wheat area of North Dakota had been greatly increased over preceding years. From the investigations which I have made, Mr. President, the increase in the acreage devoted to wheat was not greater in proportion to the entire acreage than can be found in other States in the Mississippi Valley and in other parts of the Union. And the facts do not warrant the statements that North Dakota was a one-crop State prior to the war. The census shows that as early as 1909 there were 185,000 acres devoted to corn, 2,147,000 to the production of oats, 8,188,000 to wheat, 1,215,000 to barley, 48,000 to rye, 1,068,000 to flaxseed, 2,864,000 to hay and forage, 54,000 to potatoes, and large areas were utilized in the production of various other kinds of agricultural crops. In 1919, which was after the war and at the peak production of wheat, the acreage devoted to corn was 191,000; oats, 2,073,000; wheat, 9,098,000; barley, 1,085,000; rye, 2,422,000; flaxseed, 649,000; hay and forage, 4,035,000; potatoes, 82,000. Of the important crops, as early as 1909, the per cent of improved land devoted to the production of wheat was 40 per cent, and in 1919 it was only 37 per cent. These figures effectually dispose of the contention that North Dakota is but a one-crop State, and that the people of that State abandoned diversified crop production and concentrated upon the growing of wheat.

On December 31, 1923, the national banks of North Dakota had deposits of more than $70,000,000. If the same basis of deposits existed as in South Dakota, the total deposits in State and National banks would be—March 1, 1924—approximately $150,000,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOSES in the chair). The time of the Senator from Utah has expired.

During the delivery of Mr. KING's speech,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOSES in the chair). The hour of 3 o'clock having arrived, under the unanimous-consent agreement previously entered into no Senator may now speak more than once nor longer than 10 minutes upon the bill or any amendment that may be offered thereto.

After the conclusion of Mr. KING's speech,

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in this instance I have great sympathy with the viewpoint of the Senator from Utah, as I usually have. There is much in the reasoning upon which his argument is based. I wish, however, briefly to go over what I said the other day in a more definite and concrete way.

When the hearings on this bill began I was opposed to it, mainly on the grounds which the Senator from Utah has so ably set forth. In my opinion, it was shown beyond a doubt before the Committee on Agriculture by those who will get relief under this bill if it shall become a law that their condition—and such a condition will have to be proved in order to enable them to get relief—was brought about by the action of the Government itself.

Now, let me refer again to the chart which hangs on the wall. The chart was made to apply particularly to North Dakota, but it applies to all the States that are affected. The people, realizing that they were to a great extent one-crop producers and that the yield of wheat, which constituted that one crop, was less per acre every year, and realizing that for their own sake they must diversify, commenced the campaign of diversification in 1911. They tried to induce the farmers generally to sow less wheat and to raise hogs and produce corn. This is the result: From 1911, when there were a little over 9,000,000 acres in wheat, they reduced the wheat acreage until at the beginning of 1917, when we went into the war, it was a little less than 7,000,000. The production of hogs started way down here [indicating] and went up in about the same ratio as the production of wheat went down. Cattle raising went up, corn growing went up, the number of milk cows went up.

Then we entered the war and there came the cry of the Government to raise more wheat. We all know what that propaganda was. It went all over the country, and in the Wheat Belt wherever the farmer went he was met with the plea to produce more wheat in order to help win the war. The result was that the farmers again commenced to raise wheat almost exclusively; they devoted their energy to that one crop, not because they wanted to do so but because they wanted to help win the war. So while they had reduced the wheat acreage from this point [indicating on chart] to 7,000,000 acres, the wheat acreage went up again to the point at which it was in 1911, when they commenced to diversify, and over 9,000,000 acres were sown to wheat. The production of hogs correspondingly went down as the production of wheat went up; the production of corn went down; the number of milch cows held their own; the production of other cattle went down until 1919.

Mr. President, they believed when for patriotic reasons they commenced to produce an increased yield of wheat that at the end of the war they could resume their diversification plan again, but neither the farmers nor the Government knew what the condition was going to be. What was the condition when they had produced the wheat and the war was won and they again wanted to diversify? They found it practically impossible. The banks would not loan money; there was not any place to get money with which to buy hogs, with which to buy cattle, and again to start upon the program of diversification.

The Senator from Utah has called attention to the number of dairy farms in the State of North Dakota. In my judgment, that does not mean anything. The man who is already supplied with dairy cattle can not get a dollar under this bill by its very terms. The man who is already diversifying can not get anything. It can only apply to those who find themselves by reason of their action in responding to the Government's cry unable to get anything with which to diversify.

There are localities in North Dakota, in South Dakota, in Montana, and in parts of Minnesota where the farmer could not borrow a dollar from a bank though he had the wealth of Rockefeller. That is the excuse——

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield in just a moment. In my judgment that is the excuse, and it is the only excuse, for this bill. The Government owes it to these men. They have done what they have done because they were importuned to do it.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to say just a word in regard to the amendments to the bill. The amendment which adds $25,000,000 ought, in my judgment, to be defeated, and all other amendments making the provisions of the bill apply to other localities and other conditions ought to be defeated, because none of them are based upon the very object, the very peg, in my opinion, on which the justification for this bill itself hangs. If I have any time left, I now yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, I merely wished to ask the Senator if he recalled the fact—and it is a matter of record—that in the section to which it is intended to bring relief about 382 banks have closed their doors?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; and that reminds me, let me say, that by the terms of the bill the man who can borrow money at a bank, if there is any way for him to get it, is denied relief under the bill. It only applies to those who have been put in their present predicament by the action of the Government. These men responded from patriotic motives, Mr. President; their wheat was limited in price and during most of the war period when they increased their production of wheat they lost money on every bushel produced. That was not true on all farms and in all years, but it was true that during some years nearly everybody lost, and in some years a greater and some years a smaller number. They derived no financial benefit. The price at which they could sell their wheat was fixed by the Government of the United States, and that price was limited away below the market price.

I wish to call attention again to the fact that the Government through the instrumentality of the wheat corporation in buying wheat made a profit of between $60,000,000 and $70,000,000. That all came out of the farmers who produced wheat, but not a dollar of it was paid back to any of them, and there is no way for them to get any of it. More profit was made by that corporation in dealing in the wheat of these men than this bill appropriates, unless there be included in the calculation the various amendments that are proposed.

I shall probably not address the Senate again on this subject, but when I spoke against the amendments, Mr. President, I did not mean to say that there is no merit in the amendments, but it is not right, in my judgment, to tack on to this bill provisions that can not come within the stipulations of the bill and the restrictions which are put around it by legislative regulations that will prevent anybody from getting money under it who can not comply with the conditions which I have outlined.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield if he has the time?

Mr. NORRIS. If I have the time, I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I want to ask the Senator to enlighten me on one matter. Does the Senator object to that portion of the committee amendment which is found commencing in line 22 on page 5?

Mr. NORRIS. I have not a copy of the bill before me.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is the portion which provides a further sum of $25,000,000.

Mr. NORRIS. I object to that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That was adopted in the committee.

Mr. NORRIS. That was adopted by the committee, but I think that is entirely out of line with the theory of this bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator desire to restore the original print of the bill?

Mr. NORRIS. There are other amendments, of course, which the committee adopted that I favor. The other amendments are, in my judgment, proper.

Mr. WADSWORTH. How about section 4 on page 6?

Mr. NORRIS. Let me look at that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That concerns the "livestock loan fund."

Mr. NORRIS. I think that is all right. Is it an amendment to which the Senator refers?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is printed to make it appear as an amendment. It begins on page 6, line 6.

Mr. NORRIS. That is not a part of the $25,000,000 amendment, is it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not know. I suppose it applies to the entire bill.

Mr. WALSH of Montana and Mr. HARRISON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It merely provides that amounts collected upon these loans shall be paid into a fund, which becomes a revolving fund until 1926.

Mr. NORRIS. I think that kind of a provision is all right.

Mr. HARRISON. That has nothing to do with the $25,000,000 increase.

Mr. NORRIS. Then, in my judgment, it is all right. The object of the committee, Mr. President, was so to shape this bill as to carry out its objects as outlined in section 1.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I do not want to occupy my 10 minutes at this time. I merely wish to make an inquiry. The pending amendment is the Harris amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment is the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. HARRISON. That does not pertain to the other portions of the bill. I want to talk on an amendment that I have, and on the committee amendment. I do not desire to do so until after this amendment is out of the way. It seems to me, since the discussion is touching the body of the legislation and not the amendment that is pending, that we ought to get this amendment out of the way and vote on it.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I admit that the wheat growers of the West are in great distress, and I sympathize with them; but they are in no greater distress than the cotton growers of the South. In fact, the troubles of the southern farmer started in 1914, at the outbreak of the World War, when he received as low as 5 cents per pound for his cotton because it could not be exported, and the wheat grower at the same time received high prices for his grain at the beginning of the war.

I do not remind Senators in an unkind spirit that only two Senators, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], from the entire West and East, responded to the appeal of southern Senators in 1914 for help in the acute cotton situation. I am anxious to help the western farmers, but their Representatives should show some interest in helping the southern farmers. President Coolidge, in his recent message to the Congress urging legislation for agricultural relief, devoted his appeal to the western farmers, and had nothing to offer for the southern farmers.

When, two years ago, Senators from the New England States with huge manufacturing enterprises urged high tariff rates that reduced competition, and taxed nearly everything to help monopolies, they did not say anything about the Government not helping manufacturers. By their attitude then they said it was all right to put a tariff on everything the farmer buys, and make higher the cost of living, for the manufacturer would be helped; but when the farmers need help, Senators from the protected manufacturing States cry out against it.

As the pending bill is aimed to help only the northwestern wheat growers, I want to call to the attention of the Senators from the New England manufacturing States the fact that they will not be able to get cotton for their mills unless the cotton farmer can make a living by producing cotton, for if it sold for a dollar a pound and the boll weevil destroyed the crop the farmer could not make a living. Great Britain to-day is putting a tax on manufactured cotton, and the revenue is being used to encourage cotton production in her colonies. The amount is steadily increasing.

I want to say to the Senators from the West that unless the southern cotton farmer can control the boll weevil and lower the cost of production, the world will look toward China, India, Egypt, Australia, and other foreign places for the supply now raised in the South; and if the southern cotton farmer can not raise cotton at a profit he is going to raise his own wheat instead of buying it from the western grower, as he does to-day.

I am willing to help every section of the country, as Senators know my record since I entered the Senate, for if one section is prosperous it helps other section. A prosperous South means that money is spent in the manufacturing East and the grain-growing West.

Mr. President, the cotton produced in the South brings prosperity to this country more than any other crop. The short-staple cotton raised in the South gets no protection from the tariff, as there is no cotton of that kind imported into this country. The cotton shipped out of this country brings gold back to us, and helps in creating the gold reserve with a balance in our favor. Without cotton there would not be half the present gold reserve in the United States.

The manufacturer is protected against competition and assisted in creating a monopoly which forces us to pay higher prices for everything we wear, and this goes into the pocket of the manufacturer. The cotton farmer must compete with the pauper labor of the world, and gets no protection.

My amendment would help the farmers in securing cheaper nitrate of soda to stimulate their crops and cheaper calcium arsenate to kill the cotton boll weevil. Both are absolutely necessary in the production of cotton now. My amendment carries a plan which has been tried before by the Department of Agriculture with successful results. It will not cost the Government one cent. Every pound of nitrate of soda and calcium arsenate will be paid for in cash in advance by the farmer, and it will enable the farmer to buy at a lower prices these articles which are absolutely necessary if the farmer makes a profit.

I shall continue my efforts to aid the agricultural situation in the West whenever necessary, but it is only fair that western Senators join in our efforts to help southern farmers more than in the past.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Has the Senator modified his amendment in any way? Does it still provide for an appropriation of $10,000,000, or did the Senator reduce it to $5,000,000?

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD] asked if I would agree to reduce it to $5,000,000 instead of $10,000,000. I really believe that $5,000,000 will be sufficient. I do not believe we would have to use any of it, and for that reason I will agree to an amendment that the Senator from North Dakota expects to offer reducing it to $5,000,000, though I should much prefer the $10,000,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I shall endeavor not to indulge in repetition too elaborately on this occasion, because I spoke on this question the other day. I want to say just a word about both these products, nitrates and calcium arsenate.

There are used in this country for fertilizing purposes between 250,000 and 300,000 tons of nitrates annually. There are now in this country, or on board ship on the way here, or contracted for by importers, 375,000 tons—125,000, or at least 100,000 tons more than can be used in one year. The price of Chilean nitrates delivered at United States ports is about $2.52 a hundred. That is only approximately 10 cents higher than the price of the same product in 1914. So there is no scarcity of the material, and there is no gouging as to price. It can be said with absolute accuracy that of all the materials used by agriculture, nitrates have gone up less in price than any other material. As I say, there is no scarcity, and there is no gouging as to price.

The Senator from Georgia mentioned the fact, or asserted—because it is not a fact—that this business is controlled by a monopoly.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. HARRIS. I stated, and that I think is a fact—I think the Federal Trade Commission's investigation will show it to be a fact—that half the production is controlled by a monopoly. That was the statement I made. I did not say the whole production was in the hands of a monopoly. I do not claim that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. My most recent information is to the effect that the Federal Trade Commission found that the fertilizer business generally was not a monopoly; so therefore we have no evil of that kind to meet.

Mr. HARRIS. But they said, as I recall, that about half of the production is controlled by certain companies which work in harmony. I will state to the Senator from New York that there is not any difference in the price of fertilizers in the South. They all agree on the price. They have the same price upon the same kind of material.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The price being fixed in Chile itself by the Chileans, it is almost an impossibility for there to be any variation in price as among American concerns assembling the product and putting it on the American market. The freight rates are practically the same for every concern importing nitrates.

The handling charges are practically the same for every concern. Warehouse charges are ordinarily about alike as between one port and another. As a matter of fact, the distribution of nitrates in the United States, coming as they do from Chile, is done at as close a figure as is the case with any other product; and in many cases fertilizer manufactured into commercial form is being sold to-day at a loss. There is no great profit in the business, and one of the greatest chemical fertilizer concerns in the world went into the hands of a receiver only last week—the Virginia-Carolina Co.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have only 10 minutes, and I beg to be excused.

So there is no scarcity. There is no gouging. The Federal Trade Commission itself, as I understand, says that the business as a whole is not in the hands of a monopoly; but if this bill goes through with this amendment on it which authorizes the appropriation of $10,000,000 to put the Government into the business of buying nitrates in Chile and bringing them to the United States, how many private importers will stay in the business? The entire program of the importation of nitrates will be dislocated, and the Government will have to go in when private individuals go out.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can not be interrupted. I beg the Senator to desist.

Since the business is now done upon such a close margin and there is such a large surplus on the way or in American warehouses to-day, what private importer will continue importing if the Government, financed by $10,000,000 of the resources of the people, enters the field, or even threatens to enter the field?

Now about the other article: I have here the report of a committee known as the standing committee on arsenic. That committee was headed by Dr. B. R. Coad, who was in charge of the southern field crop insect investigations at the Delta Laboratory of the United States Department of Agriculture, at Tallulah, La. Doctor Coad is the discoverer and developer of the calcium arsenate treatment of the boll weevil. It is due to his research that this method of combating the boll weevil by poison has been successful. On December 7, 1922, this committee reported in New York at an open meeting of white arsenic producers, calcium arsenate manufacturers, and representative users of calcium arsenate. In the course of his report Doctor Coad emphasized that the question was one purely of supply and demand, and stated that attempts to interfere with this natural law would be more likely to do harm than good.

During the fall of 1922 and the early months of 1923 a severe shortage of white arsenic and a consequent shortage of calcium arsenate appeared imminent. It was a new remedy; it was a new article in the agricultural regions of the South, or anywhere else, for that matter; at least for that purpose; and instantly there was set up an immense demand for it, and the price increased 300 per cent, as was inevitable. Already, however, there has been a tremendous response to that demand, and for the season of 1924 there are no indications, so this report says, of a short supply of either white arsenic or calcium arsenate.

The chemical manufacturers have responded to this demand; and why should they not? It is a new market for them, and if we only let it alone and do not inject the Government into the business of purchasing and distributing white arsenic, or calcium arsenate, the cotton farmers of the South will be taken care of in normal fashion, and we will not commit the Government to another great paternalistic effort, a practice which bids fair to turn the people of this country, if carried on in this way year after year, into a people dependent in character. Bill after bill is introduced here to extract money from the Federal Treasury and appropriate it for purposes which were never contemplated under the Constitution, but always to help some people.

Mr. President, we are encouraging this habit of looking toward Washington for everything. How many States of the South, for example, are offering the cotton farmers of the South to go and purchase nitrates for them, or calcium arsenate, or white arsenic? If people would do these things in their own communities and through the governments over which they have direct control, I think there would be instant complaint, because then the people would see the results more emphatically and more directly in their own experience. But this coming to Washington for everything is becoming a national habit, which, if allowed to go on unchecked, will ultimately change the character of our institutions, and, in so far as its economic purpose is concerned, it will do more harm than good.

I hope the Senate will not vote to commit the Government to a $10,000,000 expenditure on this account.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I rise merely for the purpose of calling attention to the actual facts. I want to refer to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in regard to the matter about which I was about to ask the Senator from New York, because he made a certain statement with regard to the price of this nitrate. I am not informed as to that matter. It would seem, though, as if there is a very decided conflict between the statements made by the Senator from New York and the statement made by Representative STEVENSON in the House on the 8th of this month. I presume I am permitted to refer to what takes place in that body sufficiently to quote from the Representative from South Carolina. He was speaking of his own experience, his own negotiations, his own transactions, and he said:

> I have contracted to pay and I will pay—if I can borrow the money—within the next few weeks, $51 a ton for 12 per cent nitrate——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, that corresponds exactly with the price I fixed. I quoted the price per hundred pounds. I said $2.52 a hundred pounds. I overstated it, apparently, under Mr. STEVENSON'S own experience.

Mr. FLETCHER. Let me finish this quotation from Mr. STEVENSON. He stated:

> I have contracted to pay and I will pay—if I can borrow the money—within the next few weeks, $51 a ton for 12 per cent nitrate to use on cotton this year—$51 at the ports. That is 12 per cent nitrate. Multiply that by 8 and it would be a little over $400 if we got fixed nitrates such as are provided for without the filler. There were 2,600,000 acres of cotton in South Carolina last year. Last year the average of nitrates was 200 pounds to the acre, or an average of 10 acres to a ton of nitrates. In other words, 260,000 tons last year cost the farmers of South Carolina at that price—and a great many of them had to pay more, as some of it was higher last year—$1,560,000. If this process is put into effect it will cost them just about half that, and that will be a clear saving to the people of South Carolina.

That is as to South Carolina alone. I thought at the time it was somewhat different from the statement made by the Senator from New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS], the Chair understanding that the Senator from Georgia has modified his amendment by changing the figures "$10,000,000" in line 1 of page 2 to "$5,000,000." The question is upon agreeing to the amendment as modified.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Edge	Ladd	Robinson
Ball	Edwards	Lodge	Sheppard
Bayard	Fletcher	McKellar	Shipstead
Brandegee	Frazier	McLean	Simmons
Brookhart	George	McNary	Spencer
Bruce	Gooding	Moses	Stanfield
Bursum	Hale	Neely	Stephens
Cameron	Harris	Norris	Trammell
Capper	Harrison	Oddie	Wadsworth
Caraway	Heflin	Pepper	Walsh, Mont.
Couzens	Howell	Phipps	Warren
Curtis	Johnson, Minn.	Pittman	Watson
Dale	Jones, N. Mex.	Ralston	Weller
Dial	Jones, Wash.	Ransdell	Willis
Dill	Kendrick	Reed, Mo.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-nine Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, the other day, when we were discussing this bill, I showed that several of the Northwestern States which owed the Government for money advanced for purposes similar to this had not paid back all the debts. In fact, some of those States have paid back only 55 per cent of the amount that was loaned them.

Since that time I have looked a little deeper into the matter, and I find that $40,000 has been appropriated by the Treasury Department, to be used in collecting those bad debts. So Congress not only loaned out money upon doubtful security, but they are taking money out of the Treasury to try to collect those bad loans. That ought to be a sufficient warning to us to stop this experimental legislation.

The Senator from Ohio spoke about the soil wearing out. That is not peculiar to these States alone. The same condition obtains all over the United States, and even, I might say, all over the world, where people continually plant one crop. The soil of the South is badly depleted for the same reason. We do not have to go to the wheat States alone. That is a matter which ought to be corrected by the farmers themselves. It is beyond the Government's control. It is the result of something for which the Government is not responsible. We are asked to take the taxpayers' money to try to rehabilitate agriculture in that section of the country; but would it not be more equitable to take a general survey of agriculture in the United States and apply the money equitably to all the States in the Union? I do not even advocate that, but there would be some semblance of fairness to it, some excuse for doing this unconstitutional thing, this revolutionary thing, I might say.

Any man who ever had a weeks' experience in lending money, or taking paper on an agricultural product, or upon cattle or other stock, dealing in these kind of securities, would know that this is an unwieldly measure, an impractical method, and the most expensive way of getting help to the farmer.

Mr. President, this bill proposes for the farmer to mortgage his cow and his pig to the Government. Suppose his cow were to go dry, and he wanted to get one that was giving milk. He would have to send to Washington, or would have to come here—they have so much red tape in governmental matters—and stay here perhaps about a week, and be directed from one department of the Agricultural Department to another, before he could get that dry cow released from the mortgage so he could exchange her for one that was giving milk. I believe it is said there are 45 departments in the Agricultural Department, in 27 different buildings.

I have been here a good while myself, and I frankly confess that I have not been able to visit all those departments yet. So the farmer would come here wanting to trade for a milch cow, and he would have a very tedious time. How would he ever get rid of a kicking mule or a balky horse? Not only that, but if his wife were to receive a note from her sister-in-law or from her uncle that one or the other would spend a week end with her the next week, she would not be allowed to kill a pig or butcher a sheep to provide entertainment for her relative. She would have to communicate with some of these distinguished western Senators to get them to intercede and plead with a department of the Government to allow them to select one of the fattest shotes they had in the lot and to send out a release under oath permitting them to slaughter that pig; otherwise the fellow would be prosecuted and sent to the penitentiary for disposing of property under a mortgage.

Mr. President, that is not overdrawn. If you mean to lend this money out and take the security, as sorry as it is, the owner of it would not be allowed to dispose of the property without consent of the mortgagee, as we all know. I fear the United States courts would be crowded with prosecutions.

If you do not intend to collect the debt, why are you not manly enough to donate the money?

I yield to no one in my respect for and interest in the farmer, but Congress should quit deceiving him, and we should aid him to get a better price for what he produces. In all the circumstances he has the sympathy of all correct-thinking people.

In order to obtain that consent the process would be unwieldy and expensive and tedious and troublesome. It does seem to me that we ought to be men enough with more experience than to want to go into any such entangling alliance on the farm. Some of you did not want any entangling alliance with some other nations. This would be more entangling than that.

When people visit on the farm they usually get something to eat. I heard of a man visiting a friend in the city, and he was invited out to dinner. He told his friend afterwards that he had never seen so much fine linen and never heard so much chinaware and silverware rattle in his life, but when they brought the rations around they were mostly crackers. When you come into the country we slaughter a sheep or a pig or a turkey and give you something real to eat. Now they are going to take away this right from the country people, and I protest, because there is no place in the world where you get more wholesome food than you do on the farm.

State rights? Where have they gone? Why, Mr. President, Thomas Jefferson would turn over in his grave and repudiate every man here claiming to be a Democrat if he knew they entertained any such doctrine as this. It is time to call a halt. I trust Senators will not embroil our Government in the ill will of the people by passing any such proposition as this. I have a bill pending, introduced just last Monday, proposing to make the Alien Property Custodian fund a revolving fund with which we can get rid of our surplus agricultural products to Germany, Austria, and Hungary. That bill has the approval of the Alien Property Custodian and I believe it is sound. If we would enact it into law it would take the place of the pending bill and of the McNary bill which is to follow. I sympathize with our people in wanting to get higher prices for their agricultural products. We have too much surplus wheat, too much surplus cotton, too much surplus tobacco, but under the provisions of the bill which I have just introduced we would help to build up trade of the farmers with those countries and we would get rid of the surplus agricultural products of this country and avoid the necessity for passing the bill now before us, which will come back to haunt us as long as we are Members of this body and as long as our successors are Members.

So much for the bill. There is no use to split hairs and talk about this benefiting the northwestern farmer, it is simply a political move—there is no use to blink about it. If the Congress wants to buy electoral votes this is one way to do it. If you feel it is an honest way to spend the taxpayers' money, you have the right by force to do it, but you have neither the moral right nor the legal right to appropriate money for the purpose of controlling elections.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I have as much sympathy with the farmer in his distress as do others. Many of the farmers in my State are suffering from conditions which are familiar to us all. But I can not reconcile my conscience to taking the money that is gathered from all the people of the United States and appropriating that money to the use and benefit of a few of a particular class of people. The farmers of the United States are suffering very much in common. The men who invested their money in livestock found themselves when the market broke confronted by bankruptcy. Not all of them, but those who were not very sound financially, suffered that fate. Bank after bank in the Middle West was compelled to go into liquidation because it held large amounts of what is known as cattle paper. Those men who thus lost their fortunes in the Middle West and in the great West have our sympathy and are just as much entitled to governmental largess as the man who happens to be raising wheat.

The bill is limited to wheat growers in the wheat section, but there are wheat growers in other sections of the country in great numbers who depend upon their wheat crop for their profits or their living. They have suffered just as have those wheat growers who live in a portion of the country where more wheat is raised and less of other things, but they are equally entitled to governmental bounty. The cotton planter in the South has been afflicted with the cotton pest known as the boll weevil, and there is widespread suffering throughout the Southern States from this cause which can not be charged to mere improvidence nor to a lack of good judgment simply because this particular affliction has been visited upon those people. Thousands of business houses, particularly of the smaller sort, were wrecked by the changing financial conditions which resulted after the war. So we could extend the illustration almost indefinitely.

If we are going to take a part of the people of the United States who are suffering from failure of crops and try to expend a large part of the taxpayers' money in inducing those people to vary the form of their industry, why should we not make the bill general in its terms? Why not take care of the cattle men, the sheep men, the hog men, the small merchant men, the wheat farmer of the East and of the Central West who lives in a country where they raise other things than wheat but in which country he may be raising only wheat?

Where will this end? What right have we under the Constitution of the United States to take the money of one man or of all the people and appropriate it to the use and benefit of a few of the people? As has been said here by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL], if he will permit me to quote him with approval, since the action of his legislature—or shall I rather say a few imbeciles in his legislature—having the power to dispose of this matter we may exercise that power brutally, but, Mr. President, the power to do a thing does not always mean the right to do that thing. Any one of us has the power to throttle a baby, but we have no right to do it. If the bill is to be passed, why not buy fertilizer? If the bill is to be passed, why not take an inventory of the farmers of the United States in their assets and liabilities, and wherever a man is hard up give him some Government money and then levy some more taxes to get some more money, and then pay out some more money and levy some more taxes and start a circle as vicious as was started in Germany when they began issuing printing-press money and paying debts and then issuing more printing-press money and more printing-press money until at last they brought the industries of Germany to a state of paralysis and reduced her finances to chaos.

No man likes to make the kind of a speech I am making. Everyone would like to take somebody else's dollars and hand them out liberally to all the people who need them. That is the easiest task any man ever undertook. What right have we——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator allotted to speak upon the bill has expired. The Senator has 10 minutes upon the pending amendment.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I had forgotten that we are under a time limit or I would have concluded before this. What right have we to take the money that comes from all the people, I repeat, and use it in this manner? I distinguish very clearly between a situation where it is proposed to promote a different kind of agriculture by loaning money, and a bill which might be passed, and the constitutionality of which might even be questioned, to appropriate money to relieve against actual starvation or suffering in the face of some great flood or great disaster, where that which we do is done as an act of charity. Even there I say there is a question whether we have the right to take a dollar from the Federal Treasury and so use it. But as long as we have kept within very narrow limits nobody has complained.

This, however, is a different proposition. It is a proposition to go into a wheat-producing section of the country and to finance a new style of agriculture there. Mr. President, it will fail. We can never build up a sound economic condition by a scheme of this sort. The money will be absorbed and gone; it will all have to be paid back. We shall do no substantial good to these people. The only way any business can prosper, whether it be farming or anything else, is to be put upon a sound basis; and the only sound basis of which I know is one which contains the element of the personal risk and personal energy of the individual who is to profit or to lose by the enterprise.

There is one thing which we can do to help the farmers, and some of the Senators who are willing to vote away this money are responsible for the condition which can be remedied. They have put a tax upon everything that is shipped into this country; they have helped the trusts, the combinations, the large and powerful manufacturers of the United States to maintain an artificial price upon everything which the farmer has to buy. They have done that by the passage of a positive statute forbidding the farmer, who must sell his surplus in Europe on a depressed market, to bring back a single thing from that continent purchased on the same market level at which he must sell his surplus. That tax in its essence is unconstitutional, and if its real purpose were written in its face it would be so declared. It is carried along under the pretext that it is a revenue measure; but strike that out and write its real purpose in the face of the bill, namely, that it is proposed to increase the price of goods so that American manufacturers can make a larger profit, and the tax, in my judgment, would be declared unconstitutional by any court.

Those favoring a high protective tariff have fastened that tax on the farmer. They compel him to buy in a market that was already largely controlled by great combinations and powerful institutions and then they deny him the benefit of any possible competition from abroad. Thus they force him to buy in the highest market in the world, artificially elevated by a law they have passed, while he must sell his surplus in a broken market. Then they propose to make that up to him by taking the taxes from all the rest of the people, carrying them over and giving them to a small proportion of the farming population of the United States, and the other farmers in other sections of the United States, engaged in a different class of farming business, must pay that tax and send their money into these particularly favored portions.

Mr. President, I can not support a bill of that kind. I will support any sound measure that is brought in here which will give some relief to the farmer. The best thing to do is to give him a cheaper market in which to buy; and the best way to do that is to take down the wall which has been built, back of which every trust, combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade robs and plunders the farmer on everything he has to consume which he does not raise on his own farm.

Mr. RALSTON. Mr. President, I wish to speak just a few words on the pending bill. I concur heartily in nearly everything that has been said on this side of the Chamber in opposition to this proposed legislation; I confess that it runs counter to my political convictions; but, Mr. President, I am a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and I heard much of the evidence which was produced before that committee on this measure. That evidence showed the condition of the farmers which this proposed measure seeks to relieve to be most deplorable; and their condition was brought about by a patriotic effort on their part to serve this Government in time of war.

The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] observed that if this sort of legislation is indorsed by this body it will be only a short time until all interests in this country will be coming to Washington to seek relief from the public Treasury. Mr. President, I have heard it said in years gone by that certain interests have come to this Capitol to secure proposed legislation and have been permitted to insert in the pending bill the rate of per cent of protection which they desired; and yet, as I understand, the distinguished Senator from New York has never opposed that kind of legislation.

I am opposed to blocs, Mr. President, of all kinds, but if we are by our legislation to favor oil blocs and steel blocs I shall not hesitate, under proper conditions, to favor a farmer bloc, for in the absence of the success of the farmer the entire country will go upon the rocks. Once we destroy the farmer, we destroy the very basis of civilization and prosperity in this country. We can not live without the farming industry.

I think I have an appreciation of the constitutional objection to this proposed legislation. I do not know whether or not Thomas Jefferson would turn over in his grave if he were asked to favor this legislation. I know, however, that he butted the Constitution out of the way when he wanted Louisiana, and he "got by" with it, and we are all proud that we have Louisiana. I say I think I appreciate the objection that can be soundly made to this character of legislation from a constitutional viewpoint; but, Mr. President, I think the Constitution should have the same application in the Dakotas, in Minnesota, or anywhere in the great Northwest that it has in New Mexico; and but a few days ago this body, without a record vote, voted to loan a million dollars to help the farmers of New Mexico to buy seed. That is all we propose to do in this bill—that is, to make the farmers included in this bill a loan. Some of the money doubtless will be lost, but, in my judgment, most of it will be returned to the Government.

I am, therefore, Mr. President, proposing to vote for this measure, not because it conforms to my notion of legislation, generally speaking, but I am going to do it on the ground of humanity.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I am sorry that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] saw fit to refer to the Legislature of South Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina will permit the Chair to observe that he has already occupied 10 minutes in the debate. The Chair assumes the Senator was then speaking upon the bill.

Mr. DIAL. I am now speaking on the amendment, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina is entitled to speak once, and for not more than 10 minutes, on the amendment.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I was about to say that I was sorry the senior Senator from Missouri saw fit to refer to the Legislature of South Carolina. I feel that his remarks were out of place, unnecessary, and uncalled for here, and were purely gratuitous. The Legislature of South Carolina is composed of able, honorable, and upright men.

Mr. President, speaking now further on the amendment of my good friend the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS], I desire to say that if the amendment shall be adopted I trust the Government will buy the nitrates for the people of the United States who are purchasing nitrates and ship them in here for the purpose of supplying the farmer. I hope the nitrates will be bought without loss to anyone and to the benefit of the original consumer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] as modified, which will be read.

The amendment as modified was read, as follows:

Add at the end of the bill a new section, as follows:

"That the President is authorized and directed to procure, or aid in procuring, such stocks of nitrate of soda and calcium arsenate as he may determine to be necessary and find available for increasing agricultural production until June 30, 1926, and to dispose of the same at the total cost to the Government, payable in advance. For carrying out the purposes of this act there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, available immediately and until expended, the sum of $5,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, and the President is authorized to make such regulations and to use such means and agencies of the Government as in his discretion he may deem best. The proceeds arising from the disposition of the nitrate of soda and calcium arsenate shall go into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts: Provided, That the sum herein appropriated and the proceeds arising from the disposition of the nitrate of soda and calcium arsenate may be used, at the discretion of the President, until June 30, 1926, as a revolving fund for the purposes herein named."

Mr. HARRIS. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GREENE], and will vote. I vote "nay."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (when Mr. MOSES's name was called). The present occupant of the chair has a general pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD]. In his absence the present occupant of the chair withholds his vote.

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). May I inquire if the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. HARREL] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have a general pair with that Senator. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERRIS] and will vote. I vote "yea."

While I am on my feet, I wish to say that my colleague [Mr. OVERMAN] is absent on account of illness. He has a pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. If my colleague were present and at liberty to vote he would vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]. He is absent, and I therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WADSWORTH (after having voted in the negative). I forgot to announce that on the various amendments and on the bill itself I am paired with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS], but on this particular amendment the junior Senator from Ohio and I would vote alike were he present. Therefore I am at liberty to vote, and will let my vote in the negative stand.

Mr. DIAL. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SMITH] is detained from the Senate on account of illness in his family. He is paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING].

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I have a general pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD]. I find that I can transfer that pair to the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. I do so, and vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]; and

The junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. ERNST] with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY].

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 34, as follows:

YEAS—28.

Brookhart	Frazier	Jones, Wash.	Ralston
Bursum	George	Kendrick	Ransdell
Cameron	Harris	Ladd	Sheppard
Capper	Harrison	McKellar	Shipstead
Dial	Heflin	McNary	Simmons
Dill	Johnson, Minn.	Neely	Stanfield

So Mr. HARRIS's amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the first committee amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to perfect this bill.

The committee added a provision appropriating $25,000,000 to be loaned to the farmers in other sections of the country where the conditions justified it, but the other parts of the bill do not carry out that idea; and so, if the committee amendment is to be adopted, the bill should conform to that purpose. I am now addressing particularly the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD]. On the first page the bill says:

That it is hereby declared in the public interest that conditions existing in those portions of the United States known particularly as the wheat areas resulting from the stimulation of wheat growing during the recent war—

And so forth. It applies to no other section except the wheat sections. Later on, on page 3, it says:

Loans and advances shall be made only to such farmers in the wheat areas of the country as are not reasonably able—

And so forth. So there are two provisions that carry appropriations—one appropriation of $50,000,000 that is to cover the wheat areas, and another appropriation of $25,000,000 to cover other areas of the country—but there is nothing in the bill to conform to that idea. So on page 1, where the bill says "wheat areas," it should be amended, and on page 3, where it says "wheat areas," it should be amended. I therefore offer an amendment to carry out that idea.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to suggest to the Senator that he refrain from offering those amendments until the committee amendment has been voted on. If it is adopted, then of course there will be no objection to those amendments.

Mr. HARRISON. I prefer to offer it in this way, so that there will be no question about the proposition. Some of us might vote differently on the committee amendment if the Senate does not adopt this amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. The idea of the Senate can be tested directly on the proposition contained in the committee amendment that is here. If that is agreed to, the other will be a formal matter.

Mr. HARRISON. I take it that the Senate will want to perfect the bill, since the Senate committee has put on this $25,000,000. So, Mr. President, I move, on page 1, line 4, after the words "United States," to strike out down to and including line 3, on page 2, and in lieu thereof to insert a comma and the following:

particularly in the wheat areas, but also in other areas dependent almost entirely upon a single crop, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, resulting from the stimulation of production of a single crop during the recent war and aggravated during subsequent years by low yields and high cost of production, should be changed through the encouragement of a system of agriculture not dependent for its success upon a single crop, but one which would include the raising of livestock, such as dairy and beef cattle, hogs, sheep, poultry, and the products thereof.

In other words, it adds to the bill other areas.

Then the other change, which I incorporate in the same amendment, would strike out on page 3, line 4, beginning after the word "cropper," all down to "no loan," on line 11, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Loans and advances shall be made only to such farmers in the areas of the country embraced within the provisions of this act as are not reasonably able, through their own resources or through existing credit facilities, to initiate upon their farms a system of diversified farming but who show their willingness to enter upon such an undertaking and who may be reasonably expected to develop such a system if given aid and opportunity.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 1, line 4, after the words "United States," it is proposed to strike out down to and including line 3, on page 2, and to insert in lieu thereof a comma and the following:

particularly in the wheat areas, but also in other areas dependent almost entirely upon a single crop, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, resulting from the stimulation of production of a single crop during the recent war and aggravated during subsequent years by low yields and high cost of production, should be changed through the encouragement of a system of agriculture not dependent for its success upon a single crop, but one which would include the raising of livestock, such as dairy and beef cattle, hogs, sheep, poultry, and the products thereof.

Also, on page 3, line 4, after the word "cropper" it is proposed to strike out down to the words "no loan" on line 11, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

Loans and advances shall be made only to such farmers in the areas of the country embraced within the provisions of this act as are not reasonably able through their own resources or through existing credit facilities to initiate upon their farms a system of diversified farming, but who show their willingness to enter upon such an undertaking and who may be reasonably expected to develop such a system if given aid and opportunity.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I say this: Whether the amount carried in the bill is $50,000,000 or $75,000,000, this amendment should be adopted. In my opinion, $75,000,000 is not needed; $50,000,000 is perhaps adequate; but certainly these loans should be made in every section of the country where the conditions warrant it. It is up to the Secretary of Agriculture.

If the conditions warrant it in the State of New Mexico—and we have heard much about that State—then those farmers should have the opportunity to go to the Secretary of Agriculture and make this loan. If the conditions warrant it in my own State, where farmers are in distress and the Secretary of Agriculture is made to believe that that is true, then those farmers should have the opportunity of getting some money; and so it is in every State in every part of the country. If the conditions in the four States that have been enumerated are such as have been stated, then of course the Secretary of Agriculture is going to take care of them first. So I submit that this amendment should be adopted whether the amount is $50,000,000 or $75,000,000.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have not charge of this bill. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD] is in charge of it; but it seems to me it ought to be made plain to the Senate that if this amendment is adopted the entire theory of the bill will be changed. Perhaps that is what the Senate wants to do. If it does, it is a bill that I could not conscientiously support.

It was not the idea of those who formulated the bill, the Senator who introduced it, or the committee when they reported it that it was a bill which would give general relief to agriculture. It was the idea, as I have explained, that a few farmers who raised wheat had been prevented by the Government itself from diversifying their crops. That does not apply to any other product, although there are other localities and other kinds of farming which ought to be relieved, and the committee have reported a bill of general application all over the country; but it was the theory that there were some few men engaged in wheat farming who had been interfered with in their program of diversification by the Government, who, for patriotic reasons, had changed their plans and produced wheat when they were starting out on a plan of diversification.

The Government fixed the price of wheat, and came into the matter directly in that respect. It induced these men to change their entire operation; and therefore the Government, as we believe, was to blame for these men getting into this condition. The Government is not to blame for the next condition that was found, to wit, that many of these men—not all of them, but many of them—found at the close of the war that they could not start in again on their plan of diversification because of the financial condition which ensued in those localities. Where those conditions do not apply the farmers are not entitled to relief under the bill. I think that if we make it general, then all the criticism that has been offered will apply to it.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. The committee gave consideration to this proposition, and the committee did recommend that $25,000,000 be added to the bill. I do not want to divulge anything that happened in executive session, but I think the original proposition was to leave it at $50,000,000——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I do not want the Senator to take up all my time, and I hope he will leave me a little to answer. I did not refer to what happened in the committee; but this amendment was put in in the committee after the hearings, after everything was over. It was put on at the suggestion of a member of the committee who had heard but very little of the testimony, and who, in my judgment, had no opportunity to acquaint himself with the real theory of the bill. That is what happened with respect to this amendment. That is the way it got into the bill. The committee put it in; that is true.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I desire only a moment to speak upon this amendment. It is quite apparent that if the amendment is adopted the bill will not pass. That will be the inevitable effect of it. I do not charge at all that that is the purpose of the author of the amendment, but, as has been so clearly stated by the Senator from Nebraska, this bill is intended to reach a certain situation, caused by legislation enacted by the Congress.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIS. Just a moment. If by amendment the bill is changed into a general proposition of making loans and distributing largess in this fashion, as far as I am concerned I can not see my way clear to support the bill. I trust the amendment will not be adopted. Now I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator does not think I have offered an amendment in order to kill the bill, does he?

Mr. WILLIS. I absolve the Senator from any such intention.

Mr. HARRISON. That is absolutely not the case.

Mr. WILLIS. I stated that in my humble opinion that would be the effect of the adoption of the amendment. I did not indicate that I thought it was the Senator's purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I want to address the Senate but a moment. I desire to propose an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi. I propose as an amendment to his amendment, on line 3 of the proposed amendment, that we strike out the word "particularly." That would leave the amendment to read "in the wheat areas."

My thought in suggesting that, Mr. President, is that we do not desire to emphasize the fact that this bill is to be restricted in any wise by the Secretary of Agriculture to the wheat areas of the country. Even under the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi, the Secretary of Agriculture in my opinion could very easily construe the bill so that the main purpose and object of the legislation, especially when you consider the hearings and the developments in connection with it, would be that aid should be furnished in the wheat area only. I take the position that if Congress is going to attempt to relieve the suffering of agriculture throughout this country we can not justly discriminate by extending relief to only a very limited group of our farmers.

We might as well provide that the fruit growers who suffered on account of a demoralized market should be loaned money for the purpose of buying fertilizer to make the next crop, provided they did not have the means with which to buy it. That is just as reasonable, and I insist that the fruit growers, too, should have the same assistance if Congress is to help the wheat growers.

Throughout the entire Nation, in agricultural sections, at some time or other there has been a stagnation of the agricultural industries of those particular localities. Sometimes it is on account of the disaster of flood, sometimes on account of drouth, sometimes on account of a freeze, in sections of the country where the fruit trees are subject to being damaged by excessive cold. Under such conditions Congress has never yet seen proper to provide means for rehabilitating the farmer by direct loans. That has never been done.

If we are going to enter upon that policy, I say we should treat the farmers and the fruit growers throughout this country with equal justice and equal liberality. Therefore I do not desire to have anything written into this bill which would indicate that Congress was planning to loan money to a particular class of our people, people who have been unfortunate, and with whom I sympathize, but who have not been more unfortunate than those engaged in agriculture in other sections of this country at different times.

In my own State, as the consequence of the war, the first year following the war the fruit crops did not bring the cost of gathering, packing, and freight. That is one of the hardships that was inflicted on the people of my State as a consequence of the war. We did not come and ask Congress to provide means with which to reestablish the prosperity of our groves, but the people of the State, with courage and industry, proceeded in the ordinary way and soon restored normal conditions.

We could also say we were entitled to relief and help, because Congress authorized an increase in railroad rates, which has doubled the cost of transportation of the products of my State to the markets and at times causes my people to suffer great loss, and because Congress and its instrumentality, the Interstate Commerce Commission, has permitted this we think we ought to have some relief in the way of loans, and we are just as much entitled to it as are the farmers in some other sections of the country.

If we are going to take money from the pockets of the general taxpayers of the country and loan it to the farmers—and I always want to help the farmers when I can possibly do so in a reasonable way—we should make the policy general. The Senate should not by the language of the bill restrict the relief to three or four Western States. Why not in fairness let the fruit-growing and other agricultural States of the Union be included? These States will be forced to pay their proportion of the $50,000,000 provided by this measure and I submit that in all justice they should have the benefits of the loan privilege.

Mr. LADD. Mr. President, the only justification for a bill of this kind, in my judgment, is the fact that the Government interfered with the farmers by fixing the price of wheat and not fixing a price of any other product, holding farmers down to sell their wheat at a price below the cost of production during the war and after.

I opposed these amendments in the committee, and I feel that the only justification for the bill is the fact, as I have said, that it is to be confined to the Wheat Belt, and only to the Wheat Belt. I feel, therefore, that I shall have to oppose this amendment, as I did in the committee.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I would like to inquire what is meant by the Wheat Belt. I understand that the great complaint has come particularly from the Northwestern States, in which I would include Minnesota, the Dakotas, Montana, and Washington.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. REED of Missouri. If the Senator will not take much time.

Mr. KING. It was announced by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. JOHNSON] that the Senator from South Dakota does not include his State at all, and the figures which I presented to-day clearly indicate that there is no necessity of any appropriation for South Dakota.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I find that in 1914 Missouri produced 35,000,000 bushels of wheat, in round figures; that South Dakota produced 45,000,000, that North Dakota produced 86,000,000, that Montana produced only 27,000,000, that Washington produced 37,000,000, and that Kansas produced 105,000,000 bushels. So that the greater part of the wheat is raised outside of what is here referred to as the Wheat Belt, or wheat country.

There is a great deal in what the Senator who just took his seat, the senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD], said about the farmers having been robbed on their wheat during the war. That is undoubtedly true. That was one of my pet fights during the war. I said then that we were regulating down to a low point the price of the farmer's wheat. Subsequent events have developed that while the American farmer's export wheat went abroad at approximately $2 a bushel, wheat was being bought in the markets of Europe for four and five dollars a bushel. So the farmer was robbed during the war. I stated at the time that that would occur, and it did occur; but if we are going to make up to the wheat farmer the amount of which he was robbed during the war, then similar losses should be made up to every farmer of the United States alike, and not to a particular belt or portion of the United States.

That is a complete answer to any bill which proposes to help a particular section. You can not put this argument on that ground and make it sound, because if you put it on that ground you extend the bill so as to benefit every farmer. Then we ought to put it on the further ground that we are making up to the farmer the amount of money of which he was robbed by the unjust exercise of power by Herbert Hoover, and not by doling out to him some money now as a loan, as the bill contemplates doling out loans to only a portion of the farmers.

If the Congress were to consider a bill proposing to take account of the amount of money the farmer had been robbed of during the war we would have a different proposition here—and illegally robbed of by the gross abuse of the licensing power which Herbert Hoover held and which he exercised in such a way as to declare to every buyer of wheat that if he paid more than a certain price he would revoke the seller's license, thereby fixing a price. The foreign market was controlled, as we all know, through the export grain corporation in exactly the same way. But that is not this bill. If a bill should be brought in to take an accounting and ascertain how much the farmer had been robbed of during the war by the unjust and illegal acts of Herbert Hoover, acting for the Government, I would be glad to support such a bill. Incidentally, if he had not been thus robbed, the farmer up in the Northwest might have had some money in the bank to tide him over these hard years instead of having notes and mortgages there which he had to give because he could not make both ends meet.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I understand that we can not complete the discussion of the bill to-night. Therefore I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, March 11, 1924, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, March 10, 1924.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed be Thy holy name—even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ; the Father of mercies and the God of all comfort. May not Thy manifold blessing be selfishly used. Lead us to understand that no one can come to true greatness who has not felt in some measure that his life belongs to his country and to the world. May all that is noblest, heroic, and best in us be in harmony with Thy will. Bless our home life, our social life, and all our tender ties of fellowship. Through Christ our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, March 8, 1924, was read and approved.

AMPLIFYING DEVICES IN THE HOUSE.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes in regard to the sound-amplifying system here.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes on the subject indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire to announce to the House that the amplifying system has been off about two weeks, and I have asked the man in charge to put it on again this morning. It is necessary for the House to decide very shortly what it desires to do in regard to it.

I will say to the House that up to the present time for the installation and operation of the system the Government has never paid anything, but if we desire to keep this system in operation from this time onward it is necessary to pay for the operation. I therefore wish the Members of the House would give some attention to this matter in the next two or three weeks, so that they will be in a position to decide what they want to do in regard to its final disposition.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] has spoken of the so-called "amplifying system" which has been installed in the House. I think it is a ridiculous thing that the House of Representatives should be regarded as an advertising medium. I have always been opposed to this so-called "amplifying system" which has been installed in this House, and I think the Members of the House should decide against it. These instruments and devices produce a brassy, ringing sound and they are a great obstacle to hearing and a pernicious interference with the natural acoustics of this House. I hope they will not be continued and paid for. [Applause.] It seems to me that this House should not expend the taxpayers' money either to aggrandize ourselves or advertise a private business. In addition it is not a success and is a detriment to our orderly procedure.

PERMISSION TO A COMMITTEE TO SIT DURING THE SESSIONS.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Roads is holding hearings on a measure in regard to the construction of Federal roads, and a large number of State officials and representatives of highway commissions are present here in Washington from farm districts to attend these hearings. I ask permission that the Committee on Roads may sit during the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Roads may sit during the sessions of the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REVENUE ACT OF 1924.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced as a separate bill Title XII of H. R. 6715 as it passed the House of Representatives on February 29, 1924, with such changes in the text as are necessary by reason of and in the event of the nonpassage of the proposed revenue act of 1924. Title XII provides, as does my proposed bill, H. R. 7784, for a 25 per cent reduction to income taxpayers of the amount of income tax due for 1923 and payable in 1924 under the revenue act of 1921. Except for the changes necessarily made as indicated I claim no initiative or authorship in the matter of this legislation. The proposal to allow a reduction for the 1923 taxes originated with the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], and Title XII was framed by the Treasury Department upon the request of the Republican members of the Committee on Ways and Means. I appreciate that there may be small possibility of passing this legislation before March 15, so as to give the taxpayers the immediate benefit of the reduction and also in order to reduce the labors and expenses of administration. However, I feel that this proposal ought to be pending in a separate bill in order that the Ways and Means Committee and the House itself may consider the matter at any opportune or urgent moment. Personally, in view of the apparent difficulty and probable impossibility of securing actual revenue revision and reform during this session by the enactment of legislation along the lines of the Mellon plan, I would be content to have the reduction for 1923 enacted into law and go to the country on the question of genuine tax revision. In all events, if for any reason a permanent revenue law should not be enacted during this session of Congress, the reduction in the income tax for 1923 ought to be made effective as soon as possible.

The only plausible argument against the reduction of the 1923 tax is that such legislation would be retroactive and would return to some taxpayers the portion of their tax which they have already passed on to consumers and the general public. As an accurate and historical fact, however, this statement is not true. The 1923 tax will be assessed and determined under the revenue act of 1921. That act was passed on November 3, 1921, and went back in its operation to January 1, 1921. It is plain, therefore, that the 1921 taxes paid in 1922 could not have been passed on prior to the passage of the act of 1921. The act of 1918 was passed on February 4, 1919, and was made retroactively effective as of January 1, 1918. The prior acts of 1917, 1916, and 1913 were all passed in the latter part of the year in which they became effective. It is, therefore, plain that the taxes paid in a particular year could not have been and, as a matter of fact, were not passed on to others than the taxpayer during the preceding year for which such taxes were assessed.

Of course, the complete and unanswerable argument in favor of this reduction of the taxes for 1923 is that the Government has collected more money for that year than it actually needs—although, of course, it could be used; as, for instance, in the purchase of outstanding bonds—and the only excuse or warrant for the collection of taxes by the Federal Government is the need of revenue for its necessary expenditures.

During the consideration in the House of the revenue bill now pending in the Senate, House bill 6715, a motion was made to recommit the bill with instructions to strike out Title XII, or the provision for the 25 per cent reduction of the 1923 income tax. That motion received the support of 68 Members of the House, as against 346 Members who opposed it. One need not be a prophet to assert with the utmost confidence that if for any reason general revenue legislation should fail at this session of Congress a joint resolution providing for the 1923 reduction will pass. In the language of a well-known popular advertisement, "Eventually; why not now?"

MUSCLE SHOALS.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 518, the Muscle Shoals bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 518, relating to Muscle Shoals. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] will resume the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 518) to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to sell to Henry Ford nitrate plant No. 1, at Sheffield, Ala.; nitrate plant No. 2, at Muscle Shoals, Ala.; Waco Quarry, near Russellville, Ala.; and to lease to the corporation to be incorporated by him Dam No. 2 and Dam No. 3 (as designated in H. Doc. 1262, 64th Cong., 1st sess.), including power stations when constructed as provided herein, and for other purposes, with Mr. MAPES in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 518, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 518) to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to sell to Henry Ford nitrate plant No. 1, at Sheffield, Ala.; nitrate plant No. 2, at Muscle Shoals, Ala.; Waco Quarry, near Russellville, Ala.; and to lease to the corporation to be incorporated by him Dam No. 2 and Dam No. 3 (designated in H. Doc. 1262, 64th Cong., 1st sess.), including power stations when constructed as provided herein, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose on Saturday the Clerk had completed the reading of section 15. The Clerk will read.

Mr. WEFALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WEFALD: Strike out the figure "8," where it appears on page 11, line 16, and insert in lieu thereof the figure "5."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. WEFALD. Mr. Chairman, there is one word that has resounded through this whole debate, and that is fertilizer. If verbal and intellectual fertilizer would suffice for the purposes of the farmer, if it would make crops grow as it has made oratory blossom here, we would now have on hand a sufficient supply for the whole length of the here-proposed contract.

The whole excuse for turning this tremendously valuable property and concession over to Mr. Ford is that the farmers of this country shall get cheap fertilizer; we have been told in this debate that the whole country will be supplied in this respect from Muscle Shoals when Mr. Ford gets started down there.

I do not know what profit is made on commercial fertilizer now. Large profits are very likely made; but I do know that if this bill is passed we will be taking the first step by law to guarantee profits in industrial undertakings; we will be doing to manufacturing what we did to the railroads in the transportation act—guaranteeing earnings. For that reason we need to be very careful about not setting the guaranteed earning too high.

There is nothing in this bill that will hinder Mr. Ford from placing his own valuation upon the whole property for the sake of figuring investment cost. The bill says that the capital stock of the company shall be $10,000,000 or more. The investment cost is, of course, a factor in the overhead expense item that enters into all price calculations. As far as we know from this bill, nothing but nitrates for explosives in time of war and fertilizer in time of peace is to be manufactured there; it is therefore fair to assume that the greatest part of the capital investment cost will be charged against this activity.

The best construction that can be placed upon the whole Ford undertaking at Muscle Shoals under the terms of this bill is that it is an experimental undertaking. Mr. Ford may do this and he may do that; but he is not specifically bound to do anything in a specific manner. For that reason he may as well experiment in the making of "cheap" fertilizer; the farmer will have to pay.

The farmer has no profit guaranteed him on his products. He will not make 8 per cent profit over a period of 100 years; he has never made that much profit in any 10-year period since this country was settled. After-war deflation has set the farmer back about a third of a century; the savings of a lifetime have been wiped out. I could not go back home and face my constituents and say that I had voted a guaranteed price to Mr. Ford of 2 per cent more than my predecessor voted to the railroads when the Esch-Cummins law guaranteed them 6 per cent.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the gentleman will yield for a question?

Mr. WEFALD. I will yield for a very brief question.

Mr. MADDEN. I did not understand that anybody guaranteed anything in that respect in this bill.

Mr. WEFALD. It guarantees 8 per cent on his net earnings.

Mr. MADDEN. No. It says he must make fertilizer, whether he makes any money or not, and at no time will he charge more than 8 per cent; not at any time.

Mr. ALMON. Eight per cent on the cost of production.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEFALD. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I would like to ask if the 8 per cent is on the capital invested or on the turnover?

Mr. WEFALD. The bill does not specifically say.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. On the turnover.

Mr. WEFALD. Yes; it is on the turnover.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; it is on the turnover; and it may be as much as 140 per cent.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The bill says on the actual cost of production.

Mr. WEFALD. I remember when Mr. Ford criticized Congress for voting 6 per cent guaranty to the railroads.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WEFALD. Mr. Chairman, may I have one minute more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to proceed for one additional minute. Is there objection?

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I will not object to the gentleman having one additional minute; but I want to say now to all gentlemen that I shall object to all extensions of time during the discussions to-day, because we have heard discussion enough, and we want to get on with this bill and finish it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Minnesota is granted permission to proceed for one additional minute.

Mr. WEFALD. Especially could I not do this when I remember how Mr. Ford has criticized Congress for voting a 6 per cent guaranty to the railroads. If Mr. Ford goes into this undertaking out of sheer love for the farmers, which we have been told so often in this debate, he should be willing to accept even a slightly lower percentage of profit than has been guaranteed the railroads.

I am in favor of the Government taking over Muscle Shoals and operating it at cost, supplying fertilizer for the farmers at cost, not for a hundred years but for a thousand years or more. The Muscle Shoals plants—all that could be established there—could be run for a thousand years at cost for the farmers, and the farmers of this country would yet not be repaid for the after-war deflation.

Before a hundred years are gone by I hope that no big manufacturing concern in this country will be allowed to charge a profit of 8 per cent net upon its manufactured goods. If this bill is enacted into law and an 8 per cent guaranty clause written into it, the farmers that live at the time of the expiration of the hundred-year contract will curse this Congress that was so engrossed with the Teapot Dome scandal that it blindly gave away what will then, perhaps, appear to be the biggest piece of national asset in the shape of natural resources in the land.

I do not like this Ford proposal. I do not care to help to make Henry Ford richer and mightier than he is. We have been told that we must not change this contract. We must take it as it is or leave it. That was the command when the revenue bill came before this House also. If this bill goes through unchanged—as now seems very likely—then the committee in charge of the bill should add at least one amendment, namely, that wherever the name Henry Ford appears it should read, "His majesty, Henry Ford."

The farmers of Maine will not benefit by fertilizer made at Muscle Shoals, nor will the farmers of Minnesota do so; the 6 per cent guaranty to the railroads, together with the 8 per cent guaranty to Ford, will be more than they can overcome. Under present transportation rates farmers of those States could not avail themselves of the benefits that might accrue to the farmers from the Ford proposal, even if the rosiest dreams of the Ford enthusiasts came true; freight rates are prohibitive.

I did not like that references were made in this debate to the pacifist character of Henry Ford and his son. Not that I am a pacifist. I believe that our Government never should let go of the grip upon Muscle Shoals for national defense. Muscle Shoals should be what it was intended to be—one of our main safety anchors for future peace.

Henry Ford's dislike for war, I think, is the finest trait of his character. But I think that this property, both in times of peace and in times of war, is safer in the hands of Uncle Sam than in the hands of Uncle Henry. If Uncle Sam grinds out the fertilizer in time of peace at cost of production, he does not have to hesitate a minute before he takes up his war activities if he has to do so. There is evidently a serious defect somewhere in the mental make-up of Henry Ford; of this I am convinced since I read an article in the Nation on why Ford should not be Presidenqt. Henry Ford is the greatest financial genius the world has ever produced. All genius is more or less insane, financial genius more dangerously insane than other genius. I know of no saner man than Uncle Sam—sane in peace and sane in war. I am here as one of those that he has called in to protect his interests. I am doing that to the best of my ability, and in accord with my conscience I can not vote a profit to Henry Ford of over 5 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WEFALD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have one more minute.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. McKENZIE. I want to be gracious to all gentlemen, but it is impossible to grant time for further discussion on this bill.

I want to say that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota simply cuts down the 8 per cent maximum profit that Mr. Ford can charge for the manufacture of fertilizer. I want to say further to my friends on this side of the House that this particular section was the section that was agreed to by the representatives of the farm organizations of the country, and the committee accepted it as their judgment. It was written into the bill to satisfy them, and any man who pretends to come from a farming district must understand that in fighting this section he is fighting the representatives of the farm organizations of this country.

The gentleman from Minnesota has just stated that there was danger of a Teapot Dome scandal in connection with this proposition. I am sorry to see a man coming from the far West, the great agricultural section of this country, falling for the one sort of propaganda that has been put out by the power companies of this country in an effort to threaten, frighten, and drive away support of this bill on the ground that men should fear they will be scandalized by voting for it. I want to say to the gentleman that he should beware of scandal on the other side and not on the side of the men who are standing for the toiling millions of this country.

Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section, on this amendment, and all amendments to this section do now close.

Mr. BURTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois that all debate on this section, on this amendment, and on all amendments to this section do now close.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HILL of Maryland) there were—ayes 78, noes 35.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas demands tellers. Those in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Eighteen Members have risen; not a sufficient number.

So the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURTON. Am I foreclosed from asking the gentleman from Illinois a question, when he agreed to yield to me for a question, one that I regard of importance in connection with this paragraph and of very considerable importance?

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the gentleman from Ohio will be allowed to ask a question of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that time be given to the gentleman from Ohio to ask me a question.

Mr. WEFALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may be given time to answer certain charges of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order, which is the unanimous-consent request of the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois that time be granted to the gentleman from Ohio to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURTON. On what basis is this 8 per cent to be computed? Is the value of the permanent property, the right of the lessee and the water power to be counted in, or is this merely on the bare cost of manufacturing fertilizer?

Mr. McKENZIE. I will say to my distinguished friend from Ohio that I can not answer that question categorically; I do not know. But I do know this: That this maximum was agreed upon by the representatives of the farm organizations of the country, and furthermore, they have the right to have a committee audit the cost, and that being true, I have no fear but what the farmers of the country will be protected.

Mr. BURTON. Is it not true, however, that you are inserting here a provision which is utterly uncertain—that there is no basis of computation for the 8 per cent or any other feature of the cost?

Mr. McKENZIE. I would say I think the gentleman is mistaken in making a statement of that character. I think there is no uncertainty in connection with the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I send an amendment to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STRONG of Kansas: On page 11, line 16, after the word "exceed," strike out the figure "8" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "6," and on page 14, line 2, strike out the figure "8" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "6."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Has debate been closed on this section and all amendments thereto?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; on this section and all amendments thereto.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment: On page 14, line 2, after the word "centum," insert the words "on whatever capital or investment is actually used in the production of fertilizer."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HILL of Maryland: Page 14, line 2, after the word "centum," insert "on whatever capital or investment is actually used in the production of fertilizer."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HILL of Maryland) there were—yeas 31, noes 33.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland demands tellers. All in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Eighteen Members have risen; not a sufficient number.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 14, line 12, after the word "organizations," insert "the company shall be obligated to furnish fertilizer which shall have at least 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen not later than 1926."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 16. Wherever, in the national defense, the United States shall require all or any part of the operating facilities at nitrate plant No. 2 for the production of materials necessary in the manufacture of explosives or other war materials, then the United States shall have the immediate right, upon five days' notice to the company, to take over and operate the same, and the company will supply the United States with hydroelectric power necessary for such operations, together with the use of all patented processes which the United States may need which the company owns or has the right to use. When required for national defense any of the company's personnel and operating organization necessary for operating any part of nitrate plant No. 2 in the manufacture of materials for explosives, or other war materials, shall be at the disposal of the United States. For the facilities and services aforesaid the United States shall protect the company from losses occasioned by such use and shall return the said property in as good condition as when received and reasonably compensate the company for the use thereof. All duly authorized agents and representatives of the United States shall have free access at all reasonable times to inspect and study all of the operations, chemical processes, and methods employed by the company at nitrate plant No. 2, provided that such agents and representatives shall not use the information and the facts concerning any of the company's operations, except for the benefit and protection of the United States.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I want to resent the insinuation that Members from agricultural districts of the West who are trying to amend this bill to protect the farmers of this country are influenced by any power companies or any nitrate companies. [Applause.] It is not true. I might throw back the insinuation that the people who are trying to railroad this bill through Congress are influenced by the richest man in the world, Henry Ford. He has put out a lot of propaganda. I have no interest in Henry Ford and I have no interest in any nitrate plant or in any power company.

I represent a great agricultural district. I have no knowledge that the farmers of my district are for this proposition. I do know that in my home county one of the most prominent members of the American Farm Bureau, and a real farmer, is fighting it all the time, and every time I go home he asks me if it can not be stopped, because he thinks it is going to rob the people of their rights in this great power project. I do not think the people in Kansas or the farmers of this Nation know what this bill does. My friend, the chairman of the committee, was asked if the 8 per cent on the turnover was an annual turnover or a turnover on each sale, and the gentleman said he did not know. That proposition was sought to be amended so that the corporation to which this great power is to be given would be held down to 8 per cent on an annual turnover. I wanted to amend it so as to let Mr. Ford's company make a profit of 6 per cent per annum on fertilizer sold to help farmers.

I want to appeal to my friends on the Democratic side. There has been a great deal of criticism upon the bill that provided that the railroads of this country have an opportunity to make a return of 6 per cent, and in this bill we are to let this great corporation to whom we are giving away this great power make 8 per cent off of the farmers of this country.

We are saying in this bill that Mr. Ford shall pay the Government only 4 per cent for the money that we will expend millions to build these great dams for him, and then we turn around and say he can make 8 per cent off of the farmers, and if, perchance, the wording of the bill, which they have refused to allow to be corrected, should permit him to make 8 per cent on the turnover on all sales, he will make 40 or 50 per cent annually.

Mr. Ford has been reported as saying that a railroad company should not be allowed to make over 6 per cent annually. Why not hold down Mr. Ford's corporation to the point where he will not make over 6 per cent off of the farmers of this country.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. If there is such a bright prospect for profit, why is it that during the three years the matter has been open, nobody has made a better offer than Ford?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I do not know whether they have or not, but I do know, as a lawyer and as a business man, that when you are making a contract that is the time to protect the people you say you are going to benefit.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes; but I want to ask if it does not always take two to make a contract.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes; it takes two to make a contract, but you are only going to let one man make this contract. [Applause.]

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Oh, no.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I want the Government and the people of the United States to be represented and protected in the making of this contract.

In the bill that is being criticized for letting the railroads make a return of 6 per cent, there is a provision for recapture of profits made exceeding that amount. There is no recapture clause in this proposition. What we let the Ford corporation make under this contract, he keeps.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. You adopted one yesterday. The Begg amendment was adopted Saturday.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. That was an amendment to make him make nitrates, and you do not recapture any part of the profits under that.

Mr. STEVENSON. It was made as a recapture clause to recapture the whole property if he violated the contract.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. In case he does not make any nitrates; but it does not seek to recapture an unjust profit on the farmers of this country.

Now, Kansas does not use any fertilizer at the present time. I realize this is a bill to secure nitrates for the cotton farmers of the South, and I hope it accomplishes that. I have always gone along to help the farmers of the South. I have voted for everything you have had before the Congress to help the farmers of the South, and I want to help you to pass this bill if it can be amended so that it will be fair, but I can not go along with a bill that has been drawn by Henry Ford's attorneys and in which we are not allowed to change a single thing in the interest of the people of my section of the country. The time may come when Kansas will want fertilizers and the freight rates from Muscle Shoals may forbid our getting them. Why add to that doubt by letting this great corporation make 8 per cent or perhaps much more for manufacturing these fertilizers?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, coming as I do from a State whose improved farm lands during the last quarter of a century have been depleted to a greater extent than those of any other State in the Union, I desire to express my approval of this bill [applause] and my opposition to any amendments to these sections designed to limit the percentage of profit to be made by Mr. Ford in the manufacture of fertilizer products at Muscle Shoals.

During the last generation we have witnessed the steady decline of American agriculture. We have seen the rapid deterioration of the fertility of the soil. We have witnessed all over the country a gradual decline in our agricultural communities as the rural population has shifted to the city, lured there by a promise of higher wages, greater opportunities, and better living conditions. We have watched that situation develop with alarm, and in order to check it we have raised the slogan, "Back to the farm." But in giving expression to this noble sentiment we have failed to realize, and we fail to realize to-day, that we can shout from the mountain tops to the valleys below, "Back to the farm," but we can neither coax nor coerce the young men of the present generation to return to the farm, or, best of all, never to leave the farm, until we can give them some assurance of an opportunity to make a decent living there. [Applause.]

So, Mr. Chairman, no greater service can be done by Members of this House to our constituents and the Nation than to provide some relief from the already overwhelming burden which besets the agricultural interests and the farmers of America. It is because I believe that Henry Ford's lease of Muscle Shoals will provide such relief to the American farmers by reducing the price of fertilizer, that most essential ingredient in the pursuit of agriculture, that I propose to vote for it. [Applause.]

If we pass this bill the United States will receive $5,000,000 from Mr. Ford, who, in turn, will provide an opportunity for the American farmer to secure American fertilizer made in America. We will reduce the cost of fertilizer to the American farmer more than 50 per cent. We will reduce it from an annual expenditure of $350,000,000 to less than $175,000,000. We will relieve the American farmer from the payment of over $11,000,000 as annual export duties paid to Chile and, best of all, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, we will take from the shoulders of the American farmers the burden of paying to these selfish individual and corporate interests, which control the output of American fertilizer to-day, the excessive and exorbitant profits which they have demanded in the past. [Applause.]

New Hampshire is one of the smallest States of the Union, both in area and population. But it is also one of the thirteen Colonies, and from the very birth of the Republic down to the present time the majority of its citizens have been second to none in their loyalty to the soil and their devotion to the cause of agriculture. Yet, by reason of the overwhelming odds against them because of the prohibitive cost of cultivation, the gradual sterility of the soil, and increasing opportunities in the great industrial centers of the State during the last 40 years, nearly 70 per cent of the farm lands of New Hampshire have been abandoned, the highest percentage of any State of the Union. Again, during the 10 years between 1910 and 1920, the amount paid by the farmers of New Hampshire for fertilizer increased from $512,580 to $526,180, an increase of only 3 per cent, notwithstanding the increased cost in the fertilizer itself. This record also is unequaled elsewhere in America, the State of Oklahoma, for instance, having an increase in the amount paid for fertilizer during the same period of 1455 per cent.

The difficulty in the successful operation of our farms in America exists in a lesser degree in other States than New Hampshire. What is the remedy? The American Nation can not exist without agricultural prosperity. It is essential to the continued growth and maintenance of our great industrial and commercial activities. It is necessary for the continued health, happiness, and prosperity of all our people. Notwithstanding our boasted wealth, we can not exist without food and clothing, and without agriculture we can secure neither.

Capital and labor are to-day both highly organized. Capital may fight its battles by lockouts and combinations. Labor may secure its demands by strikes and boycotts. The American farmer can not avail himself of either of these remedies, for if the farmer should strike the Nation itself would perish.

Thus we see that any legislation which helps the farmer helps the Nation. Cheaper fertilizer means cheaper production, and a lower cost of production means that the farmer is provided with some substantial inducement to operate his farm and to expand his agricultural pursuits.

We are to-day offered an opportunity of giving to the American farmer a great measure of relief. We have an opportunity by enacting this bill into law to assist the farmer in securing cheaper fertilizer. Such assistance the farmer rightfully demands and justly deserves. Let us see to it that it is given to him.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 15, lines 13 and 14, strike out the word "reasonable."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, this section is a war measure. There is no such thing as reasonable time in any matter concerning the safety of the country. If you limit the time that officials of the War Department may visit the works you are creating a question of fact, and Mr. Ford will be the sole arbiter just when representatives of the Government may inspect this important plant in accordance with the terms of this contract. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!" "Vote!"] Oh, you can holler "Vote" as much as you like. You can laugh the amendment down if you desire, but you will all live to rue the day that you railroaded and jammed the bill through the House in its present condition. Two minutes ago you voted down an amendment which tended to guarantee to the farmers in this country fertilizer not later than 1926—that is two years from date. In five and seven and eight years from now you are going to have the farmers of the country on your neck asking for fertilizer from this plant. There is no provision in the contract that provides when the first consignment of fertilizer shall be ready for sale. The contract is silent on that point. So Ford has it entirely in his discretion to commence the manufacture of fertilizer any time in the future. Mr. Chairman. I offer this amendment in all seriousness. Do not hamstring the rights of the War Department, but give the representatives of the War Department access at all times, and the right to inspect the Government property freely and without hindrance. I appeal to protect the people, at least to the extent of keeping intact this valuable, necessary nitrate plant.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. STRONG] is withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 17. In order that said company may be supplied with electric power and the farmers and other users with fertilizers after the termination of the said one-hundred-year lease, should the United States elect not to operate said power plants but determine to lease or dispose of same, the company shall have the preferred right to negotiate with the United States for such lease or purchase, and upon such terms as may then be prescribed by Congress.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pages 15 and 16, strike out all of section 17.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I hold in my hand an editorial from the greatest Democratic newspaper south of the Mason and Dixon line, The Sun, of Baltimore. This newspaper several months ago editorially referred, more or less favorably, to the Ford proposition, but this great newspaper, in common with a good many other observers in this Nation, as expressing a growing public sentiment, realizes that the Ford Muscle Shoals offer is not one to be swallowed whole too quickly. The Baltimore Sun, which is a Democratic paper and which is strongly in favor of everything for the South, says this morning:

It will be a bad bargain for America if his [Ford's] first proof of efficiency at Muscle Shoals stands out to be ability to make Congress sign the dotted line under exactly what he wants. And that dotted line the House is about to sign.

Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to one of the dotted-line articles that Congress is about to sign. Section 17 provides as follows:

SEC. 17. In order that said company may be supplied with electric power and the farmers and other users with fertilizers after the termination of the said one-hundred-year lease, should the United States elect not to operate said power plants but determine to lease or dispose of same, the company shall have the preferred right to negotiate with the United States for such lease or purchase, and upon such terms as may then be prescribed by Congress.

Mr. Mayo, the personal representative of Mr. Ford before the Military Affairs Committee, said that that meant in his opinion that the Ford corporation should have the preferred and exclusive right to continue this project after the 100-year period is over. I know, gentlemen, that in the present temper of this committee you will vote my amendment down. I know that the majority of you will vote to "sign on the dotted line," but I call your attention to this editorial before you put your signature on that line. I call your attention especially to the whole of this editorial from this strong Democratic paper, the Baltimore Sun, which is as follows:

MUSCLE SHOALS.

A reversal clause providing that Henry Ford shall turn back the Muscle Shoals properties if he should fail for two consecutive years to produce therefrom at least 40,000 tons of nitrates has been written into the McKenzie bill. The safeguard can hardly be called a drastic one, for the capacity of the complete plant is estimated at 110,000 tons of ammonium nitrate a year, nearly three times what Ford is called upon to produce if the proposed lease goes through. The importance of this reversal clause, however, does not lie in its leniency to the lessee, but in the fact that insistence on making good on the contract is almost the only measure of public protection written into the Ford offer as embodied in the McKenzie bill.

One would have thought that the tremendous stir aroused over the Teapot Dome and other oil leases would have aroused a spirit of healthy caution in the House toward the leasing of Muscle Shoals. The immensity of the Alabama enterprise; its threefold importance as a gigantic power plant and as a plant equipped for the large-scale manufacture of chemical products necessary to both munitions and fertilizers certainly merits emphasis on the conservationist viewpoint. The moral most strongly pointed by the oil scandals is that the representatives of the public, whether appointed or elected, must in future take their responsibility very seriously in turning over invaluable Government properties to private enterprise. Yet the McKenzie bill is marching steadily on to passage by the House, blithely shedding amendments which would put the interests of the United States above the interests of Henry Ford.

What reasonable objection, for instance, can be raised against the amendment proposed by Representative THEODORE BURTON, of Ohio, which would have limited the Ford lease to 50 instead of 100 years, and would have placed the tenancy of the manufacturer and his assigns under the jurisdiction of the Federal water power act? Without considering other factors, the pace at which the utility of hydroelectric plants is developing indicates that a lease of a century is likely to be a crazy gamble from the public viewpoint. If in 1824 all dockage space for steam vessels in New York Harbor had been leased to a single individual for a century, it might not have attracted much attention then, when the steamship was in its untried infancy. But looking back on such a contract to-day we would regard it as almost criminal folly. Yet in the case of Muscle Shoals the House threw out the protective amendment of Representative BURTON, a man whose intelligent foresight is second to none in Congress, by a vote of 182 to 104.

Again, nobody in Congress seems to have any clear idea of whether the price which Ford is offering for Muscle Shoals bears any just relationship to the present value, let alone future possibilities, of what he will receive if the McKenzie bill goes through. The value of his lease to him, of course, depends on his ability to obtain primary power cheaply, and as the cost per kilowatt hour at Muscle Shoals appears to be uncertain, Mr. Ford will naturally try to keep his capital investment low to protect himself and his gallery of farmers against production costs higher than Government estimates. Doubtless he has done careful figuring on his part of the bargain. But that is no reason why Congress should give his estimates blanket indorsement.

The evident anxiety of the fertilizer manufacturers to keep Mr. Ford out of Muscle Shoals must not be allowed to blind Congress to the magnitude and importance of this bill. The fertilizer people have rather spoiled their case by the equal vehemence with which they have argued against the Government running Muscle Shoals and against Mr. Ford running it. But because Congress is alert to this propaganda is no reason why it should be hypnotized by the strange legend of Mr. Ford's humanitarian and supernatural efficiency. It will be a bad bargain for America if his first proof of efficiency at Muscle Shoals turns out to be ability to make Congress sign the dotted line under exactly what he wants. And that dotted line the House is about to sign. (March 10, 1924.)

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Would the gentleman be kind enough to tell the House what favored candidate for the Presidency of the United States the Baltimore Sun is supporting?

Mr. HILL of Maryland. I think before the recent oil retainer disclosures the Baltimore Sun might possibly have been in favor of Mr. McAdoo. I do not know, but I seriously doubt if it would be now.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. That is what the gentleman thinks. Will he please tell us if he knows who the Baltimore Sun is now supporting for President of the United States?

Mr. HILL of Maryland. I do not know, but it might well be Gov. Albert C. Ritchie, of Maryland. I hope it is not Mr. William Jennings Bryan, however.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. The gentleman does not need to hope anything of that kind. He knows. It may be that the Baltimore Sun is supporting some gentleman slightly associated with the Alabama Power Co.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Will the gentleman name any candidate for President on the Democratic side who is associated with that company?

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. He could.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Why does he not do it, then?

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. It is not his place.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. I understand the gentleman can name a prominent Democratic candidate for President who is associated with the Alabama Power Co. Is that the case?

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Oh, he could if he wanted to.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I hope the committee will adopt my amendment and not place the imperial crown in perpetuity upon the head of Edsel Ford, and his posterity, not only for 100 years, but for generations yet unborn.

According to Ford enthusiasts, like the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN], I was "muddying the waters and scuttlefishing around" in 1922, when I showed in the hearings that the Ford interests sought perpetual rights from the United States. Section 17 may not be as bad as the original Ford demand, but it is still an attempt at a perpetual prior lien. Read the following statements of Mr. Mayo in answer to my question in 1922. Here it is:

[Part of the hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs, Tuesday, February 14, 1922, page 289.]

Mr. HILL. And the money that they so advanced makes a project on which the proposed company has a prior perpetual lien on all the output; is that not right?

Mr. MAYO. Yes, sir; within the limitation stated.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Mayo, every kind of assumption has been indulged in since this proposition has been submitted, except the second coming of the Savior at the end of the world. If Mr. Ford, through this generous offer to the people of the United States, can bring forth all of these violent assumptions, I have an idea that these gentlemen think he can bring down the cost of fertilizer to the farmers of the country.

Are you familiar with the debates that occurred in this committee and on the floor of the House and the Senate when the proposition was made to establish the dams and the nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals?

Mr. MAYO. I am not very familiar with them; no, sir.

Mr. QUIN. There were two propositions set forth at that time, the primary idea being that there should be a nitrate plant there to make powder for use by the United States Army in time of war, and that in peace times fertilizer should be made there. I was an ardent advocate of both of those propositions.

After the war terminated, Congress, after a violent debate, failed to provide for the completion of that dam. Now, the Ford proposition calls for the completion of the dams and the carrying out of both purposes for which the original plant was started, does it not?

Mr. MAYO. Yes, sir.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. HILL wasted a lot of time in asking questions and endeavoring to read out of Mr. Ford's proposition what is plainly written in it. Listen to what it says on page 18, section 17, of the report of the Secretary of War. This is the language: "In order that said company may be supplied with electric power, and the farmers with fertilizers, after the termination of the said 100-year leases, should the United States elect not to operate said power plants but determine to lease or dispose of them." Mr. Ford puts it in his proposition, does he not?

Mr. MAYO. Yes, sir.

Mr. QUIN. Then all of that questioning was just muddying the waters and scuttlefishing around.

Unless you strike out section 17, as I propose, you will give the Ford Corporation "the preferred right" after the end of 100 years. Such an action is one you and your descendants will regret. I hope you will adopt my amendment and strike out section 17. [Applause.]

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL]. The gentleman from Maryland is talking about what Mr. Mayo said before our committee two years ago. Mr. Mayo was not talking about the present language of the bill at all. He was talking about something that was in the original Ford offer. The best argument against the gentleman's amendment are the words I referred to the other day, uttered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL]:

That means that having the property there, having developed it, if two companies offer the same thing, the Ford Co. should be given the preference. Why is that unfair? I understand that some gentlemen say it is unfair, but I can not see that it is unfair.

And it is not, and this amendment should be defeated.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 95, noes 7.

So the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 18. In addition to any other remedies that may be possessed by the United States, and as a further method of procedure in the event of the violation of any of the terms of this proposal or any contracts made in furtherance of its terms, the company agrees that the Attorney General may, upon the request of the Secretary of War, institute proceedings in equity in the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Alabama for the purpose of canceling and terminating the lease of Dam No. 2 or Dam No. 3, or both of them, because of such violation or for the purpose of remedying or correcting by injunction, mandamus, or other process, any act of commission or omission in violation of the terms of this proposal or any contract made in furtherance thereof.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. After listening to the reading of section 18, I am thoroughly convinced that we made a mistake when we adopted the Begg-Wingo amendment. Section 18 gives the Government every remedy necessary to forfeit the contract or contracts under legal procedure, for any violation, no matter what it may be. It seems to me that the amendment adopted on Saturday makes impossible the investment of any money by anybody in the development of Muscle Shoals. It leaves them at the mercy of the Government or some agent of the Government, it may be some clerk of the Government, who may say that they have violated some trivial feature of the contract. Personally, I hope that when this question comes up in the House we will get a separate vote upon the amendment and eliminate it from the bill.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. STEVENSON. Page 15, line 9, after the word "proceedings" strike out the words "in equity."

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, it is very plain what this should do. The district court of the United States has both law and equity powers. The section here provides for the invoking of both law and equity powers, to wit, injunction, which is an equity power, and mandamus, which is a law power, yet if the words "in equity" are left there, the jurisdiction of the district court will be confined to equity powers, and you will have tied the Government to the exercise only of the equity powers of the district court. This is merely to give the Government all the power that the district court of the United States has, which it can exercise. As I understand it, the amendment is agreeable to the committee on both sides of the House.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I have great respect for the business judgment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], but I do not think he will fall out with me if I say that I have not much respect for his judgment on the legal effect of words, because he is not a lawyer. I want to point out to the gentleman that he said that under the amendment we adopted on Saturday some clerk might do this or that. He is wrong.

Mr. MADDEN. I said that the company might be left at the mercy of a clerk, possibly.

Mr. WINGO. Very well. He says that for some immaterial violation, some trivial violation—is not that the language that the gentleman used?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Why, if the gentleman will read the decisions, or if he will read one single decision, of the courts on the question of forfeiture he will find running through all of them the idea that you can not have a forfeiture upon a trivial violation. It must be a substantial violation, some substantial agreement in the contract, and not some incidental, collateral, or trivial part of the contract.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Does the gentleman hold that we should not attempt to amend this bill by striking out a single word?

Mr. WINGO. Oh, with all due respect for my good friend, I may assure him that I am not in a state of political cowardice where I will surrender my judgment upon a business proposition or on the law in order to hold my seat on the floor of this House. But if I should ever sink to that low depth, I think and I know that my own constituents will have enough intelligence to replace me with somebody who will at least have enough courage to vote for his honest convictions and judgment on this floor. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I regret I can not yield. I want to present the proposition.

Remember, I accepted the Begg amendment under protest on account of some provisions in it. But I was told by these self-constituted Ford representatives on the floor that Ford's representatives had agreed to take the Begg amendment, and "for God's sake keep your amendment off." When they said that to me I knew they had not read the law and did not understand that my restriction is less than the Begg restriction; and I suggested, as you will see on page 3994 of the RECORD, the provision that ought to cover this question.

I am willing to go further than that if you will admit what, as every lawyer admits, is right. If you accept this proposition here, I will help you beat the Begg amendment. I am not going to stand here through political cowardice and fail to try to put in here what every court says must appear affirmatively and is never presumed. [Applause.] I am willing to accept this kind of a compromise and it is as far as I will go, and mark my prediction: Some such provision must be in this bill before it will ever become a law. You give any cornfield lawyer five minutes' time to sit down with Henry Ford and his best attorneys, and after it is explained to them Henry Ford and his best attorneys will say, "That is fair and I will agree to it, and it is less restrictive than some other provisions of the bill."

This is my suggestion, and I will ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] to listen to this:

A compliance by the company with the requirements of this act with reference to the manufacture of nitrate and maintaining nitrate plant No. 2 in its present state of readiness or its equivalent for immediate operation in the manufacture of materials necessary in time of war for the production of explosives, except as it may be prevented by reconstruction of the plant itself, or by war, strikes, accidents, fires, or other causes beyond its control, shall constitute conditions subsequent upon which the right of the company shall depend, and a failure to substantially meet such conditions, or either of them, shall give the United States, in addition to any other right it may have, the right, by proper action in a court of competent jurisdiction, to recapture said nitrate plant No. 2.

Note this: "Shall give the United States." How? Not by executive action, or action by a minor clerk, but the right by proper action in any court of competent jurisdiction to recapture the property in question.

Is not Mr. Ford willing to do that? As a believer in Henry Ford, I deny that he will oppose such a safeguard. If anybody denies that, I call on him to produce his authority, because I believe Henry Ford is sincere, and when he is dead and gone if the company that succeeds to his rights fails to comply with these two material propositions I know, having faith in his integrity, that he would say, "Certainly the United States Government should have the right to go into court and show that the company was refusing in a substantial way to carry out my agreement."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINGO. If the company failed to comply substantially on these two major propositions, why should not the Government have the right to reenter and recapture the property? The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] said you could not float the bonds if such a provision were inserted. Let me tell the gentleman, if that is the way he feels about it——

Mr. MADDEN. I said I would not invest any money in it under such circumstances.

Mr. WINGO. You have a worse provision here than that. You have a provision here to the effect that the covenants shall run with the land. Frankly, if I were representing people in a franchise of that kind I would say, "No; I will not have it." Is not that a cloud upon your title when you invest money? Yet men talk here about restrictions on capital because you give the United States the right to go into court and show that where good faith has not been exercised by this corporation the lease should be forfeited. I say to you, gentlemen, have some courage. Some gentlemen say, "Let us send it to the Senate." I say you are not responsible to the Senate. Let us do the right thing here in the House. Then you can help Henry Ford get Muscle Shoals when you give the Government the right to institute recapture proceedings when it can show bad faith.

Gentlemen, you have got to have something there that will give the people of the United States the right to go into court and seek to recover the plant in the event there is bad faith and if they try to commit a fraud on the Government of the United States. Suppose you went into court and asked for a receiver. I imagine Henry Ford would rather have direct action and keep his property than have some little receiver take it over.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. AYRES. Why limit it to fertilizer alone? Why not limit it to fertilizer and furnishing the power?

Mr. WINGO. There are two major things. They could fall down on payments, and they could fall down on furnishing power to the dam; but as long as they make an honest effort to fulfill the requirements as to the manufacture of fertilizer and keeping the plant ready for war use I am willing to waive any other default, if you hold them down to the fulfillment of the contract with respect to the two big properties turned over to Henry Ford.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I take it from what my good friend the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] has said, and the wording of the amendment which he states he is willing to accept as a compromise, that he in effect admits that the amendment which was adopted on Saturday to this bill, known as the Begg amendment as amended by Mr. WINGO's amendment, is entirely to drastic.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman will permit, I know the gentleman wants to be fair. The gentleman has personal reasons to know that I have made every endeavor to get a compromise. There are some provisions of the Begg amendment I do not want.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am going, I think, to demonstrate that it is entirely too drastic, and I want to appeal to those Members of this House who are sincerely in favor of the acceptance of Mr. Ford's offer to vote that amendment down. [Applause.] Under the terms of this proposal it may require possibly $59,000,000 by way of expenditure before Mr. Ford can begin the manufacture of nitrogen. Is not that true?

Mr. ALMON. That is the investment of himself, not the Government.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And that he will have to go down in his own pocket and spend any such sum as may be needed to put that plant in proper condition so that he can proceed under his agreement to manufacture nitrates.

Mr. BURTON rose.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Excuse me for just a moment. Under the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio as amended by the gentleman from Arkansas, he will not be given a day in court if there is a violation of any condition or any agreement in this entire contract, regardless of the reason or the nature of the violation. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas reads as follows, and this language was put in the Begg amendment, "or failure to comply with any of the other conditions and agreements set out in this act."

Now, gentlemen, I repeat there is no opportunity given Mr. Ford or his company to go into a court and have that court determine as to whether or not there has been any failure to conform to the agreement or the conditions set forth, but under the proclamation of the President of the United States at any time in the next 100 years every dollar he has expended, not only that which he expends to-day but that which he or his company expends to-morrow, can be forfeited. I do not have any personal knowledge of what Mr. Ford will do, but you know that no business man is going to spend millions of dollars under those terms. So I repeat, gentlemen, you who are friendly to the Ford offer, if you want it accepted then do as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] asked you to do when this bill gets to the House, vote down that amendment. Those who are opposed to it, let me appeal to you to face this matter openly and courageously. If you are opposed to it I respect you for voting your convictions, but I want to say, as I have said many times on this floor, this bill ought not to be defeated indirectly by amendments. [Applause.] Those who are opposed to it ought to meet it as it is presented here and not undertake by amendment to defeat the purposes of this legislation. Gentlemen, I repeat that if this amendment is adopted by the House you and every man——

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Knows that no business man would accept such a proposition because no sound business man would invest millions of dollars under those circumstances and those conditions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I ask for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks for two additional minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. In a minute. This says upon the proclamation of the President. What man is going to invest millions of dollars to run through a period of 100 years on the turn of a political wheel? That is what you are asking Mr. Ford to do under this amendment because you leave it to some President to say hereafter whether or not he has violated the terms or conditions of his agreement, and the President's action can not be questioned or attacked in the courts. I say leave it to the courts to enforce the terms of the contract. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WRIGHT] and other gentlemen of the Military Affairs Committee who spoke upon this matter have declared that this bill provides every safeguard necessary to protect the rights of the Government and the people of this country.

Mr. BURTON. What warrant has the gentleman from Tennessee for saying that $59,000,000 must be expended here by Mr. Ford?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Why, the gentleman knows that the plant will have to have many million dollars expended upon it before it will be in a condition to manufacture nitrates.

Mr. BURTON. Two million dollars is the only sum I mentioned in regard to plant No. 2. Fifty-nine million dollars seems to me a tremendous exaggeration. There is no such sum necessary.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I get my authority from some men whom I undertake to say have made a study of the subject. I do not vouch for the figures. The gentleman admits some expenditures would have to be made——

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. That does not affect the argument the gentleman is now making.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Whether it is $59,000,000 or $59,000, no business man is going to put money into a plant down there to-day with the possibility of present and future expenditures being taken from him upon the mere turn of a political wheel and the ipsi dixit of any one man and without right of appeal, even though that man may be the President of the United States. [Applause.]

I have just been handed a telegram from Maj. E. B. Stahlman, one of the South's distinguished citizens and owner and publisher of the Nashville Banner, one of the leading newspapers of the South, and which, as I have heretofore stated, has been conducting a referendum of the citizens of middle Tennessee as to the proper disposition of Muscle Shoals. The telegram reads as follows:

NASHVILLE, TENN., March 10, 1924.

Hon. JOSEPH W. BYRNS, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

Banner ballots up to noon reached 42,678 for Ford, with only a total of 57 for power companies and Government ownership combined. Vote will go over 50,000 by 9 o'clock, when campaign closes. People looking anxiously toward Washington, with confidence in final result. There has never been a battle of ballots fought in the history of Tennessee which indicates such unanimity as this. The sentiment against the associated power companies in the latter's effort to throttle competition and establish a powerful and ruthless monopoly is simply overwhelming. We rejoice in the splendid fight you and your associates are making.

E. B. STAHLMAN.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I sometimes see the humorous side to an excitement regarding a proposition by some attorneys. Now the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], my good friend, has just got through saying that if my amendment went into the provisions of the bill, there was no opportunity to go into court. Why, such an interpretation of my amendment can not be made—if I make a contract of sale with you to pay you anything and stipulate conditions which you must comply with or a forfeiture clause act holds anywhere that decides whether there is a performance of the conditions. Suppose my provision goes in, and the company fails to manufacture for two consecutive years, and the Government of the United States says that he does not perform. Who says he does?

Whose is the deciding voice in the whole matter? The court, and nobody else. All my amendment does, I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], is this: It determines definitely what the judgment shall be in case the United States goes to court and proves the fact—and it does not take an attorney to know that.

If there are any men on this side of the House, or on either side, I do not care how enthusiastic you are for this amendment, if you want to gamble the value of the electric power at Muscle Shoals, with no guaranty that you are going to get it back, I refuse to go along with you.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Yes; for a brief question.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman that section 18 guarantees its return.

Mr. BEGG. I will say to the gentleman that if section 18 guarantees that, then why is the gentleman afraid of my amendment?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That section guarantees it through the courts.

Mr. BEGG. It does not guarantee anything of the kind.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman said his amendment provides for going into court, but there is nothing in the gentleman's amendment which provides that.

Mr. BEGG. There is. Whenever a dispute arises it always goes to a court, and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. But the gentleman's amendment seeks to limit it to the right of going to the President of the United States and not to the court.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I must decline to yield further. It is so simple that it does not take a law student to know that there is no tribunal provided for in my amendment but a court, and the court must be appealed to in order to settle disputes. If the company and the Government should get into a dispute, of course they will go to the courts to settle the dispute and find the fact.

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of this committee, does anybody have any idea at all as to what the value of the electric power at Muscle Shoals might be in 40 years? Suppose I had control of the company 40 years from now and I found that by selling electric power for heating purposes I could double my money over the manufacture of fertilizers; in that event, if I wanted to evade the contract, without this reversal clause of mine in it, it would be the easiest thing in the world to evade it under the strike provision or reconstruction provision, because there is not any time limit in the bill for the rebuilding of that plant. I can start to tear it down for the purpose of reconstructing it and then I can take just as long as I want to take in reconstructing it, and there is not a court in the land that will render any judgment against me because there is no reversal provision in the bill as now drawn.

Now, there is one other phase I would like to present——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEGG. Now, gentlemen, look at this other provision. Suppose the company wants to avoid the contract or does not want to. Through bad management, let us say, the company goes into bankruptcy. If my provision is in the bill, and the company goes into bankruptcy and fails to manufacture fertilizer for two years, the whole property comes back to the Government, where it belongs; but if my provision is not in the bill, the only thing you can do is to go into the market, when that property is put on sale at sheriff's sale, and bid it in, and that is the only recourse the Government has under the law.

Gentlemen, I appeal to the friends of this measure to put in the bill a provision whereby the United States gets it only on condition that the company fails for two consecutive years, and thereby insure the passage of the bill, and also be sure that the rights of the people will be protected, in that there will be a minimum amount of 40,000 tons of fertilizer manufactured annually.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves that all debate on this section——

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's motion was that all debate on this amendment do now close. Was not that the motion made by the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. McKENZIE. There is an amendment pending, offered by the gentleman from South Carolina, striking out the words "in equity" in line 9, page 16, and I simply wish to say I have no objection to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the motion of the gentleman—that all debate on this amendment do now close?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes; on the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to closing debate on the pending amendment? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina, that the words "in equity," in line 9, page 16, be stricken out.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 16, line 13, strike out the words "for the purpose of remedying or correcting."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I think these words in the contract are superfluous and ought to come out, for every attempt that has been made to properly remedy and correct this bill has been voted down, except in one instance, and that one change is now to be rescinded. We learned from one of the greatest characters who ever sat in this House, the great Champ Clark, of Missouri, that when the House gets in a temper such as it is in now you had better not get in front of the steam roller, because if you do you are going to get run over.

There is no chance in the world, with the House in its present temper, to put an amendment in this bill to properly remedy it or to correct it. As I said a moment ago, there has been just one amendment adopted to correct and remedy the one-sided provisions of this bill, and that was the Begg amendment. I supported the Wingo amendment. I thought it was a good one. I then supported the Begg amendment, and I think that is a good one, for it safeguards the people's rights, and I think there are other necessary amendments that ought to be put in the bill if we safeguard the Treasury and protect the people; but the Begg amendment is going to be voted down. Just as soon as you get in the House our anxious friends are going to ask a separate vote on it and the steam roller is going to operate and put it out of the bill, because my colleagues now in the saddle have determined to pass this bill just like it is, without any change whatever. I admire the steam-roller tactics sometimes. In instances when matters of momentous importance are not involved, I can sit back and enjoy the steam-roller process, when the result of it in the mashing out of things does not bring dire calamity upon the people of the United States; but passing this bill as it is now is going to bring great losses and increased financial burdens upon the people in many ways if you keep out all amendments to this bill. I had studied carefully an amendment that should have been adopted to a preceding section of this bill, yet the committee now in charge, who are hurriedly passing this bill through to final passage, would not even give me an opportunity to offer it and have it considered.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I regret that I can not yield now. I had too hard a time getting this five minutes.

You are giving this plant to Mr. Ford for 100 years. Have you ever stopped to think that 100 years is a long, long time, and that many drastic changes can occur in 100 years? Yet in a preceding paragraph, which you have passed without changing, you have not stopped merely at 100 years but you have given this great plant to Henry Ford's corporation, which may change a dozen times in my lifetime and in yours, for an additional term after the 100 years. You have given it to him for all eternity under the preceding clause in this contract.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield for just a question?

Mr. BLANTON. I can not keep from yielding to my insistent friend from New York.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman just said that the Begg amendment would be voted down in the House.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the wise gentleman from New York believe that?

Mr. SNYDER. I believe it, but it can not be done unless a great many men on that side reverse their position.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, when you have the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] come in here and say that we are going to vote it down, and when you have our friends here in mass on this side saying that, you can not keep it from being voted down to save your life. [Applause.]

Mr. SNYDER. You will find those on this side who voted for the Begg amendment voting for it in the House.

Mr. BLANTON. I doubt it. I have seen them change too many times under the dictation and lash of the leaders. They will not stand up.

Mr. SNYDER. They will this time.

Mr. BLANTON. They will not stand up when the leader comes in and tells them how they should vote. That is what I have seen since I have been in this House, and I have learned, just like great Champ Clark used to tell us, that when the House is in this kind of a mood not to get in the way of the steam roller, and I am keeping out of its way. I am safe, however, in using this five minutes, and I want to say that in spite of the steam roller I am going to vote to sustain the Begg amendment. [Applause.] I wish we could sustain the Wingo amendment. I am more concerned in protecting the rights of the people than in voting to accept this contract without changing the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. WEFALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that I had arranged to offer an amendment in line 14, and five minutes is all the time I care to have.

Mr. JAMES. Then I will make it 15 minutes; 5 minutes for the gentleman who now has the floor, 5 minutes for the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO], and 5 minutes for the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE].

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield for the purpose of the motion?

Mr. WEFALD. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. WEFALD. Mr. Chairman, I do not like to disagree with my Democratic friends. I have voted with them on most of the important propositions that have so far come before the House, but I can not vote with them on this proposition. I do not think that if Henry Ford comes before this Congress as a special friend of the farmer that debate ought to be choked off here at this time.

I rise now to reply to the statement or the charge that was made by the chairman in charge of the bill when he said he could not understand how a man who represented a farming constituency, like I do, could knowingly or unknowingly do the bidding of the power trusts. I absolutely resent a charge of that kind. If he and every other man in this House would be so absolutely adamant against influence by power companies or any other big corporations as I am, there would be no danger about the legislation that will be passed here. [Applause.]

If I should know that by turning down the offer of Henry Ford this project would go to the Alabama Power Co., then I would vote for the Ford proposition, but I want this property held in the interest and in the hands of the United States. When I made a reference to the Teapot Dome scandal I did that for this reason: I think it would be a bigger calamity if we now should turn this valuable national resource over to a private individual than anything that has been done in the Teapot Dome scandal.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEFALD. When the Teapot Dome is drained the Tennessee River will flow on for years and years, and, as far as I am concerned, I would vote to hang every man that is involved in the Teapot Dome scandal. That ought to clear me on that score.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEFALD. I can not yield just yet.

We have heard much said about the Alabama Power Co. in this debate that is not very complimentary. I have heard it stated also that the powerful Mellon interests own the power rights on the same river above Muscle Shoals. For that reason it would seem that for the time being it would be a good thing to turn this property over to Mr. Ford; benefit would perhaps come quicker to the South, to Alabama and the surrounding States in the activity that would follow in the foot steps of Mr. Ford. But Mr. Ford is the greatest financial genius the world has ever seen, and as such he may easily become our most dangerous citizen; he may, if he gets this great gift, stand out for a while against both the Alabama Power Co. and the Mellon interests, but he may join hands with them, he may absorb them, and then where would we be?

I ask, Would not the interests of this country in all respects be safer in the hands of Uncle Sam when he retains full ownership and control over this great resource? Would not the interests of Alabama and of the whole South be safer that way?

The more I study this contract, the more one-sided I find it to be. Could it have been amended in only one or two respects I would have voted for the bill. If the time this contract is to run could have been cut down to 50 years I should perhaps, against many of my fears, have voted for the bill. But a hundred years is too long a time to give anyone the undisputed right to exploitation. No other country in the world now makes contracts of this kind for this length of time. Could a provision have been written into the bill that would have been any kind of a guaranty of a reasonable price that the farmers would have to pay for what products Mr. Ford will sell them I might have voted for the bill, even though it violates my principles of public ownership. But it was evident that even the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill knew nothing of what the price guaranty in the bill meant when my amendment to reduce the guaranteed net profit was proposed. I am astonished that the representatives of the people in this House will vote a concession to a private individual for a term of a hundred years, write a profit-guaranty clause into the bill, and not one single man in this House can say what that profit clause means. The bill states that he shall be entitled to 8 per cent net profit, but it may turn out to be 150 per cent. This contract may become more profitable to Henry Ford than will be the Teapot Dome to those that got their hands on that property. The Teapot Dome may be recovered; we are doing business here so that Muscle Shoals will not be recovered after we have once given it away. I do not want to be a party to this gift contract.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the House is in the mood indicated by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]; but, on the contrary, is in a deliberative mood and perfectly able to pass on the question suggested. Without regard to the other features of the bill, without regard to the merits of the bill otherwise, I believe that the proposition is beyond contest—that if the Begg amendment standing alone should be adopted, or the Begg amendment modified by the Wingo suggestion should be adopted, Mr. Ford would be perfectly justified in declining to enter into the transaction, and he would be very foolish to enter into it.

Now, let us see what the Begg amendment does: It declares that if there is a default in respect to paragraph 1 of section 14, upon that default being brought to the attention of the President he can issue his proclamation and reclaim the ownership of the property. That, in spite of what my friend Mr. BEGG says, is the effect of what he desires the House to do.

When the President makes his proclamation, how can any court restrain him? Is there any court process to which he can be subjected? We all know that there is not. Forthwith, as soon as the President makes his proclamation to the country, the entire business will cease; Mr. Ford and his successors will be out of the situation. Every activity will be discontinued that is contemplated by the bill; all of it fades out of the picture.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. The reason I asked the gentleman to yield is because I believe the gentleman is in error. How does the gentleman interpret the language of the amendment that if the company fails for two consecutive years then and in that event he forfeits it to the Government, provided the Government options to take it, and the Government's option to take it is ended by proclamation?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Then, in that event, how is that event to be ascertained if not through a court?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. There is nothing in the amendment that says that the President's action shall depend on court action. The President's action depends altogether on the opinion of the President, which may be a whimsical opinion, as far as we know.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. I believe the gentleman has gone astray in his thinking at that point. How can the President issue a proclamation indicating that that Government chooses to exercise its option before the event has been ascertained?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The event is within the province of the President himself to ascertain.

Mr. BEGG. Oh, the gentleman is in error.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. It is so substantially written in the amendment. The President need not consult a single human being; he can use his own judgment in the matter. He can use his own judgment and can declare by proclamation that the contracts are at an end.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I will.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Let us suppose that in 10 or 15 years we had a President who believes in Government ownership. Then, for any little default, could he issue his proclamation?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Without reflecting, any President who is or may hereafter be in office, we all perfectly realize, unless we misunderstand the English language as written in the Begg amendment, that if it is adopted the power will rest wholly and exclusively with the Chief Executive to terminate the contracts. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WINGO: Page 16, line 14, after the word "mandamus," insert the words "recapture proceedings."

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], as well as of the committee, to a colloquy which occurred less than 15 minutes ago between the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], in which the latter stated that under section 18 the Government had a right to institute recapture proceedings.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I said the Government had the necessary right to protect the United States.

Mr. WINGO. Yes; but the specific proposition was the recapture proceedings. The gentleman said it had that right. Does the gentleman believe that it has that right under section 18?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The Government has a right to declare the contract forfeited.

Mr. WINGO. In other words, if the Government has the right to declare the contract forfeited, then it has the right to institute recapture proceedings?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. So that the only objection the gentleman can offer to my amendment is that it is surplus language?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It says here—or other process——

Mr. WINGO. Oh, that is the point; the gentleman is in error. I want to do what he says the Government has the right to do. Every lawyer here knows that the courts have from time to time declared—and I now challenge any lawyer to rise in his place and contradict me—that the right of forfeiture, or, as is more frequently said, the right of reversion, never exists in the grantor unless it is specifically reserved. Is there any lawyer who contradicts that?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman contradict that?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I do not.

Mr. WINGO. Then I decline to yield at this point. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] says that under section 18 of the bill the Government has the right to institute forfeiture proceedings. There is not a lawyer here who would risk his reputation as a lawyer and say that without a specific provision for recapture here the Government can institute recapture proceedings. If there is a lawyer here who wants to do that, I want him to stand up in his place now.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say this——

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman challenge my statement?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I want——

Mr. WINGO. Then I shall not yield. If the gentleman challenges my statement, all right.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. But the gentleman makes a statement that calls for a categorical answer that would not be illuminating to him or to anyone else.

Mr. WINGO. Oh, yes it would, because my friend is a good lawyer, and he forgets his usual calm demeanor when he does this, and I am not going to fall out with him. My question calls for a categorical answer. Have not the courts held in a long line of decisions that the right of recapture does not exist in the grantor except by express provision or by necessary implication?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I will answer the gentleman——

Mr. WINGO. Oh, let the gentleman answer yes or no.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I shall not do that.

Mr. WINGO. I shall leave it to the lawyers present whether or not that is not true. In a very late decision the Supreme Court denied the right of South Carolina to recapture a canal, because it said that the right to reentry or reversion is not to be presumed but must appear affirmatively in the grant. The gentleman says that this body is in a deliberative state of mind. It is not. If the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] was right, then by my amendment I am not giving any right not now in the bill but only the right to maintain an action in recapture proceedings, and if they have not that right I want to give them that right. I shall test whether or not this is a deliberative body. If the Government has the right to go into court in a recapture proceeding, what is the objection to plainly saying here in enumerating the court processes that the Government may have the right to resort to recapture proceedings? That will test your sincerity; that will test your faith in your theory. Vote against my proposition and you announce that you are insincere or that you do not know what you are talking about.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McKENZIE) there were—ayes 45, noes 89.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 16, line 17, amend by inserting the following:

"SEC. 19. The Gorgas steam plant and transmission line having been sold by the United States, and Henry Ford having included said steam plant and transmission line in his offer of May 31, 1922 (as found in section 12 and subsection (d) of section 11 of said offer), in order to provide a substitute steam plant the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to acquire by purchase or condemnation a suitable site for a steam power plant to be located at or near Lock and Dam No. 17, Black Warrior River, Ala., together with a strip of land 100 feet wide to serve as a right of way between said steam power plant and nitrate plant No. 2, Muscle Shoals, Ala., with connection to Waco Quarry, near Russellville, Ala.

"The Secretary of War is further authorized and directed to contract with Henry Ford or the company to be incorporated by him for the construction at cost of a steam power plant having a generating capacity of approximately 30,000 kilowatt (40,000 horsepower), a transformer substation of similar capacity and a transmission line of suitable design and capacity connecting said steam power plant with nitrate plant No. 2 and the Waco Quarry, all under the supervision of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army. The plans and specifications for said power plant, substation, and transmission line shall be prepared by Henry Ford, or the company to be incorporated by him, and approved by the Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

"The expenditures authorized to be made for all purposes under this section shall not exceed a total of $3,472,487.25."

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the committee amendment. This amendment proposes to appropriate three million four hundred and seventy thousand and odd dollars for private purposes. That is a very questionable proceeding. It not only does that, but in adopting the amendment we will establish a new principle in Government, so far as I know, and that is the right of the Government to condemn property, to take it from one private citizen and give it to another private citizen. That goes further than the Soviet State of Russia in the violation of private property. They take property for the use of the State, but you are taking property from one citizen and giving it to another. Where is your right of private ownership of property when you pass an amendment like that?

Mr. Chairman, there is a history to this Gorgas plant, and I want to tell you that the history of the bill is largely written around the Gorgas plant. I was on a committee which was sent by this Congress to investigate Muscle Shoals, and at the same time the great Committee on Agriculture of the Senate went to Muscle Shoals.

The very first day we got there we started in to investigate, and it took us an entire day to get down to see the Gorgas plant. When we got there we found we were 80 miles away from Muscle Shoals, over some hills and mountains, on another watershed, and there we saw a great plant, and every piece of real estate there belongs to the Alabama Power Co. You could not find where the Government had any rights at all to take that property and give it to another. There was not a member of the committee of the House or of the committee of the Senate but agreed that the demand of Henry Ford for the Gorgas plant should be withdrawn, and the local committee and everybody agreed to that. That night we asked them if they could not get Henry Ford to withdraw that; that we considered it immoral and unworthy of us to ask the Alabama Power Co. to give up their great plant to Henry Ford. They said yes; that they would see it was withdrawn. They sent a wire to Henry Ford that night, and the answer came back, as I understand it, from Henry Ford, in response to their request that he withdraw his demand for the Gorgas plant, that whenever he had anything new to offer he would let us hear from him. From that minute I have doubted the sincerity and the honesty of purpose of Henry Ford, because it is not honest to covet another man's property. That property belongs to the Alabama Power Co. Their plant was there before the war and all we had was an addition to their plant, all located on their land. Fortunately when the matter came up in committee there was one gentleman who agreed with me. That gentleman was the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE].

Mr. ALLGOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I have not the time. A very peculiar situation was created in the Committee on Military Affairs. There were 11 gentlemen who wanted to make a contract with Henry Ford and there were 10 who were practically opposed to doing so.

And now some gentlemen have raised the question of a man's sincerity of purpose because his record is not clear. Well, I do not charge anything, but I call the attention of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES], who made a speech the other day calling in question my record—I call attention to this, that the gentleman from Michigan was one of nine gentlemen——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I ask that I may have five minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman from Michigan was one of nine who voted to report the bill out of the committee, and immediately set to work to file a minority report. Talk about a record! That was a remarkable record that he made. I do not call any gentleman in question. It was a parliamentary situation that developed. It is all right, but it shows when you make a record you are not always consistent with your former record.

Mr. WURZBACH. If the gentleman will allow me to say it, I think the gentleman is mistaken. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES] and myself were the two Members on the Republican side who voted with the Democratic members of the committee and favored the acceptance of the Ford offer with the Gorgas plan, and I think the gentleman is a little mistaken in regard to the attitude of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. There were nine——

Mr. WURZBACH. There were two Republicans.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I did not say how many; I said there were nine. I did not mention any party at all.

Mr. WURZBACH. I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly not. There were 11, and there were 2 who did not agree to the report.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If the gentleman will give me more time.

Mr. McKENZIE. Did not the gentleman from Iowa have it in his power at that time to kill the whole Ford proposition?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not think so, any more than the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. McKENZIE. If the gentleman voted with the 10——

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I did not ask to kill the Ford offer. I do not ask for it to-day. I reserved the right to amend the bill, and that is all I am asking you to do. I can write a better bill and one that Henry Ford will accept. [Applause.] I do not believe Henry Ford will ever accept the bill that will come from the two Houses. Now, my friends, as I say, you are appropriating $3,400,000 there to a private citizen out of the Treasury of the United States, and when you do it you are getting $1,600,000 for over $80,000,000 worth of property. My friends, you have not heard the last of that bill. You will hear more of it.

Not only that, you are giving the hydroelectric power to Henry Ford that, as the former Secretary of War, Newton D. Baker, says is a gold mine; yes; a gold mine; and that is everlasting and increasing in value each year. You are turning that over to Henry Ford. You are giving him $80,000,000 worth of property for less than $1,500,000 in annual installments running into five years. You are giving him, as I have said, the hydroelectric power for $680,000 a year less than you are offered to-day for that power. Now, how are you going to justify future criticism of bureaus when they do things you think are wrong when you yourselves are establishing the most colossal example of wastefulness, stupidity, and incompetency in the House of Representatives in all the history of the world. [Applause.]

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I offer a perfecting amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the Chair should recognize the gentleman opposed to the amendment.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman from Michigan permit me to inquire if we can not make some agreement as to time on this matter? I suggest, as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] has already had 10 minutes, that debate end in 25 minutes, 15 minutes on our side and 10 on the other side.

Mr. BURTON. I desire between 5 and 10 minutes on this amendment myself; it is possible I may not take more than 5 minutes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Well, say 35 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that all debate upon this amendment and all amendments thereto close in——

Mr. McKENZIE. Thirty-five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Thirty-five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] has told the House about some things which took place in our committee, and I will tell a few more.

When the Ford offer was before our committee two years ago, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORIN], the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL], the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FROTHINGHAM], and others voted for every amendment to cripple the Ford offer.

They also voted with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] to eliminate the Gorgas plant from the offer of Mr. Ford.

We supposed, of course, that all of these gentlemen would then vote to report out the Ford offer as they had amended it, but all of them voted against reporting out the same so that the House could consider it.

I then stated to the committee that the bill would die in the committee unless nine of us voted to report out a bill that we did not believe in and that it would be defeated by a vote of 19 to 2, the two being the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] and his ally at that time, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL]. I then suggested to those that were in favor of the Ford offer in its entirety that we vote with the two to report out the bill but that it be understood that we reserved the right to put up a fight on the floor to put the item for the Gorgas plant back in the bill. The vote was taken and by a vote of 11 to 10 was reported out. We reserved the right to file a minority report stating our views on the Gorgas plant and this report was filed with the House.

As I stated the other day, if the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] had been against the Ford offer at that time it would have died in the committee by a vote of 11 to 10, but he was as enthusiastic a man as there was on the committee.

This time we again find the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORIN] and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FROTHINGHAM] voting for every amendment, good or bad, and this time they are joined by their former enemy, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

I do not expect the ones that opposed it last time to vote for it this time, but I have hopes of some others that have voted for every amendment to cripple the offer.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] was for the Ford offer in its entirety, then he was for the offer with the exception of the Gorgas plant, then he saw some good things in the cost-plus offer of Mr. Engstrum, then he introduced a bill which seemed to indicate that he thought the matter should be turned over to the Secretary of War. At the beginning of this session his "mind was open" but not clear on the Ford offer. A little later he was aginst it, then he was in favor of the offer of the power companies and introduced several bills for them, then he seemed to veer to the Hooker offer, but the last few days he seems to have another change in heart, and now appears to favor Government operation and ownership.

However, there are several hours before we vote and I expect the colleague to make another lightning change. I would not be surprised when the band wagon pulls out soon to see the gentleman from Iowa make a flying leap for the wagon, climb into the front sent, lay his head on the shoulder of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE], and whisper, like a prodigal son returned to his first home, "Back home again, John." [Applause.]

Mr. HILL of Maryland rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, we are nearing the end of one of the most actual and practical debates we have had for some time in the House of Representatives. It may not be a debate that has changed many votes, but I think it is a debate which has created a record which some portions of the American people may study with profit at some time in the future.

We have now arrived at that portion of the bill, section 19, in which the majority of the Committee on Military Affairs has offered an amendment to take out of the Treasury of the United States in good cold cash $3,450,487.25 in order to gild the lily. Not satisfied with turning over all the other resources to Henry Ford and to the imperial crown prince, Edsel Ford, of World War reputation, they now propose to build them a steam plant on the Warrior River, nearly 100 miles away. This is an amendment offered by the majority of the committee.

Under the parliamentary situation, therefore, it is the duty of those of us who oppose this unnecessary, gratuitous, and entirely absurd expenditure of public money for the benefit of Henry Ford to vote against this amendment.

When the committee went down to Muscle Shoals and investigated this steam plant we found that what the Government owned was an addition to an existing steam plant built before the World War by the Alabama Power Co., which addition was to furnish additional power for nitrate plant No. 2 at Muscle Shoals for war needs. This steam plant was afterwards sold by the United States.

Now section 19 provides for building by the United States Government, for the Ford interests, a new steam plant 90 miles from Muscle Shoals, and new transmission lines 90 miles long at a cost in cash of nearly $3,500,000. The reason alleged for this expenditure of United States cash in the Treasury is that the Gorgas plant was used as a part of the Muscle Shoals system during the war, although the Gorgas plant was on the Warrior River, nearly 100 miles away from the Muscle Shoals plant. I desire particularly to call your attention to section 19, which is as follows:

SEC. 19. The Gorgas steam plant and transmission line having been sold by the United States, and Henry Ford having included said steam plant and transmission line in his offer of May 31, 1922 (as found in section 12 and in subsection (d) of section 11 of said offer), in order to provide a substitute steam plant the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to acquire by purchase or condemnation a suitable site for a steam power plant, to be located at or near Lock and Dam No. 17, Black Warrior River, Ala., together with a strip of land 100 feet wide to serve as a right of way between said steam power plant and nitrate plant No. 2, Muscle Shoals, Ala., with connection to Waco Quarry near Russellville, Ala.

The Secretary of War is further authorized and directed to contract with Henry Ford or the company to be incorporated by him for the construction at cost of a steam power plant having a generating capacity of approximately 30,000 kilowatt (40,000 horsepower), a transformer substation of similar capacity, and a transmission line of suitable design and capacity connecting said steam power plant with nitrate plant No. 2 and the Waco Quarry, all under the supervision of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army. The plans and specifications for said power plant, substation, and transmission line shall be prepared by Henry Ford, or the company to be incorporated by him, and approved by the Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

The expenditure authorized to be made for all purposes under this section shall not exceed a total of $3,472,487.25.

Now, gentlemen, we are nearing a final vote on this bill. The Muscle Shoals proposition was created for the production of nitrates in time of war and fertilizer in time of peace. The Secretary of War, in a letter which I put into the RECORD on Saturday, states that the nitrate plant No. 2, plus the Waco Quarry, is sufficient at the present time to equip two field armies of 1,000,000 men if the need arises. You propose to turn those propositions over to the Henry Ford corporation, later to be created. That is dealing with existing property of the United States. But, gentlemen, there is not even a justifiable pretense under section 19 of aiding that corporation to obtain fertilizer for the farmer, or a justifiable pretense of aiding it in obtaining nitrate in time of war and on no possible pretense can you substantiate the turning over of a brand new plant to be built by the Government with cash money costing $3,500,000 to the Ford interests, in addition to all the remainder that you are giving them by this bill. I wish to express this hope to the committee that they will vote against the committee amendment adding section 19, that they will not place in this bill section 19, which adds an additional expenditure of $3,500,000 to the cost to be incurred. [Applause.]

The Gorgas plant was sold under terms of the contract under which it was built. The following most excellent report from the Manufacturers Record is quite full and worthy of your consideration. It shows what the Government obtained from the sale of the Gorgas plant as compared with what it got from other war plants.

Here is the article:

[Reprinted from Manufacturers' Record, Baltimore, Md., issue October 4, 1923.]

THE MUSCLE SHOALS SITUATION AND THE SALE OF THE GORGAS PLANT.

The action of the Secretary of War in selling to the Alabama Power Co., as reported in the Manufacturers' Record last week, the Gorgas plant, about which there has been so much discussion, for $3,472,487.25 cash, after due notice to Mr. Henry Ford had been given by the Secretary, should close to the credit of the Government an issue which has been entirely too much confused.

From the very first discussion of Mr. Ford's offer in regard to Muscle Shoals, which included the Gorgas plant, the Manufacturers' Record took the position that whatever legal or moral rights might exist under any contract with the Government should be rigidly observed by the Government. This Government can not afford, even for any imaginary benefit, however great it might be, to dishonor its own contracts or to do anything which legally and ethically would not be upheld in the highest courts of justice.

The Government and the Alabama Power Co. entered into a contract during the war; the terms of that contract were plain. At that time the contract was considered to be of very great value to the Government. Mr. Henry Ford, in endeavoring to secure at an absurdly low price the control of the Muscle Shoals situation on a 100-year contract, sought to include in the purchase the Gorgas steam plant, which neither legally nor morally could the Government have granted, except with the permission of the second party to the contract, the Alabama Power Co.

In closing the contract with the Alabama Power Co. the Secretary of War has stood for integrity of contracts, and that is worth infinitely more to the people of this country than would have been the purchase of the entire Muscle Shoals situation by Mr. Henry Ford. With all due respect to Mr. Ford's phenomenal industrial development operations, and to his amazing genius as a business man, the Manufacturers' Record would far prefer that he should never come into the South for the establishment of a plant than that his coming should be based on the violation by the Government of legal and moral obligations. Maintenance of honor in the observance of a contract by the Government, as by individuals, is worth far more to national honor, and ultimately national wealth, than a "short cut" to supposed wealth by violating contracts.

The original cost of the Gorgas plant, built during the high prices of war times, was, as reported by the Government, about $4,750,000. Based on the advice of experts from the Ordnance Department and the Federal Power Commission in determining a fair value of the properties as they stand, the Alabama Power Co. and the Government agreed to a selling price of $3,472,487.25, an exceptionally small loss to the Government on the sale of a war plant in contrast with the tremendous losses made in the sale of other plants.

In connection with the small loss on the sale of this plant it is of interest to study a report recently issued by the Government showing the original cost and the sale price of many war properties. In a great many cases this report shows that the cost of properties was unknown when sales were effected. The report gives the following details:

Some of the losses reported are staggering in amount. For instance, there was one property in North Carolina which cost $221,618, which sold for $740; one property in Otisville, N. Y., costing $1,650,723, sold for $67,300; one property in Georgia, costing $1,563,000, sold for $2,600. A Michigan property, costing $12,330,000, sold for $584,000. An Iowa property, costing $5,867,000, sold for $251,000. Camp Upton, in New York, sold for $281,000, while Camp Lee, in Virginia, costing $12,000,000, sold for $241,948; and Camp Dodge, $2,832,000, sold for $35,808.

The Nitro (W. Va.) plant costing $60,000,000 sold for $8,551,000, and a Tennessee plant costing $86,000,000 sold for $3,455,000.

In the light of such figures as these, the price secured by the Government for the Gorgas plant is remarkably high, and it is to the credit of the purchasing company that it was willing to abide by the judgment of Government experts in taking it at that price.

If Mr. Henry Ford, or any other individual, or any company desires to secure the Muscle Shoals development, no one should be allowed to do so on any such terms as Mr. Ford has thus far proposed. The inherent value of Muscle Shoals, one of nature's great wonders, an asset of immense value to the entire country, should not be parted with by the National Government except at a price somewhat commensurate with its real value. Nor should Mr. Ford be permitted to secure such a property on any financial basis other than backing it with his entire fortune or with a sufficient amount of capital to protect the Government and the country to the extreme. His suggestion of a $10,000,000 company to take over Muscle Shoals is in itself, and ought to be so regarded, absurd.

The same thing is true as to any other prospective purchaser. No company should be allowed to secure control of Muscle Shoals except on a financial basis sufficiently strong to safeguard the interests of the Nation of a property so immeasurably valuable. Nor should any control be given for more than 50 years, though Mr. Ford demanded 100 years. Far better would it be for the Government, instead of selling on a low basis of value, to maintain its ownership of that property and utilize it in one way or another for the safeguarding of the interests of the country by the production of nitrates in time of peace as well as in time of war.

There has been a good deal said about the alleged selfishness of the power companies making the offer represented by the Hull bill, now before the House. To me nothing can be more preposterous than the proposal of section 19 of the McKenzie bill to spend $3,472,487.25 of good, present, actual Government cash to build for the Ford interest a steam power plant, nearly 100 miles away from Muscle Shoals that has no possible relation to the Muscle Shoals water power or nitrate plants, except that during the war the Gorgas plant furnished extra power from the Alabama Power Co. to nitrate plant No. 2.

It will be of interest for you gentlemen to note what Secretary Baker said during the war about the Alabama Power Co. I also want you to hear the statement of that company and of the other two power companies as to the Gorgas plant.

Here is a letter I received to-day:

MARCH 7, 1924.

Hon. JOHN PHILIP HILL, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In view of certain statements which have been made regarding two of the power companies joining in the offer for the Muscle Shoals property, I beg to call your attention to the following facts:

1. In 1918 the Alabama Power Co. owned the Muscle Shoals water-power sites. The Secretary of War desired to obtain immediate title to the Wilson site, so that the construction could proceed as a part of the program to obtain war nitrates. After some discussion, the board of directors of the Alabama Power Co. agreed to donate this property to the United States in order that the war emergency might be quickly met, the company's letter, dated February 18, 1918, saying:

> "In times like these, however, such considerations must be secondary to the urgent needs of the Nation to secure these properties immediately for the carrying out of the Government project for the production of war nitrates, and we have accordingly determined to donate our lands to the Government for this purpose."

Mr. Baker, the Secretary of War, wrote the company February 20, 1918, accepting the donation and acknowledging "with thanks the company's generous and public-spirited action." (House hearings, pp. 670–671.) Copies of letters are attached. It was shown that these properties donated cost the company about $500,000, for which the company received the Government's voucher for $1. It was further shown that the power company still owns the properties at dam site No. 3, which Mr. Ford desires the Government to develop for his use.

2. Under a contract with the Government in 1918 an addition was made to the Alabama Power Co.'s Warrior steam plant to enable the Government to obtain power at Muscle Shoals before the completion of the steam and water-power plants in that locality. The company's plant was located about 90 miles south of Muscle Shoals. For this purpose the Government advanced about $4,750,000 and the company constructed an addition to its plant and a transmission line, title to which was retained by the Government. In 1923 the Government's use having long ceased, the company purchased the Government's interest, paying therefor $3,472,487.25, a sum equal to nearly 80 per cent of the Government's war-time investment. The value was fixed by Government officers as the fair value of the Government's property, and the company paid the amount so fixed, thus fully complying in every respect with the contract.

Those who wish to criticize that contract should, therefore, in fairness, state that this contract realized for the Government perhaps the largest sum realized on any war-time contract.

3. Reference has been made by several speakers to litigation in Tennessee against the Tennessee Electric Power Co. Several years ago that company acquired several plants in Tennessee. The purchase was approved by the Tennessee Public Utilities Commission. Afterwards suit was instituted by the Attorney General to forfeit the charters of several of the companies. The chancery court decided against the State and dismissed the bill some time ago, the chancellor declaring:

> "It is difficult to reconcile with reason or simple justice that the State would punish a corporation for acts passed upon and approved by the State's commission."

4. Of the capital employed by the power companies making the Muscle Shoals proposal, more than 90 per cent is owned and held by citizens of the United States, and with reference to the Alabama Power Co., the record shows that at this time about 83 per cent of its securities are held in the United States.

In simple justice to the companies mentioned, may we not ask that you kindly put this statement in the RECORD?

Yours very truly,

ALABAMA POWER CO.,
Birmingham, Ala., February 18, 1918.

Col. C. KELLER,
Corps of Engineers, Office of the Chief of Engineers,
United States Army, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Following the several interviews which I have had with you recently on the subject of the desire of the Government to acquire the Muscle Shoals Hydroelectric Power Co., the dam site, and certain other properties at Muscle Shoals, I have conferred fully not only with the directors of that company but also with the representatives of the security holders of the Alabama Traction, Light & Power Co. (Ltd.). As I believe I explained to you, the last-mentioned company is interested by reason of its stock holdings in Alabama Power Co., which latter company owns the stock of the Muscle Shoals Hydroelectric Power Co.

The properties in question represent a very heavy investment by our company, and have occupied an important position in our plans for securing power for the future. For several years we have worked on plans for ultimately developing these water powers as an integral part of the hydroelectric system which will be required by our companies to meet the needs of the communities which they serve. Much of this work was done by us in collaboration with the Army engineers, looking toward a development in cooperation with the Government on some such plan as was favorably reported on by the Army engineers in House Document No. 1262, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session.

I am adverting briefly to these features, as I judge from the several interviews which I have had with you and with other representatives of the Government that you are fully aware of what the company has done in preparation for the ultimate development of this water power, and I believe you appreciate that it should receive consideration in the distribution of any surplus power not required for the needs of the Government.

From our recent interviews it is obvious that our respective views as to the value of our property and the price which you would agree to pay are quite irreconcilable. As directors of a large public-service corporation, we have always believed that in addition to the development of our water powers at Muscle Shoals being a very valuable and necessary complement to our system throughout the State, the large industrial community which would grow up at Muscle Shoals would add a special value to that power plant. In times like these, however, such considerations must be secondary to the urgent needs of the Nation to secure these properties immediately for the carrying out of the Government project for the production of war nitrates, and we have accordingly determined to donate our lands to the Government for this purpose. I have already given instructions to the company's attorneys for the preparation of the necessary deeds of conveyance.

It is our understanding from you that the Government only desires to acquire the site of Dam No. 2 and adjacent properties, with flowage easement on such of our other properties as may be affected by this development.

I need hardly assure you of the desire of the company to cooperate with the War Department to the fullest extent in placing at your disposition the benefit of all our engineering studies and records relating to the projected development.

I trust that this disposition of the matter meets with your views.

Yours very truly,

JAMES MITCHELL, President.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 20, 1918.

Mr. JAMES MITCHELL,
President Alabama Power Co., Birmingham, Ala.

DEAR SIR: Referring to your letter of the 18th instant, addressed to Colonel Keller, in which you express the willingness of your company to donate to the United States certain properties and flowage easements needed for the proposed Federal power development at Muscle Shoals, I beg to acknowledge with thanks the company's generous and public-spirited action.

The further steps necessary in regard to the matter will be given immediate attention.

Very respectfully,

NEWTON D. BAKER, Secretary of War.

In 1918 the Alabama Power Co. was considered by the Democratic Secretary of War as "generous and public spirited."

To-day Ford is regarded by those who favor this McKenzie bill as "generous and public spirited," but to me section 19 is neither generous or public spirited to the United States. The Ford interests will get enough otherwise by the McKenzie bill, and I hope you will not vote for the proposed amendment and take from the United States Treasury $3,472,487.25 by section 19 of the McKenzie bill. [Applause.]

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I will detain the committee for only a few moments to make an explanation of this matter. I am not a member of the committee, but I am familiar with it.

The Government built at Gorgas, on the Warrior River, a steam plant of 30,000 horsepower during the war. It was built by the Alabama Power Co. at a cost and a fee of about $1,000,000. The Alabama Power Co. had no legal right to it. But during the recess of Congress the Secretary of War sold it to the Alabama Power Co. The Gorgas plant was included in Mr. Ford's offer. It is a material and essential part of his program, and all that this amendment calls for is an expenditure of the money realized on the Gorgas plant in the building of another plant.

Now, gentlemen, this is important. This plant was built at Gorgas, on the Warrior River, because that was in the coal-mining district. If Mr. Ford operates that plant and has this plant on the Warrior, it means a saving of a large amount in freight on coal.

This is commonly called the Madden amendment, and it simply authorizes the War Department to use the money that the Gorgas plant sold for to provide another plant in the same locality. I say and insist, and also urge, that everyone who is in sympathy with the acceptance of the Ford offer should vote for this amendment. This is a committee amendment. I think you understand it, and it is not necessary for me to say more.

I want to take this occasion to say that a vote for the Begg amendment and the Wingo amendment is a vote against the Ford offer. I opposed and voted against both of these amendments. I want everybody to fully understand when we get in the House and we have a separate vote on the Begg and Wingo amendments that if you are in favor of Mr. Ford's offer for Muscle Shoals you should vote against these amendments; their adoption would destroy the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention at this time to the carelessness with which some of these provisions are drawn. On Saturday last I moved to strike out the language on page 10 relating to the reconstruction of the plant itself, which is followed by the words "or by war, strikes, accidents, fires, or other causes beyond its control."

It has been constantly alleged here that the offer of Henry Ford was sacrosanct; that we must follow it exactly; but Henry Ford himself did not ask exemption for time employed in reconstruction of the plant. His demand is set forth on page 27 of the majority report, section 14, in which it is stated that nitrate—> shall be manufactured throughout the lease period, except as it may be prevented by strikes, accidents, fires, or other causes beyond control.

Now, some one has put in here—thrust upon Mr. Ford against his will, and varied from the contract as offered by him—the words "by reconstruction of the plant itself." Really that ought to be explained. I do not believe the gentleman from Illinois having charge of this bill inserted it, but some one has smuggled it in here, and it is a very substantial advantage to Mr. Ford and a very important restriction upon the rights of the Government.

Again I call attention to the fact that this agreement for a profit of 8 per cent—and that has been disclosed in the question I propounded to the gentleman from Illinois—is altogether indefinite. It does not show whether you mean 8 per cent on the value of the property owned by Mr. Ford and utilized for the manufacture of nitrate or not; it does not show whether there must be taken into account the amount he pays as rent on the lease of the water power; it is restricted to the very vague and uncertain expression, "not to exceed 8 per cent of the fair actual annual cost of production thereof." Does that merely mean cost of raw material and labor? What does it mean? The Government would find itself in the teeth of a lawsuit immediately with that uncertainty there.

I call attention to another thing in the very paragraph that is under consideration. There is no express statement in that paragraph or anywhere in the bill that the property substituted for the Gorgas plant is to be turned over to Henry Ford. I think by implication it would be interpreted that such was the clear intention of the bill, but in section 11 there is a specific enumeration of what is to be sold to Mr. Ford, and the new steam plant is not included.

Now, a few words about these Begg and Wingo amendments. I shall be surprised if you vote them out after they have been put into this bill in Committee of the Whole, one of them by a very large majority and with the approval of Mr. MCKENZIE, the Member in charge. I do not think it lies in the mouth of any Member of this House hereafter to talk about monopoly if he votes for this bill at all, but especially will anyone who votes against these amendments be hindered from doing so. The House is asked to grant an unprecedented monopoly. You are giving to Henry Ford an amount of power over and above that required for the manufacture of nitrates which is almost as large as the total amount developed on the American side at Niagara Falls, saying to him, "Use it as you please." You do not ask him to build the dams or the power. The United States builds them for him and leases them to him on terms more favorable than anyone has yet obtained, 4 per cent of the cost since May 31, 1922, disregarding the millions expended before that date. When I introduced an amendment the other day that half of the power—making a beggarly request for half of it—should be distributed upon reasonable terms for the use of the people, it was announced, and honestly, too, by the gentleman from Illinois that this could not be, that Mr. Ford must have it all, to use as he pleases, and you who are talking about the monopoly of the Alabama Power Co., when the proposition was made to put half of that power in competition with that company, in order to keep down their alleged monopoly, voted almost unanimously against it.

How are you going to explain all this? A great deal has been said and papers have been brought in here which look like the signs of the zodiac or like an astrological chart, to show what a wicked concern the Alabama Power Co. is, all of which has very little to do with this proposition, but you are refusing to loosen the grip of that monopoly which you so bitterly attack.

Now, gentlemen, if I may give you a word of warning, consider your votes on these amendments. I am opposed to this bill. Perhaps it would be policy for me to say, "Put in the worst provisions possible." I do not believe this will become a law. It does not seem to me possible. Not alone the Senate but the American people will condemn this measure, and if you wish to beat this bill, I say to you frankly, vote out of it in the House those two amendments that you voted for in the Committee of the Whole. I regard them as necessary restrictions although possibly some slight modification should be made in the language. I warn you again against voting them out. The name of every man will appear. We have not heard the last of this bill. In all my service, House or Senate, I have never known a proposition in which a privilege was granted to an individual or a corporation which was so free from restriction, so broad and comprehensive, so strong for the interest of the grantee as this one right here, and thus I have stood against it from the beginning. The House is thinking of giving away a most valuable asset. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House: As I stated three days ago, there is no reason or justification for any Member of this House to vote for or against this proposition under any misapprehension of the facts, and I can not appreciate the continued threats and innuendoes thrown into this debate that we are about to create another Teapot Dome scandal. The bill that is before this House is clearly and plainly drawn in black and white. The hearings are before you. You know what you want to do. You know the proposition you are dealing with and you know whether or not you want to dispose of Muscle Shoals in this manner. I can not understand how it is that these gentlemen now become so alarmed and so much interested in this great property at Muscle Shoals that lay there for 150 years in the life of this Government with nobody having a kind word to say for it; but after the war, and after some investments were made there for war purposes, and after the Government had spent millions of dollars fixing it so that perhaps somebody might take hold of it, we hear a great cry of interest in the project from those who cared but little before.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I can not yield now. I have only five minutes.

We hear a great deal about their interest in Muscle Shoals. Listen. You never heard a criticism of Henry Ford's proposition until the Alabama Power Co. and its allies had gotten hold of the Gorgas plant. They did not want Muscle Shoals. Two years ago they wanted Gorgas plant, and they got it. Not only that, but the Secretary of War advertised broadcast all over this country for somebody to come and take Muscle Shoals off of the hands of this Government, and not a soul answered, except Henry Ford, in all the world, much less the United States. The Alabama Power Co., owned and controlled by Canadian and British capital, knew that Muscle Shoals was there then, because they had been there with their engineers. They did not come to the rescue of the Government, and not a manufacturing company of fertilizer in the land made any offer for Muscle Shoals. They all hooted at the proposition and said Mr. Ford nor anyone else could profitably operate this great project successfully, but now, when they think it is going to be done, they become very much alarmed, and there is where the opposition to this proposition lies. You take out of the opposition to this proposition the organizations of the chemical companies and the manufacturers of fertilizers and the manufacturers of automobiles and the manufacturers of electrical energy, and you would have but little opposition to this bill to-day on the floor of this House. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] talked about section 19 and the right of eminent domain in taking property from one person and giving it to another. My God, the gentleman has not a foot of territory that a railroad runs over in his State that was not taken just as you propose to take this property. Every railroad in his State, under the right of eminent domain, took private property from one man and gave it to another.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield? But they are public utilities and are under regulation, and are not private individuals.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. And this will be under the strong hand of the Congress forever. [Cries of "Oh!" "Oh!"] I understand, of course, that you who are not for this proposition may hoot and you may laugh, but I pity the man upon the floor of this House who does not know that he represents a Government that is sovereign in its capacity and that Henry Ford and no corporation can ever take any public resource or any property of this country and keep it unless he shall operate in accordance with his agreement if the Government does not want him to.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I can not yield. You talk about the Gorgas steam plant. The gentleman knows that the Gorgas steam plant was acquired under a contract by this Government that the Judge Advocate General's office said was null and void, and I want to read to you just what the Attorney General had to say about this contract, and I quote from his opinion, as follows:

> No one can carefully analyze the long and rather complex contract made with this company without being impressed with the harsh and even drastic provisions which it imposes on the Government. When its intricate provisions are closely scrutinized and their full significance realized, it becomes at once apparent that the company lost no opportunity of turning to its own advantage every possible change of circumstances. But however burdensome the agreement may be, the Government on its part must faithfully observe the obligations it assumed if they were in fact authorized by proper statutory power. I feel persuaded, however, that the option to purchase which the contract contains was unauthorized.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the Gorgas steam plant was built on property owned by the Alabama Power Co. It was built, so said the Alabama Power Co., with the understanding that the Government would move the plant off of their property whenever they were notified to do it. They did notify the Government. The result is the plant was sold to the power company. I do not believe it was necessary to sell the plant to the Alabama Power Co. It was sold, however, and sold after Ford had made his bid for the entire plant, and Ford's bid, by the sale of this property, was eliminated.

The people of the United States, or many of them, believe that Ford will develop this property to the advantage of the people, and I am one of those who believe that. If I did not believe it, I would not be here advocating it. There was only one way to make it possible for Ford to develop the property and that was to put him in the same position that he would have been in if the Gorgas plant had not been sold, and I assume the responsibility for the amendment which appears in this bill. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] said that names would appear and that probably scandal would ensue.

He did not make the statement in just those words, but I am not afraid that my name shall appear in what I believe to be the most meritorious proposition that has ever come before the House. [Applause.]

I believe that what we propose is in the interest of the public. I believe more, that Mr. Ford will dedicate every dollar he has to the development of agriculture through this institution. I believe that here we have an opportunity to show our wisdom, and it can not be better shown than by affording an opportunity for Mr. Ford to invest his millions in the development of an institution which will be dedicated to the American people. [Applause.]

The amendment upon which you are about to vote is an essential part of the bill before us. A vote against this amendment is a vote against the development of Muscle Shoals. Those who do not want Muscle Shoals developed should vote against this amendment. Those who want Muscle Shoals developed should vote for the amendment. Those who want this property to be developed for the purpose of manufacturing fertilizer for the American farmer will vote to adopt the amendment of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired, all time has expired, and the question is on the committee amendment as a new section.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, inserting a new section at the end of section 19, on page 17 of the bill, to be known as 19 (a), and to read as follows:

"In order to further promote the manufacture of fertilizer the United States shall erect in connection with said nitrate plants at Sheffield, Ala., a residence to cost not less than $100,000, to be built by an agent of the United States, to be selected by said Henry Ford, and which shall be used by said corporation as a residence for Edsel Ford; there shall be in connection with said residence a suitable flagpole, and on the morning of each day during the residence of said Edsel Ford at said residence"——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the Clerk has read sufficient to show that the amendment is out of order.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I claim that the Clerk should finish the reading of the amendment.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Texas will not make the point of order. This is the acme of the objection to the Ford offer. I think it ought to go in. [Laughter.]

The Clerk continued the reading of the amendment, as follows:

"said Edsel Ford shall raise a flag of the United States upon said flagpole, repeating while doing so, in an audible and vigorous tone, the American Creed of William Tyler Page. In order to amortise the cost of said residence said company shall pay to the United States annually $1.99. In case of destruction of said residence by fire or otherwise the United States, at its own expense, shall promptly rebuild the same. In case of war the United States may have the use of said residence or its equivalent at Detroit, Mich., or elsewhere by paying said company a reasonable rent therefor."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order—we are working under the rules of the House, and I make the point of order that the Clerk has read four times as far as necessary to demonstrate that the amendment is out of order. I ask a ruling as to whether the point of order is good, so that we may have the precedent.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, as a matter of fact no point of order is proper in the middle of an amendment. I think the amendment is germane to the bill, and the gentleman can not interrupt the reading of an amendment on a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Illinois knows better than that. The Clerk has read far enough to show that the amendment is out of order, and I can cite numerous precedents to the Chair to that effect.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the Clerk has read far enough to show that the amendment is not germane, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 19. Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to execute and deliver all necessary deeds of conveyance and to execute on the part of the Government all leases required to carry out the provisions of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 17, line 21, strike out the figures "19" and insert "20," so it will read "Sec. 20."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this in order to make a statement. Some question has arisen as to who wrote the minority report. Some one said that Thomas W. Martin wrote the minority report. I do not know as it is of any great value to the committee, but to keep the record straight I wish to say that the minority report was dictated in my office largely by myself. It was all written in my office, and Thomas W. Martin had nothing to do with it.

I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], who has at various times in the last nine years said something about Muscle Shoals—I think it was in February, 1921, in the consideration of the sundry civil bill, said that he did not want Muscle Shoals developed and, together with some other distinguished Republicans, took the stand that you would never have any value at Muscle Shoals, and that you ought to scrap it at that time. A few minutes ago the gentleman from Illinois said the Gorgas plant was built during the war. The gentleman shows the same amount of knowledge about Muscle Shoals that he has always shown; and that is, he is wrong. The Gorgas plant was not built during the war. The Gorgas plant was built before the war by the Alabama Power Co. on their own land. All the Government ever did was to go down there during the war and make an addition to the Alabama company's plant. You could not move it, because no one—and I examined it very carefully—no one knew where the Government property began and where the Alabama Power Co.'s left off.

Now, you have all had telegrams. In the remaining part of the five minutes left to me I will read some telegrams that I have received, and I have got a bunch of them—over 70 in all—and many more letters:

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., March 8, 1924.

HARRY E. HULL,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

The vicious attacks on the Alabama Power Co. and its president by MADDEN and others are unwarranted, unjust, and unfair to the company and injurious to the welfare and progress of our State. As editor of three Alabama newspapers, and in touch daily with every section of the State, I know that the Alabama Power Co. stands high in the estimation of our people for the magnificent work it is doing. As representative of the people you should challenge these attacks and see to it that your challenge and this telegram is written into the RECORD. I hope you can do this for the fair-minded and loyal citizens of Alabama.

R. B. VAIL.

TALLASSEE, ALA., March 7, 1924.

HARRY E. HULL,
Washington, D. C.:

Your fight for nonacceptance of the Muscle Shoals offer of Henry Ford interests me to the extent that I send this message. Continue your fight. This natural resource of water power should not go to any private interest upon any terms.

DR. ROBERT H. CONER.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment of the gentleman from Iowa will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: At the end of section 20, page 18, line 1, insert the following:

"SEC. 21. The interest on account of lease of Dam No. 2 shall apply to all expenditures and obligations of the Government in connection with said dam which have been incurred since May 31, 1922.

"SEC. 22. The stock of the company to be formed by Henry Ford, referred to in section 1 of this act, shall be controlled after his death by his heirs or by American citizens, and no stock or bonds issued by any company or subsidiary company in connection with the lease of the dams referred to herein or in connection with nitrate plant No. 2, or any substitute therefor or addition supplementary thereto, shall be owned or controlled by any foreign corporation, citizen or subject.

"SEC. 23. All of the contracts, leases, deeds, transfers, and conveyances necessary to effectuate the acceptance of said offer shall be binding upon the United States and jointly and severally upon Henry Ford, his heirs, representatives and assigns, and the company to be incorporated by him, its successors and assigns."

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 18, lines 3 and 4, after the word "dam," in line 3, insert a period and strike out the balance of the line and all of line 4.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I do not want to take up the time of the committee in discussing this amendment. I discussed the same proposition in connection with a similar amendment I offered a day or two ago. The purpose of it is to require Henry Ford to pay interest on the entire investment that the Government has in Dam No. 2, including the $17,000,000 expended by the Government prior to May 21, 1922. In all fairness I submit that interest should be computed on the entire cost of the dam. Even then, as I have previously shown, the actual interest, if computed from the time of the expenditure of Government funds, would amount to less than 3 per cent per annum.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota to the committee amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MADDEN: On page 18, amend section 23 by striking out after the figures "23" all of the section and substituting in lieu thereof the following: "Upon the acceptance of the Ford proposal, the promises, undertakings, and obligations shall be binding upon the United States and jointly and severally upon Henry Ford, his heirs, representatives, and assigns, and the company, its successors, and assigns, and all the necessary contracts, leases, deeds, and other instruments necessary or appropriate to effect the purposes of this proposal shall be duly executed and delivered by the respective parties above mentioned."

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state that that would be an amendment in the third degree and would not be in order.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, section 23 as it appears in the committee print provides that—all of the contracts, leases, deeds, transfers, and conveyances to effectuate the acceptance of the offer shall be binding upon the United States and jointly and severally upon Henry Ford, his heirs, representatives, and assigns, and the company to be incorporated by him, its successors and assigns.

A good many Members of the House feel that in view of the language of the proposal of Henry Ford there is some doubt as to whether this section as it appears in the bill carries out to its fullest extent the obligations contained in the proposal, and in order to obviate any question of doubt in the mind of anyone I simply offer the actual proposal made by Mr. Ford as a substitute for this abbreviated feature of the proposal now contained in section 23.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following substitute for that amendment, which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee amendment and the amendment to the amendment are the only amendments that are in order at this time.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. But I offer this as a substitute for the proposed section 23 of the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That is only a part of the amendment.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois to the committee amendment.

The committee proceeded to divide.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Would it be in order to request a separate vote upon the different sections of the committee amendment?

Mr. MADDEN. I make the point of order that that request comes too late.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. But I make the point of order that the gentleman was on his feet trying to get recognition.

Mr. MADDEN. Very well. I have no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I demand a separate vote.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, may I suggest that notwithstanding the fact that these three proposed sections were read as one committee amendment, unquestionably the gentleman from South Dakota has a right to offer an amendment to any one of the three sections.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] has offered an amendment to the committee amendment, and another amendment to that is an amendment in the third degree and would not be in order.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I am offering a substitute for the Madden amendment to the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests that if the gentleman will offer an amendment to the whole of the committee amendment that will serve the purpose.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reoffer a substitute for the committee amendment embracing sections 21, 22, and 23 which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HASTINGS. The committee had already voted by the ayes on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], but the other side of the question has not been put. Now, the inquiry I desire to make is, ought not we to vote upon the amendment and complete the vote?

The CHAIRMAN. As the gentleman from Oklahoma says, the vote had not been completed, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman from South Dakota for an amendment which is in order.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the substitute be read and be voted upon without discussion.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] asks unanimous consent that there be no debate upon the proposed substitute offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. WILLIAMSON]. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Under the present parliamentary situation would it be in order after the vote is taken to offer an amendment to section 23 of the committee amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Any germane amendment will be in order.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. At this time or after the vote?

The CHAIRMAN. After the vote is taken. The clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. WILLIAMSON].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WILLIAMSON as a substitute for committee amendment: Page 18, line 1, insert:

"SEC. 21. The interest on account of lease of Dam No. 2 shall apply to all expenditures and obligations of the Government in connection with said dam which have been incurred since May 31, 1922.

"SEC. 22. The stock of the company to be formed by Henry Ford referred to in section 1 of this act shall be controlled after his death by his heirs or by American citizens, and no stock or bonds issued by any company or subsidiary company in connection with the lease of the dams referred to herein or in connection with nitrate plant No. 2, or any substitute therefor or addition supplementary thereto, shall be owned or controlled by any foreign corporation, citizen, or subject.

"SEC. 23. All of the contracts, leases, deeds, transfers, and conveyances necessary to effectuate the acceptance of said offer and to carry out the purposes of this act shall be binding upon the United States, and jointly and severally upon Henry Ford, his heirs, representatives, and assigns, and the company to be incorporated by him, its successors and assigns, it being the intent hereof to bind Henry Ford, his heirs, representatives, and assigns upon all contracts, leases, deeds, transfers, and conveyances executed by said company as fully and completely as though he had personally executed such instruments."

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, if the proponents and advocates of this measure mean what they say and Henry Ford means what they say he means then the substitute for the Madden amendment ought to be adopted by this House. I have examined very carefully the proposed substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] which appeared in the RECORD some days ago. In my judgment that amendment to the committee amendment does not do all Mr. MADDEN claims for it. If you will adopt the substitute which I have offered I will guarantee to you that this section will be air-tight and that Henry Ford and his heirs will be bound to do what it is said he has promised to do and what gentlemen have repeatedly said they want him to do. A disposition has been shown all through the consideration of this bill to prevent any and all amendments, no matter how meritorious. There has been a complete refusal to consider any proposed change in the bill upon its merits. Any attempt to protect the United States or succeeding generations has been frowned upon by the Ford advocates and voted down. The most valuable water-power site in America and the vast Government properties at Muscle Shoals are to be given away for a mess of pottage. Our children's birthright is to be given over to a $10,000,000 Ford corporation without even a clause in the bill to properly guarantee performance of such undertakings as are imposed upon the Ford corporation. Much has been said of Ford's millions being back of the proposal. I deny that they are back of the proposal as the bill now stands or as it will stand with the Madden amendment. My amendment will put them back of the proposals incorporated in the bill, such as they are.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is first upon the perfecting amendment.

Mr. McKENZIE. If the gentleman will permit, just what words does the gentleman put in?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. What I add to section 23 as it appears in the bill is as follows: Page 18, line 16, after the word "offer" I insert "and to carry out the purposes of this act," and after the word "assigns," in line 19 of the same page, I strike out the period, insert a comma, and add, "it being the intent hereof to bind Henry Ford, his heirs, representatives, and assigns upon all contracts, leases, deeds, transfers, and conveyances executed by said company as fully and completely as though he had personally executed such instruments," so that the section will read:

SEC. 23. All of the contracts, leases, deeds, transfers, and conveyances necessary to effectuate the acceptance of said offer and to carry out the purposes of this act shall be binding upon the United States and jointly and severally upon Henry Ford, his heirs, representatives, and assigns, and the company to be incorporated by him, its successors and assigns, it being the intent hereof to bind Henry Ford, his heirs, representatives, and assigns upon all contracts, leases, deeds, transfers, and conveyances executed by said company as fully and completely as though he had personally executed such instruments.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is upon the perfecting amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is upon the substitute offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. WILLIAMSON].

The question was taken, and the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is upon the committee amendment as amended by the Madden amendment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 18, line 19, add another section: "It shall be unlawful for the company, or any director, officer, stockholder, or employee thereof, directly or indirectly, to contribute to any political campaign fund or to contribute, donate, or in any way to give money to assist, promote, or otherwise assist in the election of any public official, congressional candidate, or candidate for nomination for any office in a primary election."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The point of order is sustained. The question is now on the committee amendment as amended by the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 18, line 1, insert a new section, by Mr. WINGO, to read as follows:

"A compliance by the company with the requirements of this act with reference to the manufacture of nitrate and maintaining nitrate plant No. 2 in its present state of readiness or its equivalent for immediate operation in the manufacture of materials necessary in time of war for the production of explosives, except as it may be prevented by reconstruction of the plant itself, or by war, strikes, accidents, fires, or other causes beyond its control, shall constitute conditions subsequent upon which the right of the company shall depend, and a failure to substantially meet such conditions, or either of them, shall give the United States, in addition to any other right it may have, the right, by proper action in a court of competent jurisdiction, to recapture said nitrate plant No. 2."

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I realize that possibly I am engaging in a last futile effort to appeal to the intelligence of the House to-day by doing what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARRETT], a member of the committee, a while ago said was the desire of his committee; that is, to keep the hands of the Government on this great property and control it. Now, what do I do by my amendment? It is an amendment for which, frankly, if you adopt it, I would be willing, but not otherwise, to abandon the amendment which you adopted on Saturday. It is not so drastic. It does not go far enough; but it does this: Compliance with two major agreements is all that is required; that is, the manufacture of nitrate, as provided by section 14, and the keeping of the plant in readiness for the needs of the Government in time of war. Those are the only two material requirements as conditions subsequent by which I seek to bind that corporation after Henry Ford is dead and gone; and I say if these requirements are not met, then the United States Government shall have what right? To declare the lease forfeited? Oh, no. I give my friend from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] his day in court. He knows that the Constitution already guarantees that. He seems to have overlooked it. My amendment provides that if the company fails to meet substantially those requirements, then the United States Government has the right to go into a court of competent jurisdiction and by proper action seek to recapture what? All the property? No; seek to recapture nitrate plant No. 2, the plant that must be kept for national security and national defense. That is all I do.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. What excuse is there to only take back part of it if they fail on the contract?

Mr. WINGO. Absolutely none; but I am trying to preserve the rights of the Government in connection with what I feel will be a duty devolving upon the company 50 years from now, when Henry Ford is dead and gone. I will be content if I can keep the plant manufacturing fertilizer in time of peace and in condition to manufacture explosives in time of war.

You say, "We must not amend this bill"; that "We must not lay our hands on this sacred thing." You can do that if you want to, gentlemen, but there is not a lawyer on the floor of this House who does not know that my amendment is right and that without the adoption of my amendment all control by the United States Government is gone, and gone for a hundred years, except the little right of action on breach of covenant, which is so unreliable and unsatisfactory.

Oh, gentlemen, you come and say, "Henry Ford will not accept your provisions." I challenge any man to stand up and make that statement to me now. They came in last Saturday and said they had fixed up the Begg amendment and the Henry Ford representatives would accept that. They came back this morning and they deny what they told us last Saturday. Yet they have gone out in the cloakroom and had a little meeting among themselves, a kind of little third House, and have said, "Let us put everything through as it is, and let the Senate amend it." Not one man who has discussed my amendment in private has denied my legal proposition, but has said, "Do not do this. We want to go over to the Senate with you and have it done there." Gentlemen, I hardly understand why it was that I was able to keep my temper and keep quiet on the proposition they presented to me. I do not want to wait until the Senate has had something done that no man will deny is right.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Michigan. I want to ask the gentleman this question: If Henry Ford should place upon that property there numerous factories, all of that property would revert to the Government?

Mr. WINGO. I know what the gentleman means. I am making a last effort to reserve something, and that is nitrate plant No. 2, against duplicity and bad faith on the part of the corporation after Henry Ford's death. That is all I am seeking to do. [Applause.]

Are you opposed to that? If so, why are you opposed to it? Is anybody authorized to say that Henry Ford will not accept that? I deny it, because I have faith in his intelligence and his integrity. You have got to prove to me that Henry Ford is guilty of duplicity and bad faith and is not willing for Congress to bind this corporation after he is dead and gone.

Mr. WURZBACH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. WURZBACH. Assuming that the Government would recover under the gentleman's amendment nitrate plant No. 2, would the 100,000-water-power plant go with that?

Mr. WINGO. Nitrate plant No. 2 would be recaptured if the court, after hearing, had decided that this corporation had acted in bad faith and had failed to keep its contract to manufacture fertilizer in peace and explosives in time of war. But the burden would be on the Government to show such failure and bad faith. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I think enough has been said by the opposition in putting question points after the faith of the people in the Ford proposition to make it an opportunity to declare that as far as my observation goes the masses, especially the working masses, are overwhelmingly in favor of letting Henry Ford have Muscle Shoals. By the way, we remember that over at the other end of the Capitol the other day, the muse grew restive under the weight of prose in that august body and the clouds of angry debate were dissipated by a journey into the scintillating fields of poetry. Down in my district I have a genius of a constituent named F. W. Edwardy, who wrote and circulated a post card as follows:

> As Doctor Cone would say,
> Repeat this sentence every day:
> "Muscle Shoals in Alabam > Without a Ford ain't worth 'a dam.'"

[Laughter and applause.]

Now you understand, gentlemen, that I do not "cuss," but the word "dam" has been used with shocking frequency here during this debate, and my poetic constituent who is a Ford "fan" insists, of course, that he is talking about a "tinker's dam" or the kind of a dam that stops a river.

Mr. HUDSPETH. A continental dam. [Laughter.]

Mr. UPSHAW. But there is one thing especially to which I wish to refer. I wish to take exception, without holding any brief for Mr. Ford, to one statement made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] the other day when, in an unguarded moment, I am sure, he referred to Mr. Ford's "ill-gotten gains." I think he made that statement in the heat of debate; I think he meant to say Mr. Ford's fabulous wealth or something like that. I want to say that is the first statement I have ever heard anybody make that put a question point after the integrity of Henry Ford. I am sure my good friend from New York did not mean to make a deliberate reflection on Mr. Ford's personal honor or his business methods.

It was my privilege to spend a day, six years ago, in his wonderful plant, and I went through it from one end to the other. I was utterly amazed at the spirit of real, good Americanism that I saw. I visited and addressed his schools, where he was transforming many foreigners into intelligent, enthusiastic Americans. I have been impressed with Henry Ford as one of the few outstanding men who, having won great wealth by the wealth of his own genius and his own energy, has not left the envious masses at the bottom of the mountain after he has climbed to the top. Ordinarily men of great wealth leave those less fortunate down in the valley, muttering curses against those who have left them. But you will find that the humblest men everywhere have great faith in Henry Ford because he has proven that he loves humanity.

Dr. Samuel Marquis, the great preacher, who gave up his pulpit to look after the humanitarian side of Henry Ford's work, told me that when the plant was about half as large as it is now Henry Ford was then paying splendid salaries to 300 men and women who moved sympathetically among his 50,000 employees at the time and helped to contribute to their personal and domestic happiness. I believe we can trust a man like that. And it was a great lesson for all employers of labor that the very week after Henry Ford voluntarily raised all wages and reduced the hours of labor from nine to eight for the day the output of his plant leaped forward to a notable degree as the result of the impulse of gratitude for their great-hearted employer's humanitarian spirit.

The Bible declares that—he who would have friends must show himself friendly.

And again:

All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them.

All the human philosophy and the modern ethics on earth can not add to or even approach this divine wisdom of the golden rule of Christ, that would usher in, as Frances E. Willard declared, "the golden age of man." It is because Henry Ford and Pastor Marquis, who helped him to catch the vision, have let this beautiful spirit filter down through all the activities of big, wonderful achievements that "the man in overalls" everywhere declares, "Hurrah for Henry Ford!"

FARMERS HAVE FAITH IN FORD

I have found also that farmers far and wide have the same kind of faith in Henry Ford that inspires the workingmen everywhere. Such leaders as Charles S. Barrett, the first and only president of the National Farmers' Union, who has steered that great organization with such notable wisdom, and C. H. Cobb, the gifted and vigorous editor of the Southern Ruralist, the great magazine with half a million circulation, published in my home city of Atlanta, have declared with enthusiasm in favor of accepting the Ford offer, believing that it will mean cheaper fertilizers for the farmer and greater prosperity not only for the South but for the whole country. In a letter to me concerning this subject, the editor of the Southern Ruralist says:

Everything that has been done that sheds any light whatever on the Muscle Shoals proposition leads to just one conclusion. That one conclusion is that the Ford offer is the only offer that carries with it any assurance whatever that the public interest will be protected even in the slightest degree or that cheap fertilizer or nitrates for war purposes will be manufactured. One of the most vital considerations in this whole matter is that of moral responsibility and individual reliability. The records make it very clear that the Ford offer is the only one that deserves a moment's consideration on that basis. Doubtless those other concerns that are bidding will make rosy promises. * * * From all I can gather, the Alabama Power Co. is gifted along these lines. Probably they are helpless, inasmuch as they are dominated by capitalists who live clear outside of the United States and whose one interest is that of getting the maximum return upon their investment. Mr. Ford is not only a man of known moral integrity but he has ample capital of his own. This, too, is of vital importance. We must not forget that the Alabama Power Co. is owned almost wholly by British financiers. Mr. Ford is not only enormously wealthy but he has demonstrated a most extraordinary capacity to do big things and has come by his wealth in a manner known to be honorable to all our people. While amassing it he has at the same time shown a degree of fair-mindedness and good faith with his employees and with the public that puts his bid in a class to itself and beyond question of doubt. He proposes to do another thing besides the manufacture of fertilizer that in all probability troubles the private power concerns more than anything else. I have in mind the manner in which he proposes to pay off the indebtedness of the development at Muscle Shoals and free it from mortgages, bonds, and the like that now load down the old companies and will be carried forever because they carry a rather attractive rate of interest. Private concerns do not like the idea of paying off their debts. Neither do they like the idea of manufacturing fertilizer at a profit of just 8 per cent. This is something new, too. In my judgment Mr. Ford will not only help agriculture and free the War Department from dependence upon Chilean nitrates but will show this country how cheaply hydroelectric power can be developed and sold to the public.

My hope is that you will press for immediate action on the Ford offer. I can not but feel that those who turn the Ford offer down are wholly in the dark or are so blinded by prejudice that they can not distinguish between greed and the public welfare. Up to the present our natural resources have been regarded more or less as the heritage of a privileged few who had the money to exploit them. They have benefited the public only in an incidental way, and therefore precious little. So it does seem to me that with record after record of private exploitation and its blighting influence that Congress would hasten to do this one thing that is calculated to benefit all our people. It would be glorious to have one bit of private resource developed in the interest of the country, and it would be a national scandal that would make the Teapot Dome affair fade into insignificance if the private concerns have their way. If we can keep our hydroelectric power out of the hands of conscienceless exploitation, we have a most wonderful industrial future. Otherwise we shall go on through the years to come paying tribute where tribute is not due. The acceptance of the Ford offer is the only opportunity we have yet had to break through the wall that is being built around the hydroelectric power of this country. That is why so much money has been spent to defeat it; that is why there has been so much misleading propaganda, and undoubtedly why it has been delayed all these years.

Permit me to again say how greatly we appreciate the support you have given the Ford offer. You are rendering this country a great public service.

Very sincerely yours, C. A. COBB, Editor.

This vigorous letter, gentlemen of the House, is but a sample of the opinion and the faith of the agricultural leaders of the country concerning Henry Ford and his proposed development of this great national asset.

After all, gentlemen, one of the best reasons for the acceptance of Henry Ford's offer is the fact that the masses of the American people want him to have it. The people believe in Henry Ford's financial and moral integrity. [Applause.]

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I want to speak for just a minute on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO]. I am opposed to his amendment, because there is already better language in the bill as reported than the language employed by Mr. WINGO in order to protect the Government.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Section 18 gives several remedies. It gives the Government the right to go into court and claim a cancellation of all the contracts, which, if the case is made out, will at once do exactly what Mr. WINGO's amendment proposes: It gives the Government the right to apply for a mandatory injunction which will, if granted, compel Ford, or the company, to do the things stipulated in the contract; and it gives the right to use the process of mandamus, which would also require Henry Ford, or the company, to do what they contract to do. Further, the Government could ask for specific performance of its contracts.

Mr. WRIGHT. That is true.

Mr. WINGO. I would like to see the language in the bill which does that—which authorizes a cancellation.

Mr. WRIGHT. Now, my friend from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] has called attention to section 18 of the bill. I want to say in this connection, gentlemen, that this bill as reported is no haphazard matter; it was not written under excitement. Every word and every line in this bill was submitted to this House after the most mature and careful consideration by the Committee on Military Affairs; every word of it was weighed; its legal significance was taken into consideration; there was nothing omitted; and when this bill was brought here, it was brought by the Military Affairs Committee as a measure which protects the Government in every particular so far as the lease and sale of these properties to Henry Ford are concerned.

You are familiar with the provisions of section 19. That section provides as follows:

> And as a further method of procedure in the event of the violation of any of the terms of this proposal or any contracts made in furtherance of its terms the company agrees that the Attorney General may, upon the request of the Secretary of War, institute proceedings in equity in the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Alabama for the purpose of canceling and terminating the lease of Dam No. 2 or Dam No. 3, or both of them, because of such violation or for the purpose of remedying or correcting by injunction, mandamus, or other process any act of commission or omission in violation of the terms of this proposal or any contract made in furtherance thereof.

This section, gentlemen, not only protects the Government, but Mr. Ford and his company agree by the terms of that section that a certain court of the United States will have jurisdiction of these matters; he submits himself to the jurisdiction of a given court, the United States District Court for the Northern District of Alabama. That section provides for every remedy open to the United States, not only as to a forfeiture or cancellation of these proposed contracts but as to any other remedy which the United States might employ in seeing that its rights under this proposed contract are enforced.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. McSWAIN. In other words, the substance of it is this: The proposition so laid down there is that if he violates any of the terms of the contract—one of which is that he is to make fertilizer and another of which is that he is to make nitrates for war—then they will cut off the power from Dams 2 and 3, and when they cut off the power then the contract is worthless, is it not?

Mr. WRIGHT. Surely.

Mr. McSWAIN. That is the hammer with which they drive him to performance?

Mr. WRIGHT. Absolutely. In other words, every right the Government has under this contract can be enforced according to the provisions of section 18. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WINGO) there were—ayes 34, noes 98.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> SEC. 20. The appropriations necessary to carry out the provisions of this act on the part of the Government are hereby authorized.

With the following committee amendment:

> Page 18, line 20, strike out the figures "20" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "24."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas moves to strike out the last word and is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have been hoping that this contract for the gift or sale or the lease—whichever you wish to call it—of this great water power belonging to the people of this country at Muscle Shoals, Ala., and on which the Government has spent $117,000,000, might be amended so that I could go along with my southern friends and vote for it, and I have been trying to help so amend it that the rights of the people in this great property would be preserved.

I represent a great agricultural district and you all know I always work and vote to help agriculture; but if this bill should be fairly and properly amended so that I could feel warranted in voting for it, it would not be because I believe it would help the farmers in my district or in my State, for we do not use fertilizer in Kansas, but because it might help the cotton farmers of the South and preserve the nitrate plant, on which so many millions have been spent for the emergency of war.

It is evident, however, that no amendments will be permitted to the bill authorizing the transfer of this great property to a $10,000,000 corporation to be organized by Henry Ford. It is to be railroaded through the House, and as a lawyer and a business man I can not vote to give away this great property of the people of this country under the conditions prescribed in this bill.

I can not understand why the provisions of the bill, inadequate and unfair to the Government as they are, should be so loosely and carelessly drawn. I understand that Mr. Ford authorized his attorneys to draw a bill which would bind him to carry out the provisions that those who are supporting this measure say Mr. Ford agreed to and that when the same was prepared he refused to abide by it. This measure was then prepared to accept such propositions as Mr. Ford saw fit to offer. It is a case of anything to get the richest man in the world to become interested in Muscle Shoals, Ala.

Now, what is the proposition? Besides the great water-power interests of the Tennessee River, the Government owns 4,200 acres of land on which was expended during the war $80,000,000 in buildings and plants. There are two small cities with paved streets, sewers, and electric lights, all built at the expense of the taxpayers. For this great property the Ford corporation is to pay $5,000,000, out of which there must be deducted $3,472,487.25 to build a great steam power plant that will produce 40,000 horsepower, leaving a paltry $1,527,512.75 which the Government is to receive for $80,000,000 worth of property which, it is admitted, has a junk value of $16,000,000, but it will not be sold for junk. Mr. Ford is quoted as saying, "I will employ 1,000,000 men. I will build a city 75 miles long at Muscle Shoals." Already the land outside of the 4,200 acres we are to give Mr. Ford has been platted and is being sold in a great real-estate boom that is behind this proposition. The Ford corporation will make millions out of the property not a part of the water-power proposition that he is getting under this contract.

Now, what about the water-power rights, the most valuable yet remaining to the people? The Government has spent millions in the construction of two great dams and is to spend thirty and perhaps fifty millions more under the obligation this contract places upon us to complete the two dams, build power houses, and install hydroelectric machinery; and for this Henry Ford is to pay a rental of less than 4 per cent on only that portion of the cost that is expended after May 31, 1922. He is also to pay only $23,373 a year as a sinking fund to retire the cost of the building of these two great dams.

The Government is to be at the cost of operating the great locks through which the boats will pass—as a part of this scheme to make the Tennessee River navigable—and is to also be at the expense of the maintenance as well as the repair of the dams, gates, and locks, while the Ford corporation is to pay only $35,000 annually toward such purpose at Dam No. 2 and $20,000 at Dam No. 3, which is about money enough to operate the gates and locks, and leave the Government to repair and maintain both dams. And this contract is to exist for a hundred years.

To sugar coat the proposition the Ford corporation agrees to turn over in case of war the nitrate plant, which is already completed and goes with the proposition, and is to manufacture not less than 40,000 tons of nitrate for the manufacture of fertilizer at a profit of 8 per cent.

I offered an amendment to cut such profit to 6 per cent, but, regardless of the fact that the Ford corporation is to pay the Government but 4 per cent on but a part of the cost of construction of the dams, the amendment was defeated.

Another amendment by Mr. BURTON, of Ohio, has been offered which would place the leasing of these great water-power rights under the water power leasing act of 1920, which would limit the term to 50 years and regulate the cost that could be charged for any electric current sold back to the people. This amendment has also been defeated.

A part of the propaganda used in favor of this measure was that through the building of electric lines and the cheap sale of electric current the drudgery was to be taken out of the life of the farmer and his housewife, yet when an amendment was offered providing that at least half of the power to be produced at Muscle Shoals should be sold and disposed of the amendment was defeated, which means that the Ford corporation for 100 years is to have all of this great power, to use it as it sees fit, save only enough to manufacture 40,000 tons of nitrate per annum; but when the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] offered an amendment, which would work a forfeiture of the Ford corporation's rights under this contract if they failed to produce that amount of nitrate for two consecutive years, though the Members in charge of this bill consented to the amendment, we are now told it is to be defeated before the bill is passed.

Mr. QUIN. I would like to say to the gentleman that I did not vote in support of that amendment.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. It is well understood that the amendment is to be defeated in the House, although under the agreement it was adopted by this committee, and you may have voted for it.

Mr. QUIN. No; I am going to vote it down. I said I did not support the amendment.

Mr. ALMON. I opposed it and voted against it.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Very well; then it is quite plain that it is to be voted down in the House. Now, gentlemen, without proper provisions that will bind the Ford Corporation to make nitrates for the cotton farmers of the South, why vote for it? The Begg amendment only seeks to forfeit the property back to the people if there is a failure to make nitrates as agreed to for two consecutive years.

Mr. STEAGALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Certainly.

Mr. STEAGALL. Would the gentleman rather have the contractee bound to manufacture 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen every year or have him bound to manufacture that amount every two years?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I would rather have him bound to manufacture it every year.

Mr. STEAGALL. The bill as drawn binds him to manufacture not less than that amount every year.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I do not think so, and a good many Members of this House do not think so. If that is true, why do you object to a forfeiture if there is a failure to comply?

Mr. BOYCE. Because we want him bound to make it every year.

Mr. ALMON. And because it is a forfeiture clause.

Mr. STRONG of Kanasas. I want it to be a forfeiture clause, as the gentleman says.

Mr. ALMON. Without ever giving him a day in court.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Oh, I am in favor of giving every one his day in court, but if Mr. Ford means that the corporation he is to form is to make this nitrate as provided in the contract, why is it unfair to have a forfeiture clause that will enforce its manufacture? All we are asking is that the corporation that is to have this great property on which the Government has spent $117,000,000, and is to spend thirty to fifty million dollars more, is that it be so bound that the people can secure its return in case the contract is not carried out. I do not know Henry Ford. He may be willing as long as he lives to carry out the confract, but what will happen after he has passed away? The people will only have a contract with a corporation and nothing more. And if the contract is not so drawn as to protect the people and secure for them the small benefits for which they must pay the good profits provided in this bill, then this great property is lost to them for a century.

Gentlemen, I have tried to place amendments in this bill that will protect the rights of the people in this great property not only of this generation but of those to follow. I do not think the contract as presented by the committee will do so. I realize that you gentlemen of the South, who think that the benefits Mr. Ford is to receive will cause him to use his millions to develop a great industry in Alabama, with those on our side who favor the proposition because they want to get the Government away from it or because they are friendly to Mr. Ford, form a majority that intend to railroad this bill through just as the representatives of Mr. Ford desire it, but if the Begg amendment, to force the manufacture of nitrates under penalty of a forfeiture, and the Burton amendment, to bring the leasing of this great power under the control of existing law as provided in the water power act, are not placed in this bill I can not conscientiously vote for this bill and will not do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. McKENZIE. If the gentleman will yield, I move, Mr. Chairman, that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I simply want to make one last appeal to protect what I believe the future will develop into one of the great natural resources in the eastern part of the United States.

I also want to reply to what the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WRIGHT] said a moment ago, that section 18 gave the Government every right of forfeiture and reversion for a violation of any provision of the contract. If that is true, the only difference between my amendment and the statement of the gentleman from Georgia is that under the gentleman's statement if you go into court and sue for any cause whatsoever the judgment you get may be dollars or it may be an indemnification for a failure to perform; but if you keep my amendment in the bill I submit to you that you have not jeopardized the contract; you have not handicapped Mr. Ford one iota, but you have assured to generations yet unborn that if Mr. Ford fails to manufacture nitrates, which I maintain is the only reason in existence for being for the bill, the Government will again come into possession of this great national resource of probably 1,000,000 horsepower. But if you vote that out under hysteria or under excitement you can plead nothing other than that you were afraid to protect the interests of the posterity of the present generation. To me that is a serious proposition. I do not believe anybody could question my faith and my honesty in being for this proposition, but I would rather be defeated to-day by voting against a bill that I believe would harm my children's children than to save my political life and ruin their economic one. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. STRONG] is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 21. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The following committee amendment was read:

Page 18, line 23, strike out the figures 21 and insert 25.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 18, lines 23 and 24, strike out section 25, lines 23 and 24, on page 18, reading as follows:

"SEC. 25. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith be, and the same are hereby, repealed."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, there are only two provisions in the bill that are supposed to be law, and that is section 24, which you have just enacted, and section 25, now under consideration. The entire bill as to its provisions is what shall constitute the contract provided for on page 1, lines 4 and 5, which says—that the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed for and in behalf of the United States of America to execute the following contracts.

That is all there is in the provision that we have been working on. Now, I am in favor of the legislation relating to the Muscle Shoals project. I want to call the attention of my friends who are in favor of this legislation to this particular provision of the bill. The bill provides what the contract shall contain and nothing else. It is a separate, special, individual contract, and a law directing the Secretary of War to enter into this contract as presented by Mr. Ford. This section is not in the Ford offer; it is not a part of it; it is a separate, independent provision. What I want to call the attention of the committee to is this: That this statute repeals all acts or parts of acts that may be in conflict with the provisions of this supposed contract. Now, you know what the provisions are of the water power law, and that they are in conflict with this contract.

Mr. WRIGHT. Has the gentleman considered that this may be in conflict with the national defense act?

Mr. RAKER. I am going to call attention to that. I am satisfied that it does conflict with sections of the law in the water power act. My contention is that the general law on the statute book relative to contracts, the notice required in the water power statute, are not affected by this legislation without this provision in it. I am convinced that every lawyer on the floor of this House is with me on that statement.

Now, you place in this statute here this provision where you say we are going to enter into a special contract with one man or one concern, and therefore we are going to wipe out of existence every act that may be inconsistent with this project of the contract. Gentlemen, you do not want to do it. My contention is that this act may be placed on the statute book and enforced in all its provisions without the slightest difficulty and that there is no need of this section under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. SNYDER. I object.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the amendment offered by the gentleman from California would absolutely nullify all we are going to do in this bill, because it would make it impossible to repeal section 124 of the national defense act, which provides for Government ownership and operation solely. We had this matter up in committee and discussed it very thoroughly, and we have some very good lawyers on the committee. It was determined that this would not in any way destroy the water power act. I hope that the amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 18, add new section as section 26:

"SEC. 26. Whenever the company shall render or supply any public service by way of distributing or supplying electric current or power for any use or purpose for sale to customers or consumers thereof, it shall abide by such laws and regulations as may from time to time be enacted or prescribed by the State or its duly constituted authorities in which the service is rendered or the rate charged. Whenever any service herein mentioned shall enter into interstate or foreign commerce, the company shall abide by the joint action of the duly constituted authorities of the States directly concerned, and if such States are unable to agree through their properly constituted authorities on the service to be rendered in interstate or foreign commerce or on the rates or charges of payment therefor, jurisdiction, during the time the authorities of such States may be in disagreement, is hereby conferred upon the Interstate Commerce Commission to enforce the provisions of this section to regulate and control so much of such service rendered and of the rates and charges of payment therefor as constitute interstate or foreign commerce. The administration of the provisions of this section by the Interstate Commerce Commission, as far as applicable, shall be according to the procedure and practice in fixing and regulating the rates, charges, and practices of railroad companies as provided in the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and the parties subject to such regulation and control shall have the same rights of hearing, defense, and review as said companies in such cases."

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that amendment has been once voted on by the committee and rejected.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the point of order. Similar language to the amendment I have offered was offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] as a substitute for an amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOCH], which in terms had been proposed as an addition to section 7 of the act.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman if it was the identical language?

Mr. BURTNESS. The identical language, but offered to a separate section at a place which I believe is proper. If the Chairman will recall, there were many who contended that the McLaughlin amendment proposed as a substitute to the Hoch amendment was offered at the wrong place, and some Members had stated that they had agreed to the McLaughlin amendment if it should be proposed at a proper place in the bill. They urged many Members of the House to vote against it in that place, and said that it would be taken care of in the proper place in the bill. The bill has been read and the amendment has not been proposed by the proponents of the bill where they led the House to believe that it would be proper after that was voted down. For that reason it seems plain that the amendment ought to be in order now, particularly as it is now offered to an entirely different section.

The argument was well made at that time that the place where it was offered was not the preferable place at least.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer the additional observation to the one made by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS], that if this amendment be held out of order upon the sole ground that it was once before offered and defeated, all that an enemy to a committee amendment in a bill would have to do to defeat that committee amendment would be to offer it in the wrong place, and the minority thereby could defeat the will of the majority.

Mr. WINGO. I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that there are two other grounds on which this amendment should fall. One is that it changes the bill, and the other is that Henry has not O. K'd it.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I am offering my remarks in a serious vein. I contend that the precedent is well established that an amendment must be held out of order after having been once voted down, but I contend that if I wanted to defeat a committee amendment which is absolutely necessary to make the bill function all I would have to do as a minority—a lone member—would be to offer that amendment at the wrong place in the bill, where it could be held germane, and the only thing the committee could do to save its bill would be to vote my amendment down and thereby kill itself.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, with all due respect to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG], I contend that his argument is not tenable for the simple reason that if an amendment were offered at the wrong place in the bill the point of order could be made for that reason, and naturally the committee, if it were on the alert as it should be, would protect itself by making the point of order.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. The only observation I make on that is that I contend there are a number of places in any bill of this character where an amendment might produce a ludicrous situation where the point of order could not lie against it, because it was germane, and the amendment would not be offered with any other motive than to have it defeated so that it could not be offered at the right place.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, if it were germane, it would be going somewhat far afield to say that it would be ludicrous simply because it was not offered at some other place in the bill, but here is the other side of the situation. If the Committee of the Whole has had the opportunity of passing on an amendment, has debated the amendment, as is true in this case, and has voted upon it, then at some time there should be an end to committee consideration. Under the proposition laid down by the gentleman from Ohio, every amendment which has been offered and disposed of adversely heretofore, fully debated, could again be offered, unless, of course, the committee should determine to rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS] offers an amendment which he states is in the identical language of that offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] at an earlier place in the bill. The Chair examined the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan somewhat carefully at the time it was offered. It seemed to be an amendment which was germane to the bill, more perhaps than being germane to any particular section. No point of order was raised to the amendment when it was offered as being not germane at the time. The Committee of the Whole had the amendment before it in a definite and concrete way. As suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], there would be no end to consideration of a bill in Committee of the Whole if an amendment could be offered and reoffered at different stages during the progress of the bill. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BURTNESS: Add a new section as section 26, as follows:

"SEC. 26. Whenever the company shall render or supply any public service by way of distributing or supplying electric current or power for any use or purpose for sale to customers or consumers thereof, it shall abide by such laws and regulations as may from time to time be enacted or prescribed by the State or its duly constituted authorities in which the service is rendered or the rate charged. Whenever any service herein mentioned shall enter into interstate or foreign commerce, the company shall abide by the joint action of the duly constituted authorities of the States directly concerned, and if such States are unable to agree through their properly constituted authorities on the service to be rendered in interstate or foreign commerce or on the rates or charges of payment therefor, jurisdiction, during the time the authorities of such States may be in disagreement, is hereby conferred upon the Federal Power Commission to enforce the provisions of this section to regulate and control so much of such service rendered and of the rates and charges of payment therefor as constitute interstate or foreign commerce."

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, if gentlemen will refer to page 3984 of the RECORD, at the top of the page, they will find the so-called McLaughlin amendment, which was proposed on Saturday as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOCH]. I have changed the words "Interstate Commerce Commission" as they appear in the so-called McLaughlin amendment to the words "Federal Power Commission," and I have eliminated from the McLaughlin amendment the last sentence, which would be applicable only to the administration that would, under the McLaughlin amendment, have been vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission. In other words, all that my amendment does now is to leave to the authorities of the State of Alabama the power to prescribe rates for power sold within that State, and, in so far as charges upon business in interstate commerce is concerned, it would grant the power of such control to the Federal Power Commission in the event the joint State authorities should fail to agree. Under the present water power act, where there is a sale of hydroelectric power in interstate commerce, that commission has the power to regulate the rates where there are no State authorities for such purpose and has therefore the required machinery for such regulation. Personally I think that the Federal Power Commission is a better agency for that purpose than the Interstate Commerce Commission, because we all know that the latter is almost overwhelmed with applications of all sorts and it takes long enough now to get a decision from the Interstate Commerce Commission on matters of importance connected with railroad rates, and it would probably be unwise to add to their duties. In order, however, to inject no new issue but to agree with the views of the gentleman from Michigan, and in order to follow out the lines of the agreement which he stated he had made with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER], whom the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] assured us was in favor of this sort of regulation, I offered the amendment first in the exact language of the McLaughlin amendment, but that has been eliminated by the point of order. For all practical purposes, however, the change is immaterial.

It does seem to me that if gentlemen who have been the proponents of this measure from the very beginning have been honest in their contentions that the States have the power under the bill as drawn to regulate these charges, charges that may be made 10 or 20 or 50 or 80 or 90 years from now, they can have absolutely no objection to writing such provision specifically into the law and leaving it to a fair and unbiased tribunal to determine whether or not the people purchasing power 20 or 40 or 60 years from now are getting a square deal from a corporation which gentlemen to-day have not the least idea about as to what its actions may be half a century from now. The people of all the surrounding States may sorely need this protection some day, and therefore let us give it to them now, when we have the chance.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. BURTNESS) there were—ayes 76, noes 129.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, we have now reached the conclusion of this most important bill. [Applause.] We will soon take up in the House the question of passing it. I hope the discussion will be of profit to the country. I hope it will be educational at least. I hope the purposes the committee had in mind in bringing this bill will eventually be realized and that the hopes of the people of this country that they will get something out of it will be fully realized. I want to say this: When this offer was submitted by Mr. Ford, after an invitation had been given all the people of the Nation, the power companies of the South, the Wall Street interests, rich men everywhere in our country to come in and help us out on this great problem we had at Muscle Shoals, he was the only man who submitted an offer that carries with it provisions worthy of serious consideration. When he offered it he said he submitted this proposition to be accepted in whole and not in part, and I want to say to my good friends here before casting their votes on this great proposition, any amendment in the way of a motion to recommit the bill that will change it in any of its essential features means the defeat of the entire proposition. So I say to you, my friends, look well to your ballots and make no mistake.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass. [Applause.]

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MAPES, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 518, had directed him to report the same back to him with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. By the rule the previous question is ordered. The question comes on the amendments. Is a separate vote demanded upon any amendment?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the Begg-Wingo amendment.

Mr. MORIN. I ask for a separate vote on section 19.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendments? If not, the other amendments will be put in gross.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. A separate vote is demanded on the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BEGG: Page 11, line 11, after the word "explosives," strike out the period and insert a semicolon and add the following: "Provided, That if Henry Ford, his heirs, successors, or assigns, or the 'company' so to be organized, its successors or assigns, fail for two consecutive years, unless prevented by the action of the Government of the United States in the exercise of its rights under section 16 of this bill, to manufacture annually 40,000 tons or more of fixed nitrogen for exclusive use as fertilizer, or failure to comply with any of the other conditions and agreements set out in this act, then, and in that event, every contract of sale or lease made by the said United States with said Henry Ford, his heirs, successors, or assigns, or with said 'company' named in section 1, its successors, or assigns, shall, at the option of the United States, be void, such option to be exercised by Executive proclamation, and all property, real or personal, leases, rights, and other privileges held by any of the above-named persons at said Muscle Shoals shall revert to and become the property of the Government of the United States. The conditions herein provided shall become operative and in full force on and after two years from the date when structures and equipment of a capacity of 100,000 horsepower are constructed and installed and ready for service.

"This provision is intended and shall be construed as merely supplemental to all other rights and remedies of the United States as contained herein, and in no sense as an impairment or abridgment of such other rights and remedies of the United States, but as additional thereto, nor is this provision intended, nor shall it be construed, to in any way change or modify any of the promises, undertakings, and obligations assumed by and imposed on Henry Ford, his heirs, representatives, and assigns, and the company to be incorporated by him, its successors and assigns, but they are to be held bound to the same strict and faithful performance of every promise, undertaking, and obligation set out in this bill just as fully as they would be in the absence of this provision."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. BEGG and Mr. MORIN) there were—ayes 117——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 176, nays 197, answered "present" 1, not voting 57, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The next vote is on the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16 after line 16 insert a new section to be known as section 19.

"SEC. 19. The Gorgas steam plant and transmission line having been sold by the United States, and Henry Ford having included said steam plant and transmission line in his offer of May 31, 1922 (as found in section 12 and in subsection (d) of section 11 of said offer), in order to provide a substitute steam plant the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to acquire by purchase or condemnation a suitable site for a steam power plant, to be located at or near Lock and Dam No. 17, Black Warrior River, Ala., together with a strip of land 100 feet wide to serve as a right of way between said steam power plant and nitrate plant No. 2, Muscle Shoals, Ala., with connection to Waco Quarry, near Russellville, Ala.

"The Secretary of War is further authorized and directed to contract with Henry Ford or the company to be incorporated by him for the construction at cost of a steam power plant having a generating capacity of approximately 30,000 kilowatts (40,000 horsepower), a transformer substation of similar capacity and a transmission line of suitable design and capacity connecting said steam power plant with nitrate plant No. 2 and the Waco Quarry, all under the supervision of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army. The plans and specifications for said power plant, substation, and transmission line shall be prepared by Henry Ford, or the company to be incorporated by him, and approved by the Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

"The expenditures authorized to be made for all purposes under this section shall not exceed a total of $3,472,487.25."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, on this vote I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I was just about to ask, if it is in order, now that order has been restored, just what we are about to vote on?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that it is on inserting section 19, a committee amendment. As many as favor it will answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 229, nays 138, answered "present" 2, not voting 62, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MORIN. I make a motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs, with instructions to report the same back to the House with the necessary amendments to make it conform to the Federal water power act of 1920.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to recommit the bill with instructions to report the same back with the necessary amendments to make the bill conform to the Federal water power act of 1920. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MORIN moves to recommit the pending bill H. R. 518 to the Committee on Military Affairs, with instructions to report the same back to the House with the necessary amendments to make said bill conform to the Federal water power act of 1920.

The SPEAKER. And upon that the gentleman from Pennsylvania demands the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. As many as are in favor of the motion to recommit will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 145, nays 224, answered "present" 1, not voting 61, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The title of the bill was amended to read as follows: "A bill to authorize and direct the Secretary of War, for national defense in time of war and for the production of fertilizers and other useful products in time of peace, to sell to Henry Ford, or a corporation to be incorporated by him, nitrate plant No. 1, at Sheffield, Ala.; nitrate plant No. 2, at Muscle Shoals, Ala.; Waco Quarry, near Russellville, Ala.; steam power plant to be located and constructed at or near Lock and Dam No. 17 on the Black Warrior River, Ala., with right of way and transmission line to nitrate plant No. 2, Muscle Shoals, Ala.; and to lease to Henry Ford, or a corporation to be incorporated by him, Dam No. 2 and Dam No. 3 (as designated in H. Doc. 1262, 64th Cong., 1st sess.), including power stations when constructed as provided herein, and for other purposes."

On motion of Mr. MCKENZIE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ALLEGED CHARGES AGAINST TWO MEMBERS OF CONGRESS.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present the report of the House Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the communication of the Attorney General in reply to House Resolution 211, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD for the information of the Members.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the report of the Committee on the Judiciary be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman if the report is very long? Some of us would be very glad to have the report read.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. It is quite long.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Would the gentleman agree, under those circumstances, that there will not be any action on the report this evening? I think it very important that the House should have a chance to deliberate on the report.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I quite agree with the gentleman about that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

ALLEGED CHARGES AGAINST TWO MEMBERS OF CONGRESS.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the communication of the Attorney General in reply to House Resolution 211, directing the Attorney General of the United States to transmit to the House of Representatives the names of the two Members of Congress and the nature of the charges made against them under said Resolution 211, together with the report of the Attorney General thereon, with directions from the House to said Judiciary Committee to report at the earliest possible moment its conclusions and such recommendations as it may see fit to make, respectfully submit the following report:

STATEMENT OF FACTS.

The grand jury impaneled at the February term, 1924, in the District Court of the United States of America for the Northern District of Illinois, eastern division, made a special report to the court, which report, among other things, set forth the following:

"Incidental to the investigation of matters of which this grand jury had jurisdiction certain other facts not directly pertaining to the Veterans' Bureau were developed by counsel for the Government which we regard of great importance. There is no jurisdiction of them in the northern district of Illinois, but we are assured by Mr. Crim that he will lay them before the Attorney General and the President for consideration. We do not feel that it would subserve the best interests of the Government for this jury to make public at this time the details of these transactions. This jury feels it will suffice to report to your honor that they involve (1) speculation by one or more officials of the Government wherein it has been asserted that official information was used for purposes of speculation; (2) that certain sums of money were paid to two Members of Congress."

On the 6th day of March, 1924, the Committee on Rules of the House of Representatives presented to the House the following resolution:

ALLEGED CHARGES AGAINST TWO MEMBERS OF CONGRESS.

House Resolution.

"Whereas a grand jury of the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois, southern division, impaneled at the February term, 1924, has reported to that court that certain evidence has been submitted to them involving the payment of money to two Members of Congress;

"Resolved, That the Attorney General be directed to transmit to the House of Representatives the names of the two Members of Congress and the nature of the charges made against them."

This resolution was agreed to and forwarded at once to the Attorney General. In the meantime, certain newspapers and public rumors gave the names of two Members of the House of Representatives who were alleged to be the ones named in the report of said grand jury, and both of those Members, so accused, appeared before the House and emphatically denied any guilt and protested their innocence.

On the 8th day of March, 1924, the Speaker laid before the House of Representatives the following communication from the Attorney General in reply to said House Resolution 211:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
March 7, 1924.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIR: Resolution No. 211 of the House of Representatives of the United States passed March 6, 1924, directing me to transmit the names of the two Members of Congress mentioned in the report of the grand jury of the district court of the United States for the northern district of Illinois, eastern division, and the nature of the charges made against such Members of Congress can not be complied with by me for the reasons—

First. I am unwilling to make public the name of any man against whom any criminal charge has been made until the evidence in my possession convinces me that there is reasonable ground to believe that the person is guilty as charged and until proper legal steps shall have been taken to protect the public interests.

Second. To transmit to you the nature of the charges made against any persons under investigation in the Department of Justice is incompatible with the public interest and will tend to defeat the ends of justice.

If, however, the House of Representatives of the United States, acting within its constitutional power (under Article I) to punish its Members for disorderly behavior or to expel such Member, requests that all the evidence now in the possession of anyone connected with the Department of Justice shall be turned over to the House of Representatives to enable it to determine what action should be taken by the House in reference to the conduct of any of its Members, I will direct all such evidence, statements, and information obtainable to be immediately turned over to you or to such committee as may be designated by the House and will await the complete investigation of the facts of the House before continuing the investigation now being made by the Department of Justice. To have two tribunals attempting to act upon the same facts and to hear the same witnesses at the same time will result in confusion and embarrassment and will defeat the ends of justice.

Until I am requested by a resolution of the House of Representatives to submit these matters to the jurisdiction of the House the investigation now being conducted of the matters referred to in said resolution will continue in accordance with the usual rules of the department.

Respectfully,

H. M. DAUGHERTY, Attorney General.

On the reading of said reply of the Attorney General, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] made the following motion:

"Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the communication of the Attorney General be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to report at the earliest possible moment its conclusions and such recommendations as it may see fit to make."

After due consideration, your committee submits the following conclusions and recommendations:

CONCLUSIONS.

Under the reply of the Attorney General there is but one of two courses open to the House of Representatives:

(a) The House take full charge of the investigation and evidence of the alleged charges and relieve the Department of Justice from any further responsibility.

(b) Allow the Department of Justice to continue the investigation now being made.

While there is a difference of opinion among the membership of your committee as to the correctness of the position of the Attorney General that the ends of justice would be imperiled by giving to the House the names of the Members of the House and the charges against them as requested by the House, and while it is a high duty which the House owes to itself and to the country at large to purge itself at the quickest possible moment, of all those, if any there be, unworthy to sit in that body, your committee is unwilling to recommend to the House that it permit itself to be placed in the position of being responsible for the suspension of proceedings by the Attorney General in connection with this matter.

Your committee, therefore, recommends to the House that no further action be taken for the present by the House to procure from the Attorney General the information heretofore requested of the Attorney General by the House and submits the following resolution:

Resolved, That the House take no further action for the present to procure from the Attorney General the information heretofore requested of the Attorney General by the House under House Resolution 211.

MUSCLE SHOALS.

Mr. JEFFERS. Mr. Speaker, I have received some telegrams from Alabama which I wish to put in the RECORD.

These telegrams came in Saturday afternoon and Sunday morning. They have reference to some of the debate which has taken place here during the consideration of the McKenzie bill, which embraces the Henry Ford proposal for Muscle Shoals.

These telegrams are self-explanatory.

I wish to say that all of these gentlemen by whom these messages were sent are worthy and substantial citizens of the district which I have the honor to represent.

Regarding the matters mentioned in their telegrams, I have no fault to find with them. It is quite true that the Alabama Power Co. has developed much water power in the State of Alabama, and I have no contention with these gentlemen who have sent these telegrams relative to the services now being rendered by this company in these cities from which these messages have come.

So far as my position regarding the business which is under consideration here, namely, the adoption by Congress of a plan and a policy covering the disposition and the development and operation of the great governmental project at Muscle Shoals, is concerned, however, I desire to state that I feel sure that it is understood, both here and at home, that I am in favor of the comprehensive Ford offer for the Muscle Shoals plants and project, which offer has been so carefully gone over by the Military Affairs Committee of this House and has been indorsed by that committee as being the safest and most comprehensive proposition before Congress and the offer best providing for the common defense in time of war and for a source of nitrates for fertilizers for the farms of our country in time of peace.

With that statement I am glad to place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the following telegrams:

SELMA, ALA., March 8, 1924.

Hon. LAMAR JEFFERS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Have heard of statement made on floor of House by Congressmen who favor Ford end of Muscle Shoals proposition that the Alabama Power Co. was without backing and had no friends in Alabama. This is not true. Am not in any way affiliated with the Alabama Power Co. nor have I ever averred that I was in favor of Alabama Power Co. on Muscle Shoals proposition, but the statement made on floor of House can not be supported by facts. The Alabama Power Co. does business in Selma, Ala., is giving eminent satisfaction, and doing constructive work and have many warm friends and supporters. You are authorized to make public this statement on floor of House.

ALEX D. PITTS, Attorney and Counselor.

SELMA, ALA., March 8, 1924.

Hon. LAMAR JEFFERS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The Alabama Power Co. is a conservative organization and performing a good service to this country. The present personnels are of the highest type and indicating they are looking after the interest of Alabama. As a whole, statements made on the floor of the House to the effect that the Alabama Power Co. is without friends or influence, is, I should say, unwarranted. Please read and have recorded in proceedings before the House. I am not interested financially or otherwise in the Alabama Power Co.

W. C. AGEE.

SELMA, ALA., March 8, 1924.

Hon. LAMAR JEFFERS,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

I am in favor of Ford offer under Federal supervision as approved in Federal water power bill. I believe in competition in industries under Federal regulation. Alabama Power Co. has been the greatest industrial developmental influence in Alabama in 50 years. The statement that it is without friends or honor in this State is as absurd as it is untrue. I am neither a stockholder nor financially nor otherwise affiliated with the Alabama Power Co., except that I am told that I am the largest individual consumer of its power in Selma, as chief surgeon and manager of the Vaughan Memorial Hospital. Please read on floor in Congress for insertion in RECORD.

F. G. DUBOSE.

SELMA, ALA., March 8, 1924.

Hon. LAMAR JEFFERS,
Washington, D. C.:

I believe Alabama Power Co. performing splendid service for Alabama in distributing power, and regret that any slurs have been cast at this corporation.

H. C. ARMSTRONG.

TALLADEGA, ALA., March 8, 1924.

Hon. LAMAR JEFFERS, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

Alabama Power Co. has been of great service to Talladega and State at large. They are constructive, carry large deposits with local banks, furnish cheap power for our industries, are fair in all transactions, and furnish good and adequate service.

LEON G. JONES,
President Bank & Trust Co. of Talladega.

TALLADEGA, ALA., March 8, 1924.

Hon. LAMAR JEFFERS, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

Wish to take issue with statements recently read into RECORD that Alabama Power Co. is without friends in Alabama. Alabama Power Co. has been of great constructive service to State of Alabama and Talladega. Their service is good and adequate, and they furnish cheap power to our local industries. We find them fair in all their transactions. Please read this into the RECORD.

HUGH L. MCELDERRY,
President Talladega National Bank.

TALLADEGA, ALA., March 8, 1924.

Hon. LAMAR JEFFERS, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

Alabama Power Co. has many satisfied patrons. Its service is good, and it has many friends in Alabama. Please read into RECORD.

W. C. MCMILLAN.

ANNISTON, ALA., March 8, 1924.

Hon. LAMAR JEFFERS, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

This body to-day passed the following resolution:

Whereas it appears from the press reports received that Hon. MARTIN B. MADDEN, of the House of Representatives, attacked on March 6 the integrity of the Alabama Power Co.; and

Whereas in the opinion of this body such attack was wholly unjustified by facts: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the board of directors of the Anniston Junior Chamber of Commerce condemns such unfair and unwarranted attacks upon a public utility of this State that has done and is doing so much for the upbuilding of Alabama and especially this district.

Resolved further, That this resolution, which shall not be construed as indorsing any particular offer for Muscle Shoals, shall be placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the Muscle Shoals case, and that a copy of this resolution be wired to each Member of the Alabama delegation in Congress.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS JUNIOR CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

ANNISTON, ALA., March 8, 1924.

Hon. LAMAR JEFFERS, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

This body to-day passed the following resolution:

Whereas the press of the country quoting Hon. MARTIN B. MADDEN, of House of Representatives, on March 6 as attacking the integrity of Alabama Power Co.; and

Whereas such attack in the opinion of this body is wholly unauthorized by the facts: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the board of directors of the Anniston Chamber of Commerce while indorsing no particular offer made for Muscle Shoals does nevertheless condemn such unfair and unwarranted attacks upon a public utility of this State that is doing so much for the upbuilding of the State, and especially the Anniston district.

Resolved further, That these resolutions be placed in CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in Muscle Shoals case and a copy wired to each Member of the Alabama delegation in Congress.

ANNISTON CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
By L. C. WATSON, Secretary.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting the following telegrams which I have received from citizens of Alabama in regard to the bill now pending for the acceptance of Henry Ford's offer for Muscle Shoals:

SAMSON, ALA., March 8, 1924.

Hon. HENRY B. STEAGALL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Reports have reached Samson to the effect that it has been stated in debate on the floor of the House that the Alabama Power Co. has no friends in Alabama. In justice to this great public utility this report should be corrected, as it is entirely erroneous. This corporation not only has a large following who believe that it is a great factor in the progress and prosperity of the State, but there are a large number of people throughout this section who favor the offer of the Alabama Power Co. for Muscle Shoals as opposed to the Ford offer.

J. S. BENNETT.

AUBURN ALA., March 8, 1924.

HENRY B. STEAGALL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The hard and unkind remarks made concerning Alabama Power Co. in Muscle Shoals debate is untrue. This company is one of the great developers of our State, and is doing a great work. Please read this into the records.

W. D. MARTIN.
B. W. JONES.

EUFAULA, ALA., March 8, 1924.

Hon. HENRY B. STEAGALL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The business interests of this section resent the imputation that the Alabama Power Co. has no friends in this part of the State. We believe a grave mistake will have been made if Congress accepts the Ford offer for Muscle Shoals.

T. F. PRUETT,
Editor Eufaula Daily Citizen.

UNION SPRINGS, ALA., March 8, 1924.

Hon. HENRY B. STEAGALL, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

An election in favor of Alabama Power Co., serving this city, carried every vote except one. The company has been serving us some time and everybody is well pleased with service.

G. M. EDWARDS, Mayor.

C. A. OWEN, Tax Assessor.
FIRST NATIONAL BANK.
W. C. THOMPSON, Tax Collector.
MERCHANTS' AND FARMERS' BANK.

UNION SPRINGS, ALA., March 8, 1924.

H. B. STEAGALL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Statements that power company has no friends in Alabama are deliberate, unqualified falsehoods. This city is a warm admirer of power company, and so are other places where steam rates have been cut in half by use of their power. Sixteen thousand dollars' worth of their bonds sold here last month. We have every confidence in their ability to manage Shoals for development of third district and all of Alabama. We know they will not build a city in one spot and let State suffer.

HOWARD C. SMITH, Editor Herald.

ANNISTON, ALA., March 8, 1924.

Hon. HENRY B. STEAGALL, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

This body to-day passed the following resolutions:

"Whereas the press of the country, quoting Hon. MARTIN B. MADDEN, of House of Representatives, on March 6 as attacking the integrity of Alabama Power Co.; and

"Whereas such attack in the opinion of this body is wholly unauthorized by the facts: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the board of directors of the Anniston Chamber of Commerce, while indorsing no particular offer made for Muscle Shoals, does nevertheless condemn such unfair and unwarranted attacks upon a public utility of this State that is doing so much for the upbuilding of the State, and especially the Anniston district; be it further

"Resolved, That these resolutions be placed in congressional records in Muscle Shoals case and a copy wired to each Member of the Alabama delegation in Congress."

ANNISTON CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
By L. C. WATSON, Secretary.

ANNISTON, ALA., March 8, 1924.

Hon. HENRY B. STEAGALL, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

This body to-day passed the following resolution:

"Whereas it appears from the press reports received that Hon. MARTIN B. MADDEN, of the House of Representatives, attacked on March 6 the integrity of the Alabama Power Co.; and

"Whereas in the opinion of this body such attack was wholly unjustified by facts: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the board of directors of the Anniston Junior Chamber of Commerce condemns such unfair and unwarranted attack upon a public utility of this State that has done and is doing so much for the upbuilding of Alabama, and especially this district.

"Resolved further, That this resolution, which shall not be construed as indorsing any particular offer for Muscle Shoals, shall be placed in the congressional records of the Muscle Shoals case, and that a copy of this resolution be wired to each Member of the Alabama delegation in Congress."

BOARD OF DIRECTORS JUNIOR CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

MIDLAND CITY, ALA. March 10, 1924.

Hon. HENRY B. STEAGALL, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

I am wiring you the sentiment of practically every man and woman in our section of country when I say lease Muscle Shoals to Henry Ford; one of the greatest opportunities now presents itself to do something for our people.

Dr. W. A. PARRISH.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, by permission granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the bill providing for the acceptance of the offer of Henry Ford for Muscle Shoals, I wish to have printed in the RECORD the following telegrams from friends and constituents of mine who are leading business men in my district, as per their request, and also some telegrams of indorsement of the Alabama delegation in their support of this bill.

By reference to the RECORD of the speeches complained of it will be seen that their criticism of the Alabama Power Co. was largely based upon a resolution passed at a state-wide mass meeting held in the city of Montgomery, Ala., on March 1, 1922, which is also set out below:

COURTLAND, ALA., March 8, 1924.

Hon. E. B. ALMON, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

We are unequivocally for the Ford offer for Muscle Shoals. However, we protest against the unjust criticism of Alabama Power Co. and its president on the floor of the House. The Alabama Power Co. is doing constructive and appreciated work in Alabama. Read on floor.

HECTOR D. LANE.

H. D. BYNUM.
S. S. PIPPEN.
C. H. MEIGS, Mayor.
E. P. BYNUM, Alderman.
J. F. HOLLENBECK, Alderman.
C. C. HORTON, Alderman.

ATHENS, ALA., March 7, 1924.

Hon. E. B. ALMON, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

Athens is one of the few towns which refused to sell to the Alabama Power Co. its franchises for water and light. They only offered $12,000 for both, with entire outfit. George M. Forman & Co., Chicago bond dealers, rate these franchises at $185,000. The Alabama Power Co. refused then and still refuses to sell its power to Athens, attempting to force us to dispose of our plant and franchises to them.

Secretary, Athens Commercial Club.

Hon. ED. B. ALMON,
Washington, D. C.:

The unwarranted, unjust, and unfair statements made on the floor of the House yesterday by certain Representatives about Alabama Power Co. must not be permitted to remain without comment. You know personally that Alabama Power Co. is a constructive force in the upbuilding of this State and I urge you to write this telegram into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

HUNTSVILLE, ALA., March 8, 1924.

Hon. E. B. ALMON,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

A gross injustice was done yesterday to the Alabama Power Co. Representatives who do not live in this section are not speaking the feeling and sentiment of our people. The Alabama Power Co. has never gone into any community without the consent of its people and without supplying electric service in a greater quantity and at a lower price than was otherwise possible. Industries throughout this State where service is available have made enormous savings by using this company's water power, and numerous towns have obtained their first electric lights from this source. Beyond the shadow of a doubt of any thinking man the Alabama Power Co. is a potent force for the good and benefit of our great State, and urge your placing this telegram into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

BURTON AND HAGER.

MEMORIAL TO THE PRESIDENT AND CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES AND THE COMMITTEES OF CONGRESS, ADOPTED BY THE STATE-WIDE MASS MEETING HELD IN THE CITY AUDITORIUM AT MONTGOMERY ON WEDNESDAY, MARCH 1, 1922.

We, citizens of Alabama, 5,000 strong, representing county governments, municipal authorities, women's clubs, labor bodies, chambers of commerce, civic bodies, and farmers' organizations from every quarter of the State, in mass meeting assembled at Montgomery, with full confidence in both the justice and wisdom of the President and Congress, do hereby declare:

That while the entire Muscle Shoals stretch of the Tennessee River lies within the borders of this State, the right to control and regulate the river in the interest of the Nation's commerce has been ceded by the State of Alabama to the Federal Government. We recognize the fact that Muscle Shoals is the property of the Nation, belonging alike to the people of all of the States, and, while we claim no greater right than any other State to say what shall be done with Muscle Shoals, we believe that we but exercise the guaranties of the Federal Constitution when we petition Congress that this great national asset be not employed by the Government as an instrumentality for fastening upon us and upon our children and our children's children the yoke of an oppressive and burdensome monopoly.

We affirm that the Alabama Power Co. now owns and controls a number of splendid power sites on the Coosa River in this State; that it owns and controls all of the available power sites on Little River in Alabama; and that it owns the wonderful power site at Cherokee Bluffs on the Tallapoosa River in this State; that in the 14 years since its incorporation it has built one power dam in this State and commenced work on one other dam; that at the present rate of development of the power potentialities already under the control of this corporation more than 100 years will go by before all of these dormant water powers are harnessed; that it has been the policy of that corporation to develop only such power as can be sold in small units and at high prices; that controlling as it does all of the great water-power sites in a State blessed by God Almighty with wonderful power possibilities, it, a foreign-coptrolled corporation, is in position to litigate with any American-owned organization which may seek to develop any one of Alabama's wasting water powers, just as it now threatens to litigate with Henry Ford, or with the Government, if either seeks to build Dam No. 3 at Muscle Shoals, or to control the Government-built steam plant and transmission line at Gorgas; that in spite of the fact that this foreign-owned corporation has long enjoyed exemption from taxation in this State, it has been busy ever since its entrance into Alabama in preempting every great power site within our borders, and in so copper riveting its hold on all of Alabama's great hydroelectric potentialities as to prevent for all time their development by any possible competitor; that it has been its policy to buy these power sites at farm-land prices and to hold them in perpetuity as power sites; that it already controls the utilities in our principal cities and is year by year securing the control of the utilities in our towns and villages; and that if it secures Muscle Shoals it will have perfected its control of all of our great water powers and will hold in its selfish grasp all of these instrumentalities, placed within our borders by a beneficient providence for the promotion of the commercial and industrial welfare of all the people.

We hold that it would be a travesty on legislation if, after many years of congressional consideration of how best to conserve the power in our navigable streams for the benefit of all the people and how most surely to preserve them from being used as instruments of monopoly, the Nation's greatest water power should be handed over to the Alabama Power Co. under the national water power act; and we

Further hold that it would be the quintessence of legislative folly for the Government, after 10 years of investigation as to how best to free the United States from its dependence upon a foreign power for its supply of nitrogen for explosives, in the event of war, and after spending millions of dollars in the construction of the greatest nitrogen fixation plant in the world, to turn over the only power capable of successfully operating the nitrate plant to a corporation owned and controlled by foreigners.

We remind Congress that just as the Alabama Power Co. has returned evil for good to the people of Alabama, so it is the one corporation whose dealings with our country in the grim emergency of war was so shameless, selfish, and conscienceless that when its conduct was investigated by a select committee of Congress the minority members of this committee joined with the majority in denouncing its brazen and sordid betrayal of its duty to a war-beset Nation.

Again affirming our utmost confidence in the ability and the desire of the President and the Congress of the United States and the committees of Congress to reach the soundest solution of the pending questions relating to the disposition of Muscle Shoals, we wish to express ourselves with regard to Mr. Henry Ford's proffered contract with the Government. The subject is of such vital interest to the people of Alabama that with greatest enthusiasm they have assembled in this meeting for the purpose of making this memorial:

Upon mature deliberation, we, as citizens, do express our firm conviction that it is to the best interest of the United States and to the interest of the people of Alabama that the offer of Henry Ford be accepted and concluded as a binding contract, and for the following among other reasons:

The acceptance of the Ford offer would insure the operation in Alabama of at least two great organizations engaged in the development and sale of hydroelectric energy, and would further insure competition in the distribution and sale of power throughout the territory which can be reached by transmission lines from the several power sites on the Tennessee River whose development is within the contemplation of the Ford offer.

The Ford offer insures the operation of United States nitrate plant No. 2 for a period of 100 years for the production of fertilizers in time of peace and for the production of nitrates for explosives in the event of war.

It insures to the millions of farmers throughout the United States, whose organizations have with unanimity indorsed the offer of Henry Ford, the continuous operation of this Government-built plant for the production of nitrate fertilizers in competition with the present producers of nitrates, by a company whose profits will be limited to 8 per cent, and in sufficient volume to have a controlling influence in fixing the price of nitrates and nitrate fertilizers for agricultural uses.

The Ford offer insures to the people of the United States the operation of nitrate plant No. 2 and its maintenance in such a constant state of readiness, with a trained force of operatives, as to guarantee to the Government and its citizens an independent, internal supply of nitrates, in exact accord with the announced intention of Congress as expressed in section 124 of the national defense act of 1916.

The Ford offer guarantees the construction of Dam No. 3 and makes provision for use by the people of the United States for purposes of navigation of one of the country's largest and most important rivers, which is an integral part of the great Mississippi River waterways system.

In the consideration given to the various offers for Muscle Shoals much has been said about the profit and loss that would accrue to the Government of the United States and to its people from the acceptance or the rejection of the various offers. We respectfully urge a plan which looks to a constant supply of cheap fertilizers for the farmers of the Nation through a period of 100 years, which insures to American industry during that period the use of nearly 1,000,000 horsepower of electric energy, which provides for the security of the Nation in the event of war, and which guarantees the navigability of one of the country's greatest rivers for all time. These continuing additions to the resources of the Nation, if it were possible to express them in terms of dollars, with interest at 4 per cent, will in the course of 100 years add so vastly to the wealth of the Nation and the prosperity of its people that any difference in the price of the nitrate plant as fixed in the several offers, and any difference between the purchase price offered and the estimated possible scrap value of the property, is dwarfed into insignificance.

With these considerations in view and having in mind the freedom of our own people from a galling and oppressive water-power monopoly, the freedom of the American farmer from a burdensome and grinding fertilizer monopoly, the opening of a great river to navigation, and the security of the country in the event of war, we urge the President and the Congress of the United States to accept the offer of Henry Ford, whom we verily believe seeks through his offer to dedicate to the American people, and especially to the farmers of America, his genius and his fortune.

We indorse the sentiment "America first" and Muscle Shoals first for Americans, and above all, for American farmers. Henry Ford is a typical American, who by his genius has done more for country people and country life than any other man of his time. A man who has the trust and confidence of the great masses of the common people, as evidenced by the resolutions adopted by every gathering of plain, ordinary Americans, including the representatives of 4,000,000 farmers, who have given voice to their sentiments in regard to his proposal for the development of Muscle Shoals.

We believe the issue in Congress is clearly drawn. It is a contest between the people and the interests which control the people's fertilizer and power resources.

On behalf of the army of the unemployed, in the interest of the great body of plain American citizens, in the name of millions of perplexed and burdened farmers, we beg our President and the Congress of the United States and its committees to promptly accept the offer of Henry Ford.

Sincerely,

W. FRANK JAMES.

ST. PAUL, MINN., March 10, 1924.

Hon. W. FRANK JAMES, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Farmers in Minnesota, while they have no immediate fertilizer problem, have been intensely interested in the Muscle Shoals proposition from the very beginning. They have been interested in the Ford tender, and our members in this State's referendums in the past have shown that they were thoroughly committed to this proposition.

Now that it is about to go over, we wish to extend to you an acknowledgment of the services rendered by you in fighting for the Muscle Shoals bill.

Sincerely yours,

MINNESOTA FARM BUREAU FEDERATION,
J. S. JONES, Secretary.

MADISON, WIS., March 11, 1924.

Hon. W. FRANK JAMES, M. C.,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We understand that you took a leading part in securing the adoption of the Ford offer as just passed by the House of Representatives with such a large majority.

The farmers of Wisconsin are not so vitally interested in nitrate fertilizers, as we plan on securing most of these from home sources in our rotation, but we are interested in the general principles embodied in the disposition of our natural resources. May we hope that you will continue to support this measure with the same vigor and give assistance in its passage through the Senate.

Yours very truly,

WISCONSIN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION.
I. M. WRIGHT, Secretary.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, in ordinary business, whether it happens to be a swap or a purchase or sale, the average man puts to himself this question: "What do I get and what shall I pay?" And even though the Muscle Shoals proposition involves values infinitely greater than the transactions of ordinary, plain, everyday people, the essential factor in determining the wisdom or policy of consummating the contract is precisely the same.

The parties to this extraordinary proposal are the Federal Government and Henry Ford. We in this body represent the people of the United States as one of the contracting parties, and we must put the question to ourselves precisely as if we were acting for ourselves and had a vast property which some individual was seeking to acquire.

WHAT WE GIVE.

When we were engaged in the World War the Government launched the enterprise at Muscle Shoals for the purpose of furnishing nitrates for explosives. It was a far-reaching undertaking, planned on a tremendous scale. When the armistice came it found the project in the following shape:

The Government had completed—
Nitrate plant No. 1 (including 1,900 acres of land), costing	$12,888,000
Nitrate plant No. 2 (including 2,300 acres of land), costing	68,174,000
Surplus material costing	1,500,000
It had bought and developed Waco Quarry (400 acres of land), costing	1,179,000
It had built the—
Gorgas steam plant, on the property of the Alabama Power Co., at a cost of	5,337,000
Warrior substation, costing	384,000
Drifton Railroad	50,000
Warrior-Muscle Shoals transmission line	905,000
Total	88,417,000

WHAT WE GET.

The Ford offer contemplates paying for all of this the nominal sum of $5,000,000, less the sum of $3,472,000, which the Government must use in restoring a steam plant.

The reason for that is that the Gorgas steam plant, while the Ford offer had been pending, has been returned to the Alabama Power Co. for $3,472,000, and to make up for this deduction the Ford offer or demand is that out of the purchase price of $5,000,000 the United States Government build another steam plant to take the place of the Gorgas plant, to cost $3,472,000. So actually the Ford offer means that the Government shall deed over in fee simple to him, or to a corporation to be formed by him, $85,000,000 of valuable property for $1,528,000.

ITS VALUE AS SALVAGE.

Even if it were a mere salvage proposition, involving only the recovery of all that is humanly possible out of a war venture, this proposal of Henry Ford would not be worth considering, as it is admitted that he offers considerably less than the various properties would sell for on the auction block. In fact, its estimated value as scrap is $16,000,000.

But, it is argued, if the properties are sold as scrap that ends the usefulness of the entire venture, and the localities affected, as well as the entire country, would lose a great opportunity for the development of a signally important and beneficial enterprise.

This is true, and it is incumbent upon us to weigh the alternative, namely, the destruction of a great enterprise or to practically present it as a gift to one man.

It is also incumbent upon us to consider if these two proposals are in fact the only alternatives.

GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP.

No matter how repulsive it may be to some there is a third alternative, namely, completion and operation by the Government. And if this is disagreeable there is yet a fourth alternative—the Government could complete the dams and turn them and the nitrate plants over to a private individual or a corporation for operation.

The advocates of this sacrifice of Government property, however, seem to be opposed either to Government ownership or operation. They are willing to have the Government go into the construction business and lay out millions of dollars to build, to plan, and construct; but when it comes to the point of the Government obtaining any profit out of the enterprise they hold up their hands in horror and pretend to see the shadow of socialism.

I have only this to say to the opponents of Government ownership:

What I object to is that when you draw your cards you will not play with them. If you are for individual ownership and operation, stick to it. I have no complaint to offer; but do not hold up your hands in horror of public ownership and then ask the Government to stake you to your capital. Which is worse, for the Government to build and operate or to build and present it to some corporation on a platter?

THE FERTILIZER QUESTION.

The friends of this measure urge as a reason for this stupendous gift to Henry Ford his assurance that he will manufacture fertilizer to be sold cheaply to the farmers of the United States, and thus break the Fertilizer Trust. This is a very laudable aim, but they soft pedal the fact that he will only use one of the plants for that purpose. They keep in the background the fact that the other nitrate plant will be devoted to his own exclusive private business. They also slight the fact that in such manufacture of fertilizer as he may carry on he does not propose to indulge in charity or benevolence, but secures to himself, and his heirs an 8 per cent profit. This, of course, actually means nothing at all so far as assuring the farmer cheap fertilizer.

TRUST BUSTING.

But assuming that all that is promised in the way of breaking up the Fertilizer Trust is admitted as possible and assured, what have our friends to say about the precedent to be thus established whereby the Government in the future may be taxed with the task of breaking up other trusts? If it is right to give Henry Ford $85,000,000 of property for $1,500,000 upon his promise to break a trust, may we not be called on in the future to lend other wealthy capitalists vast sums of money for similar enterprises?

WAR SERVICE.

Then the proponents of this bill urge another argument in Ford's behalf. They say, "He will turn over the nitrate plant to the Government in time of war." Surely this is no consideration at all, for the Government would have the right to commandeer the plant in time of war whether it was or was not "nominated in the bond."

THE DAM QUESTION.

But even with all of these shortcomings, the wisdom of the acceptance or refusal of the offer might still be open to debate were it not for the fact that it has another phase. The Government sank $17,000,000 in the Wilson Dam and it is nearly half complete. It will cost $25,000,000 to complete it. The Government also planned the construction of another dam designated as Dam No. 3 on which nothing has been done whatever. Twenty-five million dollars must be spent for its construction.

The Ford offer demands that these projects shall be completed. In other words, the sale of $85,000,000 of property involved in the nitrate plants, the quarry, the railroad, and the town sites for $1,500,000 does not terminate the liability of the Government, but we must continue the dam construction at a total outlay of $67,000,000. And then, when the dams are completed, Ford will use them for his own purposes without restraint or control at a nominal rent per annum.

There is nothing in the measure before the House which binds him to furnish heat, light, and power to the vicinity, and if he should elect to do so there is no provision in his offer or in the act to subject his charges to review or modification. He has the whip hand throughout.

The whole transaction has the earmarks of an unconscionable bargain. The ordinary business man would consider he was driving a pretty shrewd bargain if he got $85,000,000 of property having a scrap value of $16,000,000 for only $1,500,000. One would think Ford would be sport enough to take the dams as they are with $17,000,000 of work, labor, and material upon them and complete them at his own expense. This is a better bargain than the usual water power corporation is able to secure under the water power act.

THE WATER POWER ACT.

Where a corporation aims to enter upon a water power project under the water power act the following conditions must be met:

a. It must acquire the land and water rights, build the dam, and install the turbines and machinery at its own expense. Ford wants the Government to do all of this for him.

b. Under the water power act a lease of only 50 years is granted. Ford wants his lease to run for 100 years.

c. The water-power company licensed under the act to install a dam and power plant must subject its charges for heat and power to governmental review and modification, a wise safeguard to prevent monopoly. Ford's offer and the measure before the House excuses his corporation from this salutary surveillance.

Efforts have been made on the floor and in Committee of the Whole to attach to the Ford contract these safeguards in consonance with the provisions of the water power act, which apply without distinction or exception to every other corporation engaged in the development of water power. All such attempts to modify the rigor of Ford's arrogant demands were relentlessly beaten down. His friends in this House have boldly thrown down the gauntlet and challenged the House to vote the Ford proposal "either up or down." In other words, "to take it or leave it."

What reason is there in the world to exempt Ford and the corporation to be formed by him from the wise and just limitations imposed on other water-power ventures?

BENEVOLENCE NOT A CORPORATE HERITAGE.

They eulogize him and point out his phenomenal success as an organizer and as a humane employer of labor. They paint him as a great benefactor of the human race. Perhaps he is. Every man who makes two blades of grass grow where only one grew before is an asset to the world; but it must be admitted that while he has been making men happy with "Lizzies" he has also piled up one of the greatest fortunes in the world. Furthermore, if this trust is reposed in him by the surrender of these vast water-power rights into his keeping, and if we assume that he will so manipulate and restrain his individual acquisitiveness so as to be content with moderate profits, what assurance is there that his son and successor, Edsel Ford, will manifest similar tenderness and consideration? And when Edsel passes away—for the lease is for 100 years, remember—are these noble attributes of tenderness, restraint, and moderation to pass on to the successors in control of the corporation as a beautiful, inevitable, and continuous heritage? Such bland and childlike confidence may be an admirable attribute in the relations between men and men—although few of those advocating this policy, I venture to say, would manifest it in his own business—but in the dealings between the Government and individuals posterity will be loath to praise a Congress so recreant to its trust and so lacking in ordinary precaution as not to bind the recipients of its favor to fair dealing.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 6349) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. SMOOT, Mr. MOSES, Mr. OVERMAN, and Mr. GLASS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 4577. An act providing for the examination and survey of Mill Cut and Clubfoot Creek, N. C.; and

H. R. 5557. A act to authorize the settlement of the indebtedness of the Republic of Finland to the United States of America.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. LINEBERGER, for three weeks, to visit California on account of important public business.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 42 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, March 11, 1924, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, March 11, 1924.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, whether it is sunshine or cloud that hovers about us, Thou art the same in Thy dealings and constant in remembrance of our needs. We come seeking Thy blessing this morning and ask that every circumstance of life may be realized by us as of Thy good pleasure. Help us to submit to Thy dealings and to walk along the pathway of Thine ordination. We humbly ask in Jesus' name. Amen.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary (George A. Sanderson) read the following communication:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, D. C., March 11, 1924.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. WESLEY L. JONES, a Senator from the State of Washington, to perform the duties of the Chair this legislative day.

ALBERT B. CUMMINS,
President pro tempore.

Mr. JONES of Washington thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer.

THE JOURNAL.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The principal clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD], the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] are engaged in a hearing before the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-seven Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 518) to authorize and direct the Secretary of War, for national defense in time of war and for the production of fertilizers and other useful products in time of peace, to sell to Henry Ford, or a corporation to be incorporated by him, nitrate plant No. 1, at Sheffield, Ala.; nitrate plant No. 2, at Muscle Shoals, Ala.; Waco Quarry, near Russellville, Ala.; steam-power plant to be located and constructed at or near Lock and Dam No. 17 on the Black Warrior River, Ala., with right of way and transmission line to nitrate plant No. 2, Muscle Shoals, Ala.; and to lease to Henry Ford, or a corporation to be incorporated by him, Dam No. 2 and Dam No. 3 (as designated in H. Doc. No. 1262, 64th Cong., 1st sess.), including power stations when constructed as provided herein, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

TWENTY-FIVE PER CENT REDUCTION IN TAXES (S. DOC. NO. 63).

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

It had been my earnest hope that a 25 per cent reduction in taxes to be paid for the current year might be provided by law before the 15th of March current. Many people have been expecting that such would be the case and deferred their tax returns accordingly. It is a matter of such imminent importance that I have no hesitation in recommending that the public welfare would be much advanced by temporarily laying aside all other legislation and enacting a resolution for this purpose, which ought to be by unanimous consent. The taxpayers, the business interests, agriculture, industry, finance; in fact, all the elements that go to make up the economic welfare of the people of America would be greatly benefited by such action. It would remove an element of uncertainty from the current financial year at once, which would be a strong stimulant to business, with its resultant benefit to the wage earner and the agriculture of our country. It is impossible to see that any harm could accrue from this action, and there is every prospect of resulting benefits which would be very great. It would be a positive step in the right direction, which is much needed at this time to justify the confidence of the people that the Government is intent solely on the promotion of the public welfare, without regard to any collateral objects.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 11, 1924.

RESIGNATION OF SENATOR LENROOT FROM COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS AND SURVEYS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication, which will be read.

The reading clerk read as follows:

SOUTHERN PINES, N. C., March 10, 1924.

To the PRESIDING OFFICER OF THE SENATE:

I hereby resign as chairman and member of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

IRVINE L. LENROOT.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I am in receipt of a communication from the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] explaining the tender of his resignation, which has just been made. I ask that the communication which I send to the Secretary's desk may be read to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana asks that the communication submitted by him may be read. In the absence of objection, it will be read:

The reading clerk read as follows:

Senator LENROOT, in sending from Southern Pines, N. C., his resignation as chairman and member of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, gave out the following statement:

"Since coming to Southern Pines I have not recuperated as I had hoped, and it will not be possible for me to continue my work on the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys. I realized some time ago that I was nearing the point of exhaustion and stated upon the floor of the Senate that if the oil investigation continued indefinitely I would feel compelled to resign from the committee. I have given nearly four months of service in this investigation, trying as best I could to keep up with such other work as could not be neglected, with the result that I can not in my present state of health continue any longer.

"I hope to be able to return to Washington next week, but shall not attempt anything more than routine work of my office until my health is restored."

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LODGE. I present resolutions of the General Court of Massachusetts, favoring the passage of what is known as the Bursum bill, and also relative to a uniform child labor law. I ask that they be appropriately referred and printed in the RECORD under the rule.

The resolutions were referred as follows:

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, 1924.

Resolutions favoring the passage by Congress of legislation relative to the retirement of disabled emergency officers of the United States Army.

Whereas there is pending before the Congress of the United States Senate bill No. 33, known as the Bursum bill, being a bill making eligible for retirement under certain conditions officers of the Army of the United States, other than officers of the Regular Army, who incurred physical disability in line of duty while in the service of the United States during the World War; and

Whereas such proposed legislation is equitable and seeks to do justice to a class of worthy disabled officers, entitled because of their service, their wounds, and disabilities incurred therefrom to the same consideration and privileges as men of their rank who performed the same service but were of the Regular Army; and

Whereas the officers of such class are the only disabled officers to which the privileges of retirement have not been extended, the same class of officers of the Navy and Marine Corps already being retired under law: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the General Court of Massachusetts urges upon Congress the importance and desirability of speedily passing such legislation in order to extend the necessary aid to the surviving 800 wounded and disabled emergency officers of such class, who rendered such gallant and conspicuous service; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent by the secretary of the Commonwealth to the President of the United States and to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Massachusetts.

In the house of representatives, adopted February 14, 1924.

In the Senate, adopted in concurrence February 19, 1924.

A true copy. Attest:

F. W. COOK,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

To the Committee on Military Affairs.

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, 1924.

Resolutions in favor of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States authorizing Congress to enact a uniform child labor law.

Resolved, That because of the injustice and hardship to children in industry, and the harm to industry itself resulting from lack of uniformity in State legislation regulating child labor, the General Court of Massachusetts respectfully petitions Congress to propose an amendment to the Constitution of the United States authorizing Congress to enact uniform legislation as to child labor throughout the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent by the secretary of the Commonwealth to the Presiding Officers of both branches of Congress and to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Massachusetts.

In senate, adopted February 12, 1924.

In house of representatives, adopted, in concurrence, February 18, 1924.

A true copy. Attest:

F. W. COOK,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

To the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SMITH. I present a petition of the national executive committee, Private Soldiers and Sailors' Legion, relative to railway labor legislation, which I ask be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL HEADQUARTERS
PRIVATE SOLDIERS AND SAILORS' LEGION
OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Washington, D. C., March 11, 1924.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

The Private Soldiers and Sailors' Legion of the United States of America respectfully petitions that Senate bill No. 2646 and House bill No. 7358, by Senator R. B. HOWELL, of Nebraska, and Representative A. W. BARKLEY, of Kentucky, known as the "railway labor act," legislation planned to bring enduring peace to the entire transportation industry of the United States, be speedily enacted into law at this session.

This petition is presented following the unanimous action of our national executive committee last week, March 8, indorsing this legislation and requesting the Congress of the United States to enact the bills into law.

A large number of our members throughout the United States are railroad men, affiliated with the railroad brotherhoods and with other union labor organizations.

This legislation is solidly backed by more than 2,000,000 railroad workers and has the indorsement of union labor everywhere and our entire organization.

It is a carefully prepared measure and embodies the best features of other laws which have tended in the past to preserve peace between the railroads, the railroad workers, and the public.

We have previously asked for the repeal of the Esch-Cummins Act and are heartily in sympathy with the provisions of the pending act which would abolish the Railroad Labor Board.

The proposed legislation, in our opinion, would largely tend to prevent strikes and put the transportation business of the country on a sounder economic basis.

Our national executive committee for more than five years has carefully followed all proposed railroad legislation in Congress, and it believes that enactment of these bills into law would result in a square deal not only to the railroads and the workers but to the entire American public in all transportation matters.

Respectfully submitted.

NATIONAL EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE,
PRIVATE SOLDIERS AND SAILORS' LEGION, [SEAL.] MARVIN GATES SPERRY, National President.
BENJ. BLANK, National Secretary.

Mr. SPENCER presented the petition of Frans E. Lindquist, of Kansas City, Mo., praying for the passage of legislation providing that bail shall be admitted as a matter of right upon all arrests in criminal cases and upon all appeals or writs of error in the Supreme Court of the United States and any United States court of appeals where the offense is not punishable by death, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CURTIS presented a resolution of the Reserve Officers' Association, of Lawrence, Kans., favoring an appropriation sufficient to furnish summer camp training to reserve officers at the rate of one-third of the full number each year and for the maintenance of divisional and regimental headquarters, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Clay Center, Kans., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called McNary-Haugen bill providing aid to agriculture, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Seven Federated Shop Crafts, of Fort Scott, Kans., relative to the repeal of the transportation act of 1920, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of sundry employees of the Kansas City Southern Railway Co., of Pittsburg, Kans., remonstrating against the passage of legislation amending the transportation act of 1920 at the present session of Congress, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. CAPPER presented a resolution of the Ashland (Kans.) Study Club, favoring the enactment of legislation restricting the production of narcotics to medical and scientific needs, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Sterling, Kans., praying for the passage of the so-called Johnson immigration bill, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a resolution of the Association of Mechanical and Power Plant Employees of the Rock Island Lines, of Horton, Kans., protesting against any amendment at this time to the transportation act of 1920, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a resolution of the Reserve Officers' Association, of Sedgwick County, Kans., favoring adequate appropriations for the Officers' Reserve Corps in accordance with the recommendation of the War Department, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

INVESTIGATION OF INTERNAL REVENUE BUREAU.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senate Resolution 168, submitted by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] February 21, 1924, authorizing the appointment of a special committee to investigate the Bureau of Internal Revenue, be recommitted to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SMOOT. I was authorized by the Committee on Finance to report back with amendments Senate Resolution 168, which was just recommitted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be placed on the calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. RALSTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 1790) for the relief of Herman O. Kruschke (Rept. No. 238); and

A bill (S. 1982) granting the consent of Congress to the construction, maintenance, and operation by the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co., its successors and assigns, of a line of railroad across the northwesterly portion of the Fort Snelling Military Reservation in the State of Minnesota (Rept. No. 239).

Mr. CARAWAY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 624) to amend the practice and procedure in Federal courts, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. MAYFIELD, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1929) to refund to Clinton G. Edgar income tax erroneously and illegally collected, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 240) thereon.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 350) to authorize the transfer of surplus books from the Navy Department to the Interior Department, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 241) thereon.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. RANSDELL:

A bill (S. 2801) to amend paragraph (5) of section 20 of the interstate commerce act; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

A bill (S. 2802) for the relief of Richard E. A. Thiele; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. GLASS:

A bill (S. 2803) to regulate within the District of Columbia the sale of milk, cream, and certain milk products, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. CURTIS:

A bill (S. 2804) granting an increase of pension to Sarah A. James (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 2805) granting an increase of pension to Maggie Crouch (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 2806) granting an increase of pension to Martha L. Tedrick (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 2807) granting an increase of pension to William H. Archer (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ASHURST:

A bill (S. 2808) for the relief of Jesse A. Frost (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SPENCER:

A bill (S. 2809) to amend section 4076 of the Revised Statutes; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

A bill (S. 2810) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign nations, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved September 21, 1922, commonly known as the tariff act of 1922; to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (S. 2811) granting a pension to Anna M. Knelbert (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BURSUM:

A bill (S. 2812) to extend the benefits of the employees' compensation act of September 7, 1916, to John F. Oglesby; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HOWELL:

A bill (S. 2813) reaffirming the use of the ether for radio communication or otherwise to be the inalienable possession of the Nation, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. SPENCER:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 95) to authorize the American National Red Cross to continue the use of temporary buildings now erected on Square 172, Washington, D. C.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 518) to authorize and direct the Secretary of War, for national defense in time of war and for the production of fertilizers and other useful products in time of peace, to sell to Henry Ford, or a corporation to be incorporated by him, nitrate plant No. 1, at Sheffield, Ala.; nitrate plant No. 2, at Muscle Shoals, Ala.; Waco Quarry, near Russellville, Ala.; steam-power plant to be located and constructed at or near Lock and Dam No. 17 on the Black Warrior River, Ala., with right of way and transmission line to nitrate plant No. 2, Muscle Shoals, Ala.; and to lease to Henry Ford, or a corporation to be incorporated by him, Dam No. 2 and Dam No. 3 (as designated in H. Doc. No. 1262, 64th Cong., 1st sess.), including power stations when constructed as provided herein, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

AGRICULTURAL DIVERSIFICATION.

Mr. WALSH of Montana submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2250) to promote a permanent system of self-supporting agriculture in regions adversely affected by the stimulation of wheat production during the war, and aggravated by many years of small yields and high production costs of wheat, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

INVESTIGATION OF DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE BY SPECIAL COMMITTEE.

Mr. BROOKHART. I offer a resolution on behalf of the select committee investigating the Department of Justice.

The resolution (S. Res. 189) was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution No. 157, agreed to February 29, 1924, be, and the same hereby is, amended to authorize the select committee created by said resolution, or any subcommittee thereof, to sit and perform its duties at such times and places as may be deemed advisable or necessary by said committee, and to empower the chairman of said select committee, or any member thereof, to summon witnesses by subpœna or otherwise and to administer oaths to them.

ACCOUNTS OF THE FARM LOAN COMMISSIONER.

Mr. HOWELL. I submit a resolution, which I ask may lie over.

The resolution (S. Res. 190) was read and ordered to lie over under the rule, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish to the Senate a statement in detail of the funds that have been covered into the account of the Farm Loan Commissioner, together with a statement of the source of said funds in each case and the date of each disbursement from said account.

REPORT OF THE NATIONAL FORESTRY COMMISSION (S. DOC. NO. 59).

Mr. MOSES. I ask unanimous consent for the reconsideration of the vote by which Senate Resolution 186, to print the report of the National Forestry Commission as a Senate document, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the vote by which the Senate agreed to the resolution is reconsidered.

Mr. MOSES. I request unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. MOSES. I move to amend the resolution by adding at the end thereof the words "with illustrations."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the report of the National Forestry Commission for the year ending June 30, 1923, be printed as a Senate document, with illustrations.

CHANGE OF DATE OF INAUGURATION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no resolution coming over from a previous day, routine morning business is closed. In pursuance of the unanimous-consent agreement heretofore entered into the Chair lays before the Senate Senate Joint Resolution 22.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 22) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States fixing the commencement of the terms of President and Vice President and Members of Congress, and fixing the time of the assembling of Congress, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the joint resolution be dispensed with and that it be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the joint resolution.

The first amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was, on page 2, line 3, after the word "President," to insert "in office at the time this amendment takes effect"; and in line 5, after the word "Representatives," to insert "then in office," so as to make the section read:

SECTION 1. The terms of the President and Vice President in office at the time this amendment takes effect shall end at noon on the third Monday in January and the terms of Senators and Representatives then in office at noon on the first Monday in January, of the year in which such terms would have ended if this article had not been ratified, and the terms of their successors shall then begin.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 11, to strike out line 12 to line 17, both inclusive, as follows:

SEC. 3. If the House of Representatives shall not choose a President whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them before the time fixed for the beginning of his term, then the Vice President shall act as President as in the case of the death or other constitutional disability of the President.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 3. If the House of Representatives has not chosen a President, whenever the right of choice devolves upon them, before the time fixed for the beginning of his term, then the Vice President chosen for the same term shall act as President until the House of Representatives chooses a President; and the Congress may by law provide that in the event the Vice President has not been chosen before the time fixed for the beginning of his term, what officer shall then act as President, and such officer shall act accordingly until the House of Representatives chooses a President, or until the Senate chooses a Vice President.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Before we pass from the amendments, it seems to me that section 1 would read better if it read "the terms of the President and Vice President in office at the time this amendment takes effect and the terms of Senators and Representatives then in office shall end at noon on the first Monday in January of the year in which such terms would have ended," rather than as it now reads:

The terms of the President and Vice President in office at the time this amendment takes effect shall end at noon on the third Monday in January—

The joint resolution does not state what January—and the terms of Senators and Representatives then in office at noon on the first Monday in January of the year—

And so forth.

Mr. NORRIS. That language indicates what January is meant.

Mr. FLETCHER. It does, but it is a little ambiguous as to the President. Would the resolution not read better if it provided?—

The terms of the President and Vice President in office at the time this amendment takes effect and the terms of Senators and Representatives in office shall end at noon on the third Monday.

Mr. NORRIS. No. The Senator from Florida will observe that it is proposed that the term of the President and Vice President shall end on a different day entirely from the day on which the terms of Members of Congress shall end.

Mr. FLETCHER. One is on the third Monday——

Mr. NORRIS. One is on the third Monday and the other is on the first Monday.

Mr. FLETCHER. I had not noticed that.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senate may act on the pending amendment, I desire to suggest an amendment to the next committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendment last stated has been agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next committee amendment will be stated.

The next amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary was, on page 3, after line 3, to insert the following clause:

SEC. 4. This amendment shall take effect on the 15th day of December after its ratification.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in the committee amendment which has just been stated, I am authorized, on behalf of the committee, to propose an amendment on page 3, line 5, after the words "day of," to strike out "December" and to insert "October."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska offers an amendment to the committee amendment, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 3, line 5, after the words "day of," it is proposed to strike out the word "December" and insert the word "October," so that the clause will read:

SEC. 4. This amendment shall take effect on the 15th day of October after its ratification.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I do not rise in a spirit of hostility to the joint resolution; but will the Senator from Nebraska explain why the change proposed by the amendment to the amendment is suggested?

Mr. NORRIS. The change is necessary for this reason: The Constitution at present provides that Congress shall assemble on the first Monday in December, unless otherwise provided by law. If this proposed legislation did not take effect until the 15th day of December, the new Congress would convene on the first Monday in January, but the old Congress, under the existing Constitution, the joint resolution not having gone into effect, would convene on the first Monday in December. It is to avoid the convening of the old Congress that the amendment to the amendment is proposed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The old and the new Congresses would collide on midnight of the 14th of December.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to, and the amendment as amended is agreed to. The joint resolution is still before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and is open to amendment.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I should like to inquire if it is to be undertaken to pass this kind of a measure through the Senate in the morning hour?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a unanimous-consent agreement that the joint resolution shall be taken up at the conclusion of the routine morning business to-day. There is nothing in the unanimous-consent agreement, however, as to the final disposition of the joint resolution.

Mr. NORRIS. No; Mr. President, there will be no attempt to pass the joint resolution in the morning hour, if Senators desire to debate the measure longer. Routine morning business is over, but the morning hour, of course, is not ended. There is no limitation in the unanimous-consent agreement about debate or about taking a final vote.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Has the business of the morning hour been disposed of?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The routine morning business has been concluded, and the Senate is now proceeding under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, unfortunately for myself I have been absent from the Senate for several days. The joint resolution now under consideration by the Senate was before the Judiciary Committee when I left Washington, and I had no idea that it had been reported out from that committee. I should have liked to have had some time to prepare a thorough analysis of this joint resolution and to have gone into some of the historic questions relating to it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I have not been able to hear what the Senator said on account of the confusion around me, but does the Senator want more time to debate the joint resolution?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do. I think the tinkering with the Constitution of the United States in a rapid fire manner is always a mistake. If I had been present in the Senate, there would have been no unanimous-consent agreement to set this matter down for discussion at this time. I have no complaint to make of the course which was followed, because it may readily be said that I could have been here, and I would have been had it been possible. I should like to have this matter go over to-day without any action. I think it is a very great mistake. I think it strikes at one of the big fundamentals that the framers of the Constitution intended to put into this document.

I know the cry is that the minute the election is over the new men elected ought instantly to assume power and immediately begin the business, as it is put, of carrying out the will of the people. It is a very seductive cry and a very dangerous cry. The checks and safeguards which were put into our Constitution were put there by very wise men and for very substantial reasons, and I am not in favor of taking them out. I should like to have the joint resolution go over until to-morrow. I should like to discuss it, and I should like a few hours to prepare some memoranda.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me suggest to the Senator that if we can make a unanimous-consent agreement that it shall go over until the conclusion and final disposition of the present unfinished business and that it shall then be taken up and shall not be laid aside except by unanimous consent until it is finally disposed of, I shall have no objection to making that kind of agreement. If such an agreement may be made, would that suit the Senator?

Mr. REED of Missouri. That would suit me. All that I want is full debate.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator would, under the present unanimous-consent agreement, have opportunity for full debate, because the debate is not limited in any way; but I wish to accommodate the Senator, and I will submit, Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for that purpose, a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution may be taken up immediately after the disposition of the present unfinished business and that it shall not be laid aside, except temporarily by unanimous consent, until it is finally disposed of.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That might mean to-day, I presume.

Mr. NORRIS. It could come up to-day, but I will say to the Senator if he wants to debate it to-morrow and it should come up to-day, I will make no objection to laying it aside temporarily. I should like to take it up, so that it may take its place as the unfinished business; but I am not going to prevent the Senator from having full debate on the joint resolution by seeking to dispose of it to-day. I do not know how long the unfinished business will take.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Of course, I do not put this on any personal grounds, but I say we are tinkering with the Constitution, and we ought to be mighty careful what we do.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I agree that we ought to be careful as to what we do, and that is the reason I am making a proposition which it seems to me ought not to bring forth any objection.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Will it be agreeable to the Senator to put it down by unanimous consent for next Monday or Tuesday—say, Tuesday—then proceed with it until it is disposed of?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should not have so much objection to that if I did not feel that by that time there will be other measures on the calendar which other Senators may desire to take up, and it might seriously interfere with some other arrangement. I will agree that if the unfinished business is disposed of and this is taken up, it shall be temporarily laid aside until 2 o'clock to-morrow, and then it shall be proceeded with, and not be laid aside, except temporarily by unanimous consent, until final disposition. It seems to me that is a fair proposition.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I shall not object to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Nebraska state his request?

Mr. NORRIS. I ask unanimous consent that Senate Joint Resolution 22, now before the Senate, be taken up immediately after the disposition of the present unfinished business; that if the present unfinished business is disposed of to-day, Senate Joint Resolution 22 shall be temporarily laid aside until 2 o'clock to-morrow, at which time it shall be taken up, and not laid aside, except temporarily by unanimous consent, until its final disposition.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let me suggest to the Senator one qualification—that if the unfinished business which is now before the Senate shall not be concluded until to-morrow the joint resolution which the Senator has in charge shall be taken up the following day at 2 o'clock, and be proceeded with as indicated in the event that we shall take this matter up to-morrow.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, under my unanimous-consent request if the present unfinished business should not be disposed of until to-morrow the joint resolution would not come up to-day.

Mr. KING. I am not sure about that.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes.

Mr. KING. It would not come up to-day, but we would then take it up to-morrow at 2 o'clock and proceed with it.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; if the unfinished business were not disposed of, then it would not come up, of course. Under my proposition it would not come up under any circumstances until the final disposition of the present unfinished business.

Mr. KING. The point I had in mind was that if the unfinished business should go over until to-morrow I should not want the joint resolution of the Senator voted upon to-morrow. I should like an intervening day.

Mr. NORRIS. I take it, from what the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] says, that it would not be voted on; there would be enough debate on it to take it over.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Let me make this suggestion as to the form of the unanimous-consent agreement: That at 2 o'clock of the day succeeding the disposition of the present unfinished business the joint resolution shall be taken up and proceeded with to final disposition, unless it shall be laid aside temporarily by unanimous consent.

Mr. NORRIS. The difficulty with that is that the unfinished business may not be disposed of at that time.

Mr. REED of Missouri. No; the Senator does not quite follow me. My suggestion is that at 2 o'clock of the day succeeding the disposition of the present unfinished business the joint resolution shall be taken up and proceeded with to final disposition, unless temporarily laid aside by unanimous consent. That is the form in which I would put it. That would mean that if we got through to-day it would then come up to-morrow at 2 o'clock. If we do not get through until to-morrow, it would then come up the next day at 2 o'clock; but there is that interregnum allowed, so that we do not do anything until the next day.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me see if I can state it in accordance with the Senator's suggestion: That at 2 o'clock following the day on which the present unfinished business is disposed of this joint resolution, S. J. Res. 22, shall be taken up, and not laid aside, except temporarily by unanimous consent, until its final disposition.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That is agreeable.

Mr. NORRIS. All right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that at 2 o'clock on the day following the disposition of the unfinished business this joint resolution shall be taken up, and not be laid aside, except temporarily and by unanimous consent, until final disposition. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the agreement is entered into.

AMENDMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I think this an opportune and proper moment to call the attention of the Senate to Senate Joint Resolution No. 4, which is No. 214 on the calendar, and which also proposes an amendment to the Constitution of the United States—an amendment which has already been mentioned casually in debate here, in fact at some length, and very informingly, by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST]. I desire to say that at the conclusion of the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution No. 22, in connection with which a unanimous-consent agreement has just been reached, I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution No. 4.

THE CALENDAR.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that we begin at the number where we left off yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent to begin with Order of Business No. 161, that being where the Senate left off the consideration of the calendar the last time it was before the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will proceed with the call of the calendar in accordance with the agreement.

ST. CROIX RIVER BRIDGE.

The bill (H. R. 5337) granting the consent of Congress to construct a bridge over the St. Croix River between Vanceboro, Me., and St. Croix, New Brunswick, was announced as first in order on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the State of Maine to construct, maintain, and operate jointly with the Dominion of Canada a bridge to be located over the St. Croix River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, between Vanceboro, State of Maine, and St. Croix, Province of New Brunswick, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906: Provided, That the construction of said bridge shall not be commenced until the consent of the Parliament or other proper authority of the Dominion of Canada for the erection of the structure shall have been obtained.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ST. JOHN RIVER BRIDGE.

The bill (H. R. 5348) granting the consent of Congress for the construction of a bridge across the St. John River between Fort Kent, Me., and Clairs, Province of New Brunswick, Canada, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted for the construction, maintenance, and operation by the State of Maine and the Dominion of Canada, jointly, of a bridge to be erected across the St. John River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, between Fort Kent, Me., and Clairs, Province of New Brunswick, Canada, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906: Provided, That the construction of said bridge shall not be commenced until the consent of the proper authorities of the Dominion of Canada for the erection of the structure shall have been obtained.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OHIO RIVER BRIDGE.

The bill (H. R. 5624) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River to connect the city of Benwood, W. Va., and the city of Bellaire, Ohio, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Interstate Bridge Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Ohio, its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Ohio River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, to and into the city of Benwood, Union District, County of Marshall, in the State of West Virginia, from the central part of the city of Bellaire, County of Belmont, in the State of Ohio, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERNATIONAL STATISTICAL BUREAU AT THE HAGUE.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 76), authorizing the maintenance by the United States of membership in the International Statistical Bureau at The Hague, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of State is hereby authorized and directed to contribute such a sum as may be annually appropriated by Congress to the International Statistical Bureau at The Hague, to enable the United States to maintain a membership therein.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who is the author of the joint resolution, make some explanation in regard to it. Furthermore, if it is pertinent to the situation, I should like to have the Senator explain why we should not obtain the information desired through the instrumentalities set up by the league, which have broader information than this organization?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, in the first place, on the point the Senator has just raised, the league has joined this statistical bureau. It has been established for some time at The Hague, and it is thought to be a very valuable source of information. The passage of this joint resolution was recommended to the committee by the State Department, of course, and it was unanimously reported by the committee. I think the annual cost will be $2,000. It was thought to be a very valuable bureau for us to join; and, as I say, the league has already joined it, I understand.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to the joint resolution. Upon the contrary, I favor any measure that will bring us legitimately into contact with other nations for the purpose of stabilizing industrial and economic and political conditions, and promoting world amity and peace. I regret that we do not avail ourselves more of the instrumentalities of the League of Nations, which instrumentalities are doing a vast amount of good in obtaining information of an economic and political character, and are doing a great deal toward promoting peace throughout the world.

May I say at this point that I have pending before the Senator's committee a resolution which asks for the calling of a world conference to consider economic and industrial and financial problems with a view to stabilizing exchange, rehabilitating Europe, expanding our foreign markets, and directly as a result of those activities promoting peace throughout the world? I certainly should be glad if the Senator's committee would report the resolution for the consideration of the Senate.

I think no more forward step could be taken at the present time than for President Coolidge to call a world congress, perhaps two congresses, one to consider the question of disarmament, the other to consider financial and economic problems. Mr. Dawes is in Europe now—not officially, but unofficially—and I feel hopeful that his services there may be of some avail. If our Government should take adequate steps, I am sure that it could do much toward promoting the return of prosperity to Europe, which means prosperity to the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the joint resolution will be reported to the Senate.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAN AMERICAN SANITARY CONFERENCE AT HABANA, CUBA.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 77) authorizing the appointment of delegates to represent the United States at the seventh Pan American Sanitary Conference to be held at Habana, Cuba, in November, 1924, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,000 for the purpose of defraying the cost of representation of the United States by four delegates in the seventh Pan American Sanitary Conference to be held at Habana, Cuba, in November, 1924.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the calendar says that this joint resolution is reported with an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed by the clerks at the desk that the print of the joint resolution does not show any amendment.

Mr. LODGE. There is no amendment that I know of. I think it is a mistake of the calendar.

Mr. FLETCHER. The calendar says that it was reported by the Senator from Massachusetts from the Committee on Foreign Relations, with an amendment.

Mr. LODGE. That is evidently a mistake.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution is in the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROPOSED TAX PLANS (S. DOC. NO. 62).

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, out of order I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a public document a certain table about which I have spoken to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], the chairman of the Finance Committee, and also the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], a member of the Finance Committee, giving the amount of income taxes under the present law, the Mellon bill, the Garner plan, and the Longworth plan, giving also the amount of reduction of total taxes under these three different plans, and giving also the percentage of reduction of total taxes under these three plans. The table begins with an income of $3,000 and embraces all incomes up to $5,000,000.

I think this will be a very helpful document. It was prepared by a thoroughly competent expert who has been with the Ways and Means Committee for many years. I ask unanimous consent also that it be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Carolina that the table referred to be printed as a public document, and also printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The table is as follows:

Comparison of the Mellon, Garner, and Longworth tax plans with the present law (married persons without dependents), on basis of unearned income.

Income.	Amount of tax under—				Amount of reduction of total tax under—			Percentage of reduction of total tax under—

TRAFFIC IN PISTOLS BETWEEN THE STATES.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I wish to have printed in the RECORD a report made to the City Club of Memphis, a civic organization of that city, upon the subject of pistols that are carried as concealed weapons. Some time ago I introduced a bill, which is now before the Committee on the Judiciary, to suppress the traffic in pocket pistols and weapons of that kind manufactured and used for purposes of assassination, for they can be used for no other purpose.

The various States have laws upon this subject, but they are absolutely unable to enforce them because of the interstate commerce in those weapons through the mails and through the interstate commerce carriers. The object of my bill is to prohibit the carrying of such weapons through the mails and by interstate commerce carriers. There has been a general demand for such legislation recently on account of the very great number of crimes committed with this particular class of weapons. The statistics show that about 70 per cent of crimes committed in violence, felonious assaults, and homicides are committed with pistols.

This report to the City Club of Memphis is very illuminating upon this subject, and it also tends to explain a publication that has frequently been made to the effect that Memphis has more homicides than any other city of its size in the United States. I think in justice to that city great publicity ought to be made of the real facts. I ask that this report be printed in the RECORD, without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The governing board handed in a resolution. It is as follows:

"Whereas, it has come to the attention of the city club that there was reintroduced into Congress on January 14, 1924, a bill 'to prohibit the entry into the United States, and to levy an excise tax on certain weapons,' being Senate bill No. 1960; and

"Whereas, despite the fact that the sale of pistols and the carrying of them concealed is contrary to law in practically every State in the Union, there is an enormous traffic in pistols between the States, which, so long as it is allowed to continue, will largely nullify whatever efforts any community may put forth to correct the evils resulting from their lawless use; and

"Whereas, the effect of such bill, if passed, will be to largely discourage the manufacture and original sales of pistols, and thereby curb the transportation of them in interstate commerce and through the mails, thus minimizing the sales of such weapons in local communities: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the City Club of Memphis, That we heartily indorse said Senate bill No. 1960. Be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Senators from Tennessee, and to the Congressmen from this district, and that a copy be given to the press."

CRIME, CRIMINALS, AND LAW ENFORCEMENT.

Mr. Randolph, on the 19th, speaking on this subject, beginning at the point where he left off on the 12th, in substance, said:

Prosecutions for major crimes in Shelby County are largely a failure. Punishment meted out to the malefactors is shockingly inadequate. These assertions are made as statements of fact. The criminal records of this county for the past several years justify the assertions.

It seems idle to seek to center the responsibility whether it be in the city police department, in the county law-enforcing officials, in the courts, including juries, in the pardon board, or in the governor's mansion. There is blame enough for all.

Let us analyze the homicide record of Memphis for 1923:

Total homicide cases (one killed two)		77
Deduct:
Murderers who committed suicide	3
Killed by each other	2
		5
Leaves		72
Deduct:
At large (all negroes)	15
Unsolved	4
		19
		53
Deduct:
Exonerated by cornor's jury	11
Exonerated by grand jury	8
Exonerated by Federal grand jury	1 20
Leaves		33
Cases awaiting trial (14 persons)		12
		21
Nolle pros		1
Tried		20
Acquitted		3
Convictions (two convicted in one case)		17

Seventy-five cases offered opportunities for arrest; 64 persons were arrested in 56 cases. Of this 64, 20 were exonerated in the preliminary stages. We will exclude three accidental shootings. This leaves 17 exonerated. Think of it! Inquisitorial juries said there were 17 justifiable murders in Memphis last year! Twenty cases were actually tried; 18 persons in 17 cases were convicted; 14 persons in 12 cases are awaiting trial.

On that record will anyone challenge the statement that as to homicides committed in Memphis last year prosecutions were largely a failure? And remember that as to the 12 cases awaiting trial, punishment delayed is virtually punishment defeated.

Analyze the 17 convictions in relation to sentences passed:

Life term (three persons in two cases)	2
Twenty-one years	4
Ten years	1
Five to ten years	4
One to five years	6
	17

Not a case in which a murderer received capital punishment! And bear in mind, judging from past experience, how many of the 17 before their terms shall have expired will have received executive clemency? Does not this record warrant the statement that punishment woefully miscarried?

In justice to the police department of Memphis, it must be said that out of a possible 75 cases for arrests only 4 cases were unsolved, 15 murderers are at large, and there were arrests in 56 cases—about 75 per cent, which is a pretty fair record.

Mr. Wm. C. Cherry, in his very excellent article, "Crime, criminals, and law enforcement," in the November number of the Tennessee Law Review, makes the statement that 95 per cent of homicides would not occur if the slayer had to go a mile for the weapon. Do the statistics bear out this statement? Referring again to the Memphis 1923 homicide record, the weapons responsible for those 78 deaths were:

Shot with pistol	51
Stabbed with knife	18
Shot with shotgun	5
Stabbed with ice pick	2
Shot with rifle	1
Clubbed to death	1
Total	78

The colored women seem to have discovered a new deadly weapon, to wit, the ice pick.

In a very recent letter, Senator JOHN K. SHIELDS states that he has reintroduced in Congress his bill to prohibit the transportation of pistols in interstate commerce and through the mails. He requests the assistance of the City Club in favoring this legislation. Such a bill would go a long way toward controlling the enormous traffic in that weapon now prevailing. Senator SHIELDS says that the opposition to the bill has always come from the manufacturers of pistols in Connecticut and Massachusetts, and has so far been able to block the legislation.

The pistol responsible for 51 out of the 78 deaths—over 65 per cent! And "Arkansas toothpicks" and dirks were responsible for another 18—25 per cent, total, 90 per cent. Is the inference not justifiable that the great majority of those homicides were committed because at the instant the intent to commit the murder seized the person, he had concealed about his body the deadly weapon? And is it not a reasonable assumption that if the person had not had at hand the weapon, but had had to go a distance to arm himself, he would have had time to reason out his contemplated act and he would not have committed the murder?

I am not unmindful that of these 78 homicides 3 were committed by officers in their line of duty. Rarely does an officer shoot to kill unless in self-defense, or when he is in grave apprehension of danger. The point is: If the officer could feel reasonably sure that the lawless element would not have the advantage over him by bearing concealed firearms (and no criminal becomes a potential murderer until he arms himself with a concealed deadly weapon), it would not be necessary for an officer to be armed. If this were so, in the vast majority of cases the officer could protect himself against any other weapon. But the officer's pistol is his surest protection from harm from those who carry concealed firearms. May we see the day when our policemen, like the English "bobby," in order to enforce the supremacy of the law, need carry only his night stick or "billy."

Were there 17 justifiable homicides in Memphis last year? (I have eliminated the three accidental killings). Coroner's juries and grand juries have said there were, so we will accept their verdicts. But it does seem to be an outrageously large number of people who had, for justifiable causes, to be killed by their fellow men. The law says life can justifiably be taken only to protect life. Hence, we will assume each justifiable homicide was committed to prevent the victim killing another. If the victim had not had the weapon with which he was making the demonstration it would not have been necessary to have used such a drastic preventive on him—another "justifiable homicide" would have been avoided.

The statement is often made that the statisticians do Memphis an injustice in the murder rate assigned to it. And we hear the excuse that Memphis, because of its location, attracts the riffraff from the Tri-States which furnish a large percentage of its murderers. It is well to have these statistics corrected and to get our published murder rate as low as possible. But, with every correction made that we can honestly claim, our murder rate will be deplorably high. Memphis can not change its location. So let us stop fooling ourselves and become active to see if we can not check the fashion of murder so prevalent in our midst. Reduce the number of murders and statistics will take care of themselves. We thus will be saved the humiliation of making excuses for our apparent lawlessness.

We have depended upon our present system for the apprehension and punishment of major criminals and it seems to have failed us—at least, there is no apparent change for the better in the number of murders committed yearly, yet our law-enforcing officials have been at work steadily and our courts have been sitting constantly. The first statement is not literally true, for Memphis in 1923 showed an improvement over Memphis in 1922—one less homicide better—78 as against 79. At any rate, Memphis is running true to form.

Some say we can not hope to better conditions until our criminal courts mete out speedier and severer punishment and the pardon board and the governor refrain from setting at naught the effect of convictions through the pardoning power. We can only hope that the officials assigned the duty of prosecuting those charged with crime will see that these trials are speeded up; that juries will begin to understand that the law expects capital punishment to be inflicted when the facts demand it; and that the executive department, except in the most cogent cases, will let convictions take their course. We have been waiting patiently for these things to occur and we are still waiting—but not so patiently.

Others say relief lies in new laws simplifying our criminal procedure and in making jury service in criminal cases not so onerous. There is much force in this. But shall we remain quiescent awaiting the next session of the legislature in 1925 with the probability that any law for suggestive reform in criminal procedure will receive scant recognition at the hands of the legislature?

Still others say it can not be expected that the law against homicide will be rigidly enforced as long as public opinion is opposed to the rigid enforcement of the laws against gambling, "pistol toting," "bootlegging" and the various other laws which our people violate with impunity. Surely public sentiment is overwhelmingly opposed to homicide. If our citizens become accustomed to the rigid enforcement of the law against murders and to the not infrequent infliction of capital punishment when the crime demands it, public opinion will soon rally to the support of the officials seeking to enforce the laws against lesser crimes, not to mention the salutary effect the infliction of a few speedy capital punishments will have upon future potential murderers.

The conditions demand that murder be not so common as it is now in this community.

If law enforcement is largely a failure, let us turn our attention to crime prevention. Let us as a novelty seek to prevent the commission of crime rather than to devote our entire energy to the punishment of crime after its commission. Let us seek to prevent the act of the potential criminal, thereby preventing the necessity for his apprehension and prosecution for the commission of the contemplated crime, and save his becoming a charge on the public. By minimizing the commission of crime, we lessen the opportunity to criticize and condemn the failure of prosecution and the inadequacy of punishment.

Our brothers in medicine do not permit a contagious disease to become epidemic in the community and then strive to cure the unfortunates who become afflicted. They seek to isolate the contagion in its inception and to prevent any others from becoming affected. A crime wave is not unlike a virulent epidemic. If I may borrow an expression, let us have diagnosis and cure, rather than autopsy and verdict, in the suppression of lawlessness in this community. The germ, so to speak, of the murder epidemic is the pocket pistol. Isolate this weapon and the murder rate will immediately fall. The people should grapple with the situation and attack it in its most vulnerable spot—homicides.

How can homicides in Memphis be best reduced? Will statistics answer this? Ponder again the record of Memphis for 1923:

	White.	Colored.
Males murdered	12	49
Females murdered	4	13
Total	16	62

Sixty-two negroes murdered as against 16 whites!

Some may assuage their feelings of remorse by the thought that 85 per cent of those murdered were of the colored race. Rather, should we not feel a greater degree of shame and responsibility in that we, being the ruling race, should permit this to occur?

Statistics make no distinction in color. A homicide in the world's murder record is a homicide, be the victim black or white. The outside world does not know the proportion of whites and blacks, either of the murderers or the murdered. It judges us simply on our record.

What say statistics as to the race and sex of these 78 murdered?

	White.		Colored.
	Male.	Female.	Male.	Female.
Killed by colored males	2	.....	25	11
Killed by colored females	.....	.....	14	2
Killed by white males	8	4	7	.....
Killed by white females	1	.....	.....	.....
Killed by unknown parties	1	.....	3	.....
Total	12	4	49	13

Fifty-three negroes killed by negroes. Only seven negroes killed whites. Only two whites killed by negroes—one a white burglar and the other assassinated by negro bandits.

How clearly the record localizes the canker on the community. Eighty-three per cent of 75 homicides (excluding accidental killings) were negroes killed by negroes. If the record showed a greater percentage of whites killed by whites, or if it disclosed a pregnant danger of racial conflict, the situation would be far more appalling and difficult of solution. Can not we, the dominant race, upon whom depends the enforcement of the law, so enforce the law that we will prevent the colored people from preying upon each other? Does the fault not rest squarely on our shoulders? But we can make no progress until we begin respecting and obeying the law much more than we do now, and set the example for these colored persons to obey and respect the law also.

Here we have laid bare the principal cause for the high murder rate in Memphis—the carrying by colored people of a concealed deadly weapon, most often a pistol. Can not we cope with this situation? It is unlawful for them to carry such weapons. But it is just as unlawful for a white person to carry a like weapon. Are we to admit that in this particular the colored people have gotten beyond the control of the law? That can not be. Yet, it will be folly to seek to enforce the "pistol toting" law against the blacks and not against the whites.

It is said that public sentiment is opposed to the rigid enforcement of the law against "pistol toting." If this be so, it must be because our white people feel it is necessary that they go secretly armed for self-protection. It is unspeakable that there is public sentiment among the whites that negroes should not be disturbed in their carrying of concealed weapons.

I deny that the time has come when our white citizens are compelled to go secretly armed for self-protection. But if this time has come, it is better far that we carry our arms in plain view so that the thugs will have visible evidence that we are prepared for the emergency.

Neither do we need pistols for the protection of our homes. If we need a firearm to repel a burglar, a sawed-off shotgun with its load of buckshot is far more deadly and surer than the pistol. One has to be somewhat expert to use a pistol under stress of danger or excitement with accuracy.

The only excuse for the pocket pistol is to give one an advantage over another; to permit one to deceive his fellow man by an outward display of peaceful intentions, but a secret preparedness to do him bodily injury by surprise. It should be abhorrent to a (supposedly) law-abiding citizen to carry a concealed weapon, and so long as this practice is indulged in by that class, little progress can be made toward preventing a like practice by the lawless.

What becomes of all the pistols that come into the possession of the law enforcing authorities through arrests? Are they destroyed, or do they again get into circulation? Is not the latter the case? If records of pistols could be kept, no doubt the police department would recognize from time to time pistols that have records for murder and attempted murder as appalling as the records of hardened criminals.

Why not destroy every pistol that was being unlawfully carried which comes into the possession of the law-enforcing authorities? If destroyed, certainly that particular weapon could not later be the instrument in a major crime. If such a pistol is in the possession of the law-enforcing officer, it is the height of folly to again reissue that pistol into circulation, it makes no difference to whom given, for at that instant it again becomes the instrument of a potential murder.

To illustrate: An estimable citizen went to a law-enforcing officer for permission to have a pistol in his home. He was not only given the permission upon signing a permit, but he was even given the pistol with the remark that it had been the pistol of a notorious character. This weapon that had possibly been the instrument of a murder, instead of being destroyed, was here again started out in the world as an instrument for potential crime—not in the hands of the estimable citizen to whom it was given, but who knows who else, at some time, may come into its possession?

Some may say the law-enforcing officials have not the legal right to destroy these weapons. Let them assume the right. At most, what is involved? Merely the value of the weapon destroyed. And it would be better far that the city and the county pay the value of every pistol found on those arrested than to permit them again to get into circulation as instruments of destruction.

REDUCTION OF TAXATION THROUGH TARIFF LAWS.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, much has been said recently in the Congress and in the press of the country about the reduction of the burdens of Government. I believe that the time is near at hand when the attention of the country should be directed to the question of the reduction of taxation through the tariff laws of this country.

I do not care to discuss that question now, but Mr. CORDELL HULL recently prepared a short article upon that subject which was published in the Forum. It is a very brief statement, bearing upon that most important question, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Mexico? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

NINETEEN HUNDRED AND TWENTY-FOUR CAMPAIGN ISSUES.

THE TARIFF: THE DEMOCRATIC ARGUMENT—PROTECTION FALLACIES.

(By CORDELL HULL, chairman Democratic National Committee.)

Every sound economic law proves the futility of such measures as the Fordney-McCumber tariff, according to Democratic opinion, which is quick to pounce on discrepancies between the professions and the practices of Republicans in dealing with this issue. In place of the present policies a program of reconstruction is advocated, embracing moderate revenue tariffs, removal of economic barriers, international finance, trade cooperation, and maintenance of healthy trading.

Why is the tariff a subject of never-ending controversy? The true answer is not taxation but selfishness and greed. Tariff beneficiaries never cease to demand their pound of flesh, and the helpless victims as often register bitter complaint. At present the Fordney-McCumber tariff looms large in our domestic and international economic situation, because it flies in the face of every sound economic law of to-day. It is not a question of a new country protecting young industries. Greed and pelf alone offer the real basis for the existing extortionate and unconscionable high tariff with its train of excesses, evils, and injustices.

The most striking truth which recent tariff history reveals is the great contrast between the professions and practices of Republicans in dealing with the tariff. They have invented many different formulas and catch phrases to define the Republican tariff theory, such as protection of "our manufacturers," "our home industries," "our home markets," "American labor," a tariff that will equal "the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad plus a reasonable profit," and, finally, that will equal "the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad." Dominant Republicans, at the same time, have pursued a uniform but vastly different practice in applying their tariffs. Disregarding all their professed tariff theories and formulas, when in control of the Government they permit all interested manufacturers or producers, who, as a rule, have first made large campaign contributions, to send their lobbyists to Washington and with graft aforethought write their own high arbitrary, prohibitive rates in utter defiance of every sound rule of even protective tariff taxation. Republican tariffs are thus framed, and the lobbyists departing sing with glee—

"I care not for the stars that shine,
I only know that I've got mine."

While the Fordney-McCumber bill was pending in Congress during 1922 the efforts to procure facts as to relative production costs proved utterly futile. Besides, the foreign exchanges were constantly and violently changing so that the drafting of a tariff measure based on any sound rules or definite cost comparisons or any consideration other than high, haphazard rates, was wholly impossible. Confronted with this dilemma, the Republicans inserted the so-called flexible tariff provisions, which were loudly proclaimed as the saving provisions that would enable the President to make such changes as would develop a scientific tariff law. These flexible clauses were branded as unconstitutional and as a fraud at the time, and have since proved entirely unworkable. It has, of course, been impossible to procure foreign costs. The present situation is that America is cursed with the most unscientific, inflexible structure of high tariff guesswork in economic history. "The very maximum rates" was the slogan. The outstanding lesson the people have learned is that Republican practice, and not profession, presents the true Republican tariff attitude. The difference between their tariff theory and practice is wide and deep, and within itself offers a complete tariff issue.

In determining a wise and sound tariff policy for the United States, following the war a consideration of the new and changed financial, business, and economic conditions became all important. America was no longer a debtor Nation. Our productive capacity had increased 30 or 40 per cent over the pre-war level. Our exports had jumped from $2,428,506,000 in 1913 to $8,000,000,000 in 1920. America was the recognized financial, commercial, social, and moral leader of the world. We possessed nearly one-half of the world's gold. We had built a great merchant marine. Our productive machinery and our intelligent skilled labor were the very best. Our foodstuffs and raw materials such as cotton, copper, coal, lumber, oil, iron ore, and other minerals were unexcelled and almost unlimited in variety and quantity. The balance of the world was flat on its back, economically. No nation ever had such an opportunity to move forward along stable lines, financially, industrially, and economically. America only had to realize her strength and her wonderful position of advantage. Republicans flouted all these basic facts and conditions.

The situation and the best interests of the United States did not call for an impregnable tariff wall and all other economic barriers possible to erect, as was decreed by the Republican administration, but instead they strongly demanded a competitive tariff for revenue, based on the policy of the Underwood law, with moderate rates which would not destroy or seriously injure any domestic industry economically justifiable, but which would prevent domestic monopoly and excessive prices. In the light of developments here and everywhere since 1918, it is manifest that such democratic tariff-for-revenue policy alone was and is calculated to bring to America sound, stable, permanent prosperity.

The time was ripe for the removal of other trade barriers. America after the war should have called an international trade-agreement congress, if necessary to supplement other international organizations, with the object of eliminating, by mutual agreement of the commercial nations, every possible economic and trade barrier, including discriminations such as bounties, drawbacks, rebates, subsidies, subventions, colonial preference save to a nominal extent, preferential entry to port, monopoly of raw materials in weak and backward countries by strong nations, and all other unfair preferences and trade practices possible to be abandoned in the interest of fair and friendly trade relations and equal economic opportunities among all commercial nations. Republicans, instead of initiating this wise policy at a crucial stage, faced the other way, pursued the course of hermit isolation, and set the world example of erecting every sort of economic barriers—an example most other nations naturally followed—with most disastrous results.

It is interesting here to enumerate some of the economic paradoxes and contradictions which the new Republican tariff law presents. This utterly selfish and shortsighted measure was based upon the absurd theory that America could forever sell and not buy.

McKinley exposed and condemned the fallacy as far back as 1901. It was based upon the ridiculous notion that America could develop and maintain a merchant marine which would carry freight only one way. It was based upon the blind policy that Europe and the world should pay their debts of nearly $18,000,000,000 due America, although payment can only be made in gold, goods, or services, while we have most of the gold and decline to take goods or services. It was based upon the absurdity that a great creditor nation, producing vast surpluses of foodstuffs, raw materials, and manufactures which must be exported, can thrive best under a high tariff which grently obstructs the normal flow of commerce between nations, depresses the foreign exchanges, and destroys sound reciprocal trade relations. It was based upon the pretended fear that the prostrate countries of Europe, without money, credit, foodstuffs, or raw materials, might immediately arise and inflict commercial destruction upon America, the greatest financial, commercial, and industrial giant of all time.

Among the destructive effects of the Fordney-McCumber tariff, the biggest are the twin evils of the high cost of living and an artificially high level of the costs of production in the United States. The Republican platform of 1920 solemnly promised to reduce the high cost of living and to prosecute the profiteers. Their subsequent high tariff policy has directly resulted in artificial price increases of almost every article the American people wear or use, and has multiplied profiteers. Farm products are the chief exceptions. These high tariffs, too, have artificially enhanced the prices of almost all construction materials, the immediate effects of which are most seriously to handicap the general building business and the repairs, improvements, extensions, and equipment of railroads. The tariff is thus a prime factor in building costs and in high freight rates. It likewise increases by tens of millions the cost of farm operations by raising the prices of iron, steel, and other commodities which the farmer must use.

This artificially high level of production costs in America operates in innumerable ways to obstruct, disorganize, and dislocate our foreign-trade situation. It not only prevents exchange of goods but prevents America from selling her immense surpluses in all lines in foreign markets in competition with other countries. The result is that America can only "dump" her surplus at reduced prices or restrict her output to the limit of our home needs. She is already doing both. Our exports have slumped from $8,000,000,000 in 1920 to $3,840,000,000 in 1923. The inevitable outcome will be that American labor will greatly suffer from the coming curtailment of production while much capital will be unemployed. Our present volume of imports reflects a purely temporary and abnormal situation which our high tariff has considerably aggravated. This tariff largely contributed as a trade barrier to driving down the foreign exchanges, and with foreign purchases paid for in very low exchange and an artificially high American market to attract, it is clear that they assist importers to jump over our very high tariff barriers the more easily. The finance, credit, exchange, and trade facilities of most of the world have largely broken down, with our tariff a strong contributing factor, and our foreign-trade situation will continue to grow worse so long as we maintain high tariffs to prevent a reasonable exchange of goods.

The fact can not be ignored that for four years of war America ceased improvements, extensions, and construction, adopted the skimping policy, and sent her surpluses of every kind to Europe. During the past two years she has been importing not competitive manufactures but principally raw materials in order to bring our domestic production up with our domestic consumption. Some industries already have caught up, and, for lack of foreign trade, are curtailing or shutting down. This condition will become more general from month to month. Our imports of competitive manufactures, considering the different price levels, were far less under the Underwood than under the Fordney tariff.

Underwood law: Imports of manufactures, nine months ending September, 1922, $484,862,000.

Fordney law: Imports of manufactures, nine months ending September, 1923, $568,219,000.

This fact destroys the chief Republican bogey.

Time overtakes even an economic falsehood. For two generations the American people have been taught that Republican tariffs were an infallible assurance of prosperity. The truth is that every panic, beginning with that of 1873, has occurred either under Republican administrations or Republican legislation.

The American farmers recently learned by the clearest demonstration that under Republican high tariffs prices of most of their products went lower, their foreign markets went to pieces, while the prices of all they must buy went skyward. Farmers now realize that they were not saved from ruin by the Morrill high tariff during the panic of 1873, nor by the McKinley high tariff during the panic of 1890–1893, nor by the Dingley high tariff during the panic of 1907, nor by the farmers' high tariff during the panic of 1921–22.

The American people have recently experienced much tariff disillusionment. They now know that every industry producing a substantial surplus must depend upon stable foreign markets and that the latter are the chief factors in fixing domestic prices in America. This desired end requires moderate tariffs, efficient production costs, and economic cooperation in order to maintain sound reciprocal trade and market conditions. In the face of Republican pretense that high tariffs increase wages, labor has discovered that brick masons, carpenters, artisans, and most other labor in the unprotected industries receive higher wages than most of that in the protected industries. In the most highly protected industries—the textiles—labor for 40 years has received the lowest wages.

All financial, commercial, and trade developments but serve to expose the utter unsoundness of Republican post-war economic policies, both domestic and international, while they strongly confirm the wisdom and timeliness of the great Democratic reconstruction program which embraced moderate revenue tariffs, the general removal of economic barriers, international finance, credit, and trade cooperation, the maintenance of a healthy growing foreign trade, and stable domestic prosperity.

CHANGE OF DATE OF ANNUAL SESSIONS OF CONGRESS.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, under the latitude of debate I want to submit an observation or two in regard to the proposed constitutional amendment reported by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], which was under consideration this morning.

A few days ago I introduced a bill providing—

That the first annual session of each Congress shall be upon the 6th day of April next following the election of such Congress; the second annual session of Congress shall be upon the 2d day of January next following; and the third annual session of the Seventieth Congress and of each alternate Congress thereafter shall be upon the 2d day of January next following the appointment of the electors of the President and the Vice President.

I offered this measure for the purpose of avoiding, if we possibly could, a constitutional amendment, as I am very much averse, in the language of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], to constantly tinkering with the Constitution of the United States. In support of this measure, and as a reason for it, I ask to be permitted to offer a few observations.

The Constitution provides that—

Congress shall assemble at least once in every year, and such meeting shall be on the first Monday in December, unless they shall by law appoint a different day.

The bill to appoint the days for the annual sessions of Congress fixes the date for the first annual session upon the 6th day of April next following the election of such Congress, and the date for the second annual session upon the 2d day of January next succeeding. Provision is also made for a third session on January 2, following the election of the President of the United States, this short session before the end of a presidential term being necessary in order to canvass and declare the vote of the Electoral College for the President and Vice President. This short third session will only be held by alternate Congresses.

The four months intervening between the election in November and the inauguration of the President in March is not too great a time to enable the outgoing President to clear up the work of his administration and to afford the new President time to select his Cabinet and prepare for the assumption of the duties of the presidential office. The short session of the old Congress preceding the change in administrations will also be of advantage for disposing of pending business.

But the interval of 13 months between the election and the first annual session of Congress is too great, and the bill shortens this interval to five months. This interval could be further shortened by providing for the election of Congress in January which might also cool the judgment of the people. The new Congress assumes office on the 4th of March, and one month later on the 6th of April meets in regular session. This affords the new President one month for the preparation of his message and is as early a date as would be proper for the assembling of Congress.

April 6, 1789, was the day upon which the first Congress assembled in the city of New York, canvassed the vote of the Electoral College, declared that George Washington had been chosen President, and organized the Government of the United States under the Constitution. This date, April 6, instead of March 4, should have been accepted as the date for the beginning of the terms of office prescribed in the Constitution, as the Government under the Constitution, both in the de facto and dejure sense, had its beginning upon that day.

It is not necessary to amend the Constitution. The day for the election may be moved up as near the 4th of March as may be desired, and the day for the convening of Congress may be moved back as near the 4th of March as may be desired. The fixing of the days for the election and convening of Congress is within the express powers conferred upon Congress by the Constitution.

Mr. President, I hope that Senators will do me the honor to read what I have said upon this subject before they vote upon the proposed amendment to the Constitution which has been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary by the distinguished senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. In my judgment, there is no necessity for amending the Constitution of the United States. We can reach reasonably satisfactory results by executing the plan I have suggested in the bill which I just read to the Senate.

INTER-AMERICAN COMMITTEE ON ELECTRICAL COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next business on the calendar will be proceeded with.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 79) to provide for the representation of the United States at the meeting of the Inter-American Committee on Electrical Communications to be held in Mexico City beginning March 27, 1924, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $33,000 to defray the cost of representation of the United States at the meeting of the Inter-American Committee on Electrical Communications to be held in Mexico City, Mexico, beginning March 27, 1924.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXPERIMENTS IN RURAL POSTAL SERVICE.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, there is on the calendar a bill introduced by me, and requests for unanimous consent to consider it were objected to by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. I see that Senator now present, and I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of that bill. I will say that I do not believe there would be two votes against the bill. A motion to take it up is the only way I can get it considered, because the Senator from Utah was frank enough to say he would object to its consideration under the five-minute rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that under the rule the Senator can not make the motion before 1 o'clock.

Mr. CURTIS. Under the unanimous-consent agreement can the motion be made then? We began the consideration of the calendar with a bill beyond the order of business the Senator is seeking to have called up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not understand the Senator from Kansas, his attention having been directed to another matter.

Mr. CURTIS. As I understand it, under the unanimous-consent agreement we began the consideration of bills on the calendar with Order of Business No. 161, and the one to which the Senator refers is previous to that on the calendar. Therefore, under the unanimous-consent agreement, I do not think the Senator's motion would be in order to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As the Chair understands it, the Senate is considering the calendar under the rule and not by unanimous consent, but unanimous consent was given that the consideration of bills on the calendar should begin at a certain number.

Mr. CURTIS. My understanding of Rule VIII is this—and I think the Chair will agree with me if he will read it—that where a bill is called up and objection is made, then, after 1 o'clock, any Senator may move that the Senate shall proceed to its consideration. But in this case we began with a bill appearing on the calendar after the Senator's bill. I think, if we began at the beginning, at the next call of the calendar the Senator could, when his bill was reached, move to proceed to its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks he was in error in his statement. The language of the rule is, "Until the morning business shall have been concluded and so announced from the Chair." The morning business has been concluded, and the Chair thinks the motion of the Senator from Georgia would be in order. The Chair is also of the opinion that the mere fact that by unanimous consent we commenced at a certain number on the calendar would not preclude any Senator from making a motion to take up a bill. So the Chair will entertain the motion of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I will state to the Senate that this is a measure allowing the Postmaster General to experiment on rural routes on rural free delivery. The Postmaster General has recommended it, the Senate Post Office Committee has unanimously reported it, and I do not believe there would be very much objection to it. I therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 150.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that under the rule this motion must be determined without debate. The Senator from Georgia moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 60.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Kansas asked unanimous consent that until 2 o'clock we proceed with the consideration of the calendar, beginning at a certain number.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say that the Senator is mistaken in that. The Senate proceeded under the rule to the consideration of the calendar, and then the Senator from Kansas asked unanimous consent that we begin with a certain number. That was the only thing involved in the unanimous-consent agreement—that we begin with a certain number on the calendar.

Mr. KING. The parliamentary inquiry which I submit and which may have been submitted by the distinguished Senator from Kansas is, Does not the unanimous consent preclude the return to measures that are farther back on the calendar? Would we not be compelled, if we desired to take up a measure out of order, to find a measure ahead of the point where we began, rather than go back over ground which has already been covered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If we had proceeded with the calendar in accordance with a unanimous-consent agreement, the Chair thinks that would be true; but the Chair does not think that the unanimous-consent request submitted by the Senator from Kansas precludes any Senator from making a motion to take up a particular bill under the rule.

Mr. KING. Another parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. If this motion should prevail—and it is a motion to proceed to the consideration of a bill which, in my opinion, is of very great importance and may project the Government into the expenditure of millions and tens of millions of dollars—would it be debatable, or would we be limited by the five-minute rule?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill would be debatable, as the Chair understands it, if it were taken up by motion, without the five-minute limitation.

Mr. KING. Of course if Senators vote to take up this bill, they will displace the calendar, because the discussion of it may consume the rest of the morning.

Mr. EDGE. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to take up the joint resolution is not debatable.

Mr. HARRISON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. HARRISON. We entered into a unanimous-consent agreement to proceed with the calendar. I have no objection in the world to the motion of the Senator from Georgia. I am with him in his proposition, but have we not a unanimous-consent agreement that after the morning hour is concluded we shall proceed with the so-called Norbeck bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the unfinished business. It will come up at 2 o'clock as the unfinished business.

Mr. HARRISON. I had understood that the morning hour was over and was so announced by the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning hour is not over. Routine morning business has been concluded. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia to proceed to the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution No. 60. [Putting the question.] In the opinion of the Chair the nays have it.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] and vote "nay."

Mr. McCORMICK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] and vote "nay."

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] and vote "nay."

Mr. PHIPPS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL]. I am informed that he would vote as I intend to vote, and therefore I am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLER] and vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a standing pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr.

OVERMAN], who is detained from the Chamber, and I therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] to the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] and vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. OVERMAN] is absent on account of illness. He is paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. SMITH. I have a general pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] and vote "yea."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, is a parliamentary inquiry in order at this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not.

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 31, as follows:

YEAS—34.

Adams	George	McNary	Simmons
Borah	Gerry	Mayfield	Smith
Bruce	Harris	Neely	Stephens
Capper	Harrison	Ralston	Swanson
Copeland	Johnson, Minn.	Ransdell	Trammell
Dill	Jones, N. Mex.	Reed, Mo.	Walsh, Mass.
Edwards	Jones, Wash.	Sheppard	Walsh, Mont.
Ferris	Kendrick	Shields
Fletcher	McKellar	Shipstead

NAYS—31.

Ball	Fess	Lodge	Pittman
Brookhart	Frazier	McCormick	Reed, Pa.
Colt	Gooding	McKinley	Smoot
Couzens	Hale	Moses	Stanfield
Curtis	Harreld	Norris	Wadsworth
Dale	Keyes	Oddie	Watson
Edge	King	Pepper	Willis
Ernst	Ladd	Phipps

NOT VOTING—31.

Ashurst	Dial	La Follette	Spencer
Bayard	Elkins	Lenroot	Stanley
Brandegee	Fernald	McLean	Sterling
Broussard	Glass	Norbeck	Underwood
Bursum	Greene	Overman	Warren
Cameron	Heflin	Owen	Weller
Caraway	Howell	Robinson	Wheeler
Cummins	Johnson, Calif.	Shortridge

So Mr. HARRIS's motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will proceed to the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 60.

Mr. FLETCHER. Does not the Senator from Georgia mean to correct the statement of the Chair? The bill he described is Order of Business 111 on the calendar, Senate bill 2111.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia referred to it as Calendar No. 150 and the Chair repeated it several times.

Mr. FLETCHER. He described the resolution, which is not the right number.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has voted to proceed to the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 60, which was also introduced by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, when I came into the Chamber I found the vote was being taken. I inquired what the matter was and was advised that it was an amendment to the pending bill providing for experimentation in the transportation of farm products by rural free delivery. I voted under that apprehension. If the motion is to displace the pending bill and take up another one, as I now understand is the case, I voted under a misapprehension.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that it was a motion in the morning hour to proceed to the consideration of a bill on the calendar.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, it was my error in calling the wrong calendar number, and I regret it. The bill I described is a bill that has come up on the call of the calendar several times, and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has objected each time. I want to say to Senators on the other side of the aisle who voted against taking up the bill that it has come up several times on the call of the calendar and has been objected to. I have been in the Senate five years and never objected to a unanimous-consent request, and hope never to do it, but I am going to get the bill considered. It is on the calendar and has been unanimously recommended by the committee. If I fail to get it considered, I shall object to other measures being taken up by unanimous consent. Any Senator has the right to oppose the bill and object to it, but I am not going to let one Senator—and there is only one objection to this—keep me from having a bill considered here. I put the Senate on notice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's motion was to proceed to the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 60.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I simply want to state to the Senator from Georgia that Senators on this side of the aisle did not vote against taking up the measure because they are opposed to the measure. They voted against proceeding to its consideration at this time because they object to displacing the calendar now. They feel that we should proceed with the call of the calendar according to the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia has exhibited a spirit of acerbity that is not compatible with the situation. He seems to take it as a personal affront because somebody objects to his unanimous-consent request that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution. I stated to the Senator that I objected under the five-minute rule to a measure as important as that coming up to be considered. I stated to the Senator from Georgia then and I state now that if he would move to take it up at any time except under the five-minute rule I would join with him. It is absurd to make the statement he did, and it is totally unfair and unkind.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Utah has forgotten. I went to him after he objected to the consideration of the bill when it came up on the calendar at different times and asked him if he would object to my making a motion to bring it up at another time. He told me that he was opposed to the bill, that it was a bad bill, and that he would object to it. I have shown him every courtesy. He has a perfect right to oppose the bill, but the bill is going to be considered by the Senate. I am entitled to that.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state the parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McKELLAR. What resolution have we taken up? Is it Senate Joint Resolution 60?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has voted to take up Senate Joint Resolution No. 60, Order of Business 150.

The Senate now has before it Joint Resolution No. 60, being Order of Business 150.

Mr. CURTIS and Mr. KING addressed the Chair.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 111, being Senate bill 2111, in lieu of the measure which was taken up, for evidently Senators thought they were voting to take up the bill for which I have asked consideration.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Chair first state the request of the Senator from Florida. The Senator from Florida asks unanimous consent that Calendar No. 111, being Senate bill 2111, be substituted for the joint resolution which was just voted to be taken up by the Senate. Is there objection to that request?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I object. I challenge the accuracy of the Senator from Georgia——

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I have the floor. It is not true that I objected to the consideration of Senate bill 2111. I do object to its consideration under the five-minute rule. If the Senator from Georgia can get the bill considered at any other time I shall join with him in order that there may be a full discussion of the measure.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah either misstated my request or misunderstood what I said to him in a courteous way. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2111, being Calendar No. 111, instead of the other measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 111, being Senate bill 2111.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2111) authorizing the Postmaster General to conduct an experiment in the Rural Mail Service, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads with an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill.

Mr. KING. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KING. I have been advised, contrary to what I understood the Chair to rule—not the present occupant of the chair, who was not then presiding—that the consideration of the pending measure will not be under the five-minute rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will not be considered under the five-minute rule. There is no limit on the debate on the measure now.

Mr. HARRIS. I called the bill up at this time because it would not be considered under the five-minute rule. The Senator from Utah stated he would object to the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule. I was therefore forced to do what I did not like to do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill.

The reading clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That during the 12 months next succeeding the approval of this act the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized to conduct experiments in the operation of not more than 50 rural routes, in localities to be selected by him; said experiments shall be designed primarily to develop and to encourage the transportation of food products directly from producers to consumers or vendors, and, if the Postmaster General shall deem it necessary or advisable during the progress of said experiments, he is hereby authorized, in his discretion, on such number or all of said routes as he may desire, to reduce to such an extent as he may deem advisable the rate of postage on food products mailed directly on such routes for delivery at the post offices from which such routes start, and to allow the rural carriers thereon a commission on the postage so received at such rate as the Postmaster General may prescribe, which commission shall be in addition to the carriers' regular salaries. The amounts due the carriers for commissions shall be determined under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Postmaster General, and when so determined and properly certified to the Comptroller General shall be payable monthly by warrant directly from the appropriation for Rural Delivery Service: Provided, That the amount so paid shall in no case exceed the actual amount of revenue derived from this experimental service.

A report on the progress of this experiment shall be made to Congress at the next regular session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and is open to amendment.

Mr. KING. Let the report be read.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I waive the request if the Senator from Georgia desires to be heard.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, the pending bill, if enacted, will not require an appropriation. As I just now stated, the Postmaster General and the Post Office Department have considered the bill carefully and approve of the measure. The Post Office Committee of the Senate has also approved it unanimously at an almost full meeting of the committee. The bill proposes to enable the rural carriers to carry certain articles, starting from the place where they begin carrying the mail and back to that point, but not beyond that. Such carriage is confined to the route of the rural carrier, and he is not permitted to carry articles beyond the boundaries of his route.

The bill proposes to allow the Postmaster General to experiment along that line and to let the rural carriers bring in at a smaller postage rate butter, eggs, or other articles which are raised on the farm.

Every day some farmer throws away, say, a pound of butter or vegetables or other articles which he could send to town by the carrier. He can not afford to hitch up his horse or to take his automobile and go 10 or 12 miles merely to carry small quantities of butter, fruit, or vegetables to market. For that reason I thought the Postmaster General, if he should experiment by having these carriers transport such articles, giving them a commission so as to interest them in the proposition, would accomplish a useful end.

The greatest problem on the farm to-day, Mr. President, is getting a market for produce. I believe the measure, if enacted, will go a long way to meet that end.

I am not going to consume the time of the Senate in a discussion of the bill, but I hope the Senate will approve of it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as I interpret the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS], his position is that whenever a Senator seeks for the consideration of any measure assent should immediately be given. He seems to feel affronted if opposition is suggested to any measure which he may offer. I have stated to the Senator that I had no objection to the consideration of his bill, although I was opposed to it, if it were brought to the attention of the Senate at a time when its provisions could be fully examined and its consequences thoroughly explored. Under the five-minute rule, or during the morning hour, it is impossible to consider fully and carefully measures brought before the Senate, and I suggested to the Senator that if he would call up his measure upon an occasion where there would be full opportunity to canvass its merits and demerits I should not object. We are now, if not under the five-minute rule, operating within the morning hour, and this measure, which I regard as an important one, can not be fully considered before 2 o'clock, when the unfinished business will be taken up for consideration.

Mr. President, I am in sympathy with any measure which will tend to relieve agriculture from burdens which oppress it and from obstacles which it encounters. No one can deny the importance of agriculture. It is the basic industry, and the prosperity of the farmers is essential to the prosperity of the Nation. However, Congress must keep in view always the limitations which are imposed upon it, and must also in considering proposed measures not be influenced by mere sentiment, or controlled by hysteria, or directed by conditions—unfortunate and deplorable though they may be—for which no proper palliative may be offered.

I sometimes think that much of the legislation of Congress is the result of pressure or propaganda or emotionalism, without due consideration to the ultimate results and to the precedents which such legislation may establish. We are too prone to regard mere palliatives as cures for disorders. The physician seeks from the symptoms in the patient to discover the cause of the malady. The quack is satisfied with some temporary treatment. A palliative is given to the patient, but the disorder still persists. Agriculture is suffering and suffering seriously. There is a deep-seated disease in our economic life. It is important that we discover the cause of the disease and then proceed with courage to cure the ailment, no matter how drastic the remedy prescribed.

Oftentimes legislation may be projected which affords temporary relief and extends benefits to a class or within a circumscribed area, but its ultimate effects may be most injurious and its consequences to the country most serious. The proposition before us on its face is very attractive. It is particularly inviting when we consider that some of the evils afflicting agriculture result from the lack of markets and from a failure of the agriculturists to properly cooperate to dispose of their products. An examination of the measure before us reveals, as I understand it, the purpose back of it. And that purpose is to project the Government into the business of transporting the products of the farm; and, of course, if it becomes a common carrier of agricultural products, it must become a common carrier for manufactured and all other commodities. It is an attractive proposition to have the Government provide means for transporting the products of the field and the farm to the consuming markets, and yet if that proposition is adopted by the Government it means that the Government will ultimately take over the transportation system and become a common carrier for all the people.

It is true that the bill before us merely authorizes an experiment to be conducted for the purpose of demonstrating what can be done by the Post Office Department in carrying farm products from the producers to the consumers. It is idle to say that those who projected the scheme have only in mind a simple experiment. Undoubtedly the purpose is to have a nation-wide system established which will require the Government, through the Post Office Department, to haul the products of the farms from a place of origin to a place of consumption. Undoubtedly, it is expected that the department will select routes where the experiment will demonstrate that commodities may be transported from the farm to the city, and it is expected that the department will report favorably upon the proposition.

Experience has demonstrated that departments have encouraged measures which extended their jurisdiction, augmented their powers and increased their personnel. Little organizations established by Congress have grown like the green bay tree until they overshadowed the land. Executive agencies are always ambitious and anxious for additional power. Some officials in the Post Office Department undoubtedly would be glad to see the Post Office Department converted into a common carrier. They would be glad to see tens of thousands more of employees and an enormous business organization established to carry the freight of the country.

There are those in the department, and there are many outside of the department who would be glad to see the Government control all transportation, including railroads, telegraph and telephone companies, and whatever facilities may be devised for the conveyance of passengers or freight or the transfer of information. So we might as well at the outset say that the measure before us has in view the ultimate establishment, under the control of the Post Office Department, of a vast network of transportation which will convey from field and farm and range and plantation and mill, all forms of agricultural products. And, as I have stated, when such system shall have been established demands will be made for its extension until all branches of industries may avail themselves of such instrumentalities and utilize it as a national common carrier.

During the incumbency of Mr. Burleson as Postmaster General a plan was proposed something like the one under consideration. It contemplated the establishment of a motor transport system to convey farm products from producer to consumer. As I recall, the proposition was debated and finally defeated upon the floor of the Senate. It was felt by many Senators that if the scheme were adopted it would expand into a stupendous organization.

Such a movement as I have understood this bill contemplates, if started, could not be arrested. The Senator from Georgia has stated that the object of the bill is to experiment with small products, such as eggs and butter, and he has said that many of the small products of the farm are of little value and the farmers can not afford the time and the trouble of hauling the same to market. He conveys the idea that the plan will be limited to the hauling of these less important and comparatively few products. However, the bill contains no limitations, and the Senator knows that if the plan is adopted no limitations will be imposed. If the Government may become a common carrier for butter and milk and eggs, why not for other farm products? Indeed, the farmers would demand that its activities be expanded. It will be impossible to draw the line between the small and unimportant products and the large and important products. There is no limit as to the number of pounds that shall be carried or, as stated, the articles which shall be carried. And I state, without any fear of successful contradiction, that if the scheme shall be accepted and the Government shall inaugurate a plan to carry products from the farm to the city, and from the producer to markets, all agricultural products will come within the category of transportable commodities, whether the commodities are animate or inanimate.

Provision will therefore have to be made under such a system for instrumentalities to convey all of the products that are to be shipped from the farms. Livestock, beef cattle, hogs, sheep, hay, wheat, corn, rye, barley, and, indeed, all things which are produced upon the farm and upon ranches will come within the scope of the plan and provisions will be made for their transportation.

Senators may say that Congress will limit the activities of the Post Office Department. Mr. President, that will not be done and Senators know that it can not be done. It was understood when the parcel-post system was established that it was to be confined to small parcels; but we find now that the Government is carrying all kinds of freight labeled "Parcel post." Lumber, coal, ore, livestock, freight of all kinds are now transported by the Post Office Department under the classification of parcel post. The Government is losing millions of dollars annually in carrying these bulky commodities. If sent by train or by private carriers of freight, the costs would be very much greater, and accordingly the Post Office Department is being utilized to convey these bulky and heavy commodities.

It will be the same if this plan goes through with respect to the products of the ranch and the field and the farm; and, as I have stated, and I repeat it, if the Government transports commodities from the farm, it will be required to engage in a general transportation business and it will become a nation-wide common carrier.

May I call attention briefly to the fact that most of the interurban railroad systems, which have contributed so much to the development of the rural and agricultural districts of our country, are in the hands of receivers? These important agencies, which have tied together the towns and cities and the rural districts, have served a very useful purpose in our economic life. They have brought the farms and the people in the rural districts into touch with the cities. They have sought to accommodate the people and to increase their business. The milk and the butter and the fresh vegetables are daily conveyed by these railroads from the farms to the cities and the towns.

It looked a few years ago as if there would be a continual development of the interurban railroad system. Thousands of miles were constructed and a most efficient system of railroad transportation was established. But, as stated, many of these systems, for lack of patronage or for other reasons, have gone into the hands of receivers. The advent of the truck and the automobile militated very much against these interurban electric roads. The result is that there has been a practical suspension of electric road construction in all parts of the United States. If the Government shall now embark upon the business of transportation, it means, of course, that there will be a complete suspension of electric railway construction, and undoubtedly such action upon the part of the Government will curtail the construction of steam railroads. For a number of years it was the policy of the steam railroad companies to extend branches out into growing and thriving agricultural districts. If the Government shall become a common carrier and transport the commodities of the people from the farms and ranches and rural districts to the cities, then there will be a restriction of steam railway building, and particularly of branch lines into the agricultural districts.

The far-reaching consequences of the embarkation by the Government upon a scheme such as is contemplated by this bill can not be fully comprehended. But earnest consideration of the subject will compel the conclusion that the measure before us should receive most careful consideration. Most evil precedents were the results of conditions which seemed to call for a departure from accepted policies. There is a saying among lawyers that hard cases make hard law; and so in legislation, hard situations, profound economic disturbances, are used as excuses for socialistic and paternalistic legislation, and for the inauguration of policies which are at variance with the principles which underlie this Republic.

Mr. President, it is important that there be new capital invested in railroads, both steam and electric. It is important that our transportation system be improved by private capital, not by the Government. It is important for those within the cities, as well as for the agriculturists, that markets for the products of the manufacturers, as well as the farmers, should be expanded, and that freight rates should be reduced to the lowest possible level. The projection of the Government into the transportation field will, of course, react immediately upon the transportation system of the United States; and I call attention to the fact that corporations are being formed for the transportation by truck and automobiles of freight and passengers between cities and towns. Wherever we go we encounter the freight trucks and the passenger automobiles. They go into the country and into the villages and the rural communities and serve the people. As the needs of the people increase, additional corporations will be formed. But if the Government enters into this field, then, of course, private capital will be driven out. Of course, the Government can not operate as cheaply and as efficiently as can individuals; but the Government has a long purse, and the Treasury is inexhaustible. It may be empty to-day, but the taxing power will fill it to-morrow. And though people can successfully compete against the Government, if the standards applied are efficiency and economy, private persons can not compete, if governmental agencies may thrust their hands into the Treasury to make up deficits and to bear the expense of governmental operation.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BROOKHART. The Senator seems to have objection to developing the rural route service for the farmers partly on the ground that it would cause a deficit. Is it not a fact that the Steel Trust, while the farmers are going bankrupt, is making enormous profits right now, and would it not be just to restore the excess-profits tax on the Steel Trust and like combinations in order to pay that deficit and give this service?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, my objection to the plan back of this bill is not because there will be a deficit in operating a governmental transportation system. Perhaps that is one reason for my objection, but my primary objection is that in the long run the farmers will not be benefited by having the Government enter into the transportation business. They might obtain temporary benefit by having the Government buy trucks and vehicles for the purpose of carrying to market their products, but I insist that the initiation of such a policy would culminate in the erection of a nation-wide transportation system, operated by the Government, which would be so inefficient, so expensive, so wasteful, as to become a burden upon the taxpayers and an injury to the farmers, as well as to all classes.

My position is that the farmers stand a better chance to have cheap transportation from farm to city and city to farm by private enterprise than by governmental owned, operated, and controlled instrumentalities of transportation. Whatever increase in taxation occurs, it hurts the farmer. And I am certain that deficits would result from the operation of a transportation system by the Government, as deficits have resulted from the operation by the Government of the ships controlled by the Shipping Board.

A democracy such as ours is not as efficient in its administration as a well-organized monarchy or a militarism. There are other gains, of course, in a democracy which more than compensate for losses resulting from the efficiency of militarism.

Mr. President, the latter part of the Senator's suggestion about the Steel Trust is not quite germane to the question under consideration.

Mr. BROOKHART. Are not all these questions related? Should we not consider every one of them in the light of every other one?

Mr. KING. In a sense, Mr. President, most of these are related directly or indirectly. When we come to discuss the revenue bill, then we can consider the question of excess profits as well as the earnings of the Steel Trust, and if it, as well as other corporations, should be taxed more than they are now taxed legislation should be enacted which will accomplish the result.

The question of the Government entering upon the business of the common carrier is one thing, and I respectfully submit that it is not directly related to the fact, if it be a fact, that some corporations are not taxed sufficiently, nor is it related to the fact that there is no excess-profits tax now collected from the corporations of the United States. I am in favor, Mr. President, of a just system of taxation. I believe that wealth should bear its full share of the burdens of taxation.

I have offered a bill which relieves the farmers and those of small incomes of taxes levied under existing law. Permit me to say, however, Mr. President, that the earnings of rich men and corporations, as a rule, go back into business. They constitute capital which is invested, and an investment of this new capital develops new enterprises which in turn affects the products of the farm and the field and the mine and furnishes employment to a greater number of people.

I am sure no Senator desires to deny profits, either to individuals or to corporations. Speaking for myself, I would like to see all business enterprises, whether conducted by individuals or corporations, make profits, because such profits would be invested and such investment would add to the prosperity of all the people.

It is desirable that we have more savings, more earnings, more enterprises developed and employment furnished to a larger number of people.

Mr. BROOKHART. Will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BROOKHART. It seems to me that the Senator is not considering the basic proposition, and that is this: All the work of all the people of all the United States, added to all the earnings of all the capital in all the United States, added to all the unearned increment of all the capital in all the United States increases the national wealth only about 6 per cent a year. I want to ask the Senator, if that be true, if these stabilized industries that earn more than that are not getting more than their share in every instance, and is not that an unjust charge upon labor and farmers and other people who pay it, and is there any other way to reach it except by giving these farmers and other people their rights under the law and then taxing those excess profits back?

Mr. KING. We must not confuse the issue before us. Of course, the earnings of all classes are contributions to the national wealth, but as the Senator knows, only from the savings are investments to be had. Of course, the ideal social and economic system would be that which permits all to make profits, from which profits capital is found for further investment. But under our system of government we may not take the profits away from one person and give them to another. We may and should adopt a rational and just system of taxation, and those of large earnings should pay large taxes, and those of small earnings should pay small taxes. But the system of taxation should not be capricious or discriminatory, nor can we justify paternalism or communism or the embarkation of the Government upon socialistic schemes merely because some are rich and may not be sufficiently taxed. If they are not paying the taxes which they should the legislatures of the States and of the Federal Government are at fault. We may not under our Constitution correct one wrong by resorting to another nor remedy evils which can be remedied by embarking the Government upon policies contrary to the theory of our Constitution and to the principles of individualism which underlie our political and economic system.

I admit there are corporations and individuals who are evading taxation. I admit there has been discriminatory legislation which has contributed to the amassing of large fortunes by individuals and by corporations. I admit that the protective tariff has been employed to enrich certain classes; that it has been an instrument of oppression to agriculture and to the consuming masses of the country, but while admitting all these things I can not find reasons which I consider sufficient to justify me in supporting the Government in taking over the railroads, in becoming a common carrier, and in entering into those fields of private industry which are occupied by the people of this great and growing Republic.

If I believed that the Government could conduct all the affairs of the people better than they can themselves, and that its ownership of all the property would bring greater happiness and peace to the people, I might then become a communist. But I believe that communism is a blight upon the people; that it retards growth and development; that it paralyzes industry and reduces the people to a condition of mental torpor and industrial stagnation.

Mr. President, I would help all agriculturists. I would do so by lightening taxation, by reducing the expenses of the Government. I would encourage self-initiative, a strong spirit of local self-government—those primitive and virile qualities exemplified in the early days of this Republic. I would repress illegal trusts and combinations in restraint of trade. I would see that there was a free field of opportunity for all; that there were no special privileges, and that the flag of this Republic meant equality and an equal opportunity for every person who lives under it.

I would expand the markets of the farmer; I would aid in finding foreign consumers for his products; I would remove the exploiting and criminal tariffs which increase the prices of commodities which the farmer is compelled to buy, in order that the purchasing power of his products would be enhanced and his prosperity increased. I would provide a just and fair system of rural credits; I would aid in every legitimate and proper way every cooperative movement to enable the farmers to conserve and dispose of their products. Indeed, Mr. President, recognizing the importance of agriculture, I would do all within my power to establish our international as well as our national policies to advance the interests of agriculture, keeping in mind always our form of government and the limitations which are placed upon the General Government of the United States.

But, Mr. President, returning to the subject matter under discussion, I believe that the farmers will not be benefited by the governmental system of transportation. The waste and inefficiency of bureaucrats preclude the successful operation of the railroads and transportation system and the great industries which have contributed so much to the development of this Republic.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah further yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. KING. If the Senator desires to ask a question, yes.

Mr. BROOKHART. Being a strong believer in the Government of the United States, I am willing to defend it even against the charge of inefficiency and waste.

Mr. KING. I would rather the Senator would ask me a question, and make speeches in his own time.

Mr. BROOKHART. Here is the question: Does the Senator know that in spite of all of the newspaper criticism of the operation of the railroads by the Government, in spite of all the bad McAdoo management that we hear about, the first 10 months after the roads were turned back their operating expenses in private hands increased by $1,485,000,000, or nearly a billion and a half?

Mr. KING. I have seen a multitude of statements affirming what the Senator says, and I have seen many statements denying the correctness of those figures.

Mr. BROOKHART. If I furnish the figures from the reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and give the book and the page, will that be satisfactory?

Mr. KING. I have investigated that question at some length, and when the railroad question comes before the Senate for consideration I shall give it my best attention; but I want to say to the Senator in all good faith that I do not believe in governmental ownership and operation——

Mr. BROOKHART. Of anything?

Mr. KING. Of railroads and ships and other instrumentalities which under our theory of government should be operated by private individuals.

Mr. BROOKHART. The Senator would turn back the post office to private corporations, would he?

Mr. KING. It is so strongly intrenched that I would not do so; but I will say very frankly that in my opinion the Post Office Department could be operated more efficiently and economically than it is now for one-half the present expense if it were controlled by private individuals.

Mr. BRUCE and Mr. BROOKHART addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield, and to whom?

Mr. KING. If the Senator from Iowa will pardon me, I will yield now to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I should like to remind the Senator, in connection with what he has just said, that a few years ago Postmaster General Burleson testified, in the course of an investigation by Congress, that if the rural mail service were let out to private contract it could be conducted at a reduction in cost of some $18,000,000 a year.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. KING. I yield for a question.

Mr. BROOKHART. On that proposition, I want to challenge that statement—I do not care who made it—and I want to assert that the Post Office Department, with all its defects, is more efficiently managed than any private business of its magnitude in the world. When we consider the profits and the charges that we have to pay in private business, the cost to the people is far greater than it is in the Post Office Department. Every profit of private business is paid for by the work of somebody; and with those profits going above the earnings of all the work and all the capital and all the unearned increment added together, we know that somebody is making more than his share. The Post Office Department is not, and never has been.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I imagine that the criticism, implied or actual, against the Post Office Department is not justified in whole, because the Post Office Department must operate under statutes enacted by the Congress, and there is injected the element of politics. For example, if the Post Office Department were left to its own free will in the fixing of postal rates so that they would meet the cost of transporting the mail matter I do not believe that the second-class mail matter would be transported at a loss, but the Congress insists that the second-class mail matter shall be transported at a loss, and does so for purely political reasons. Congress is afraid of the persons who publish second-class mail matter. The rural mail delivery is operated at a loss, purposely so, because the Congress has enacted statutes which govern the rates to be charged, thinking in its wisdom—and I do not deny this—that it is worth while for the Government to lose money in that service in order to give a more prompt mail service to the people who live in remote rural districts. So the blame, if there is to be any blame at all, should not be directed solely against the Post Office Department or its management, because it is not a free business agent, and the trouble with Government operation of any commercial business is that it never can be a free business agent.

It will always be restricted or directed by statutes emanating from the legislative branch of the Government, and back of many of which is a political purpose.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, undoubtedly the facts stated by the Senator from New York are largely responsible for the increased cost over what otherwise would be the cost of operating the Post Office Department and perhaps other activities and agencies of the Government.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. KING. I do.

Mr. BROOKHART. In answer to the suggestion of the Senator from New York, I suggest that this interference with government is an interference from private business. It is private business coming into government in a way that it has no right to come, and then these injustices result. The fact is, here is the United States Chamber of Commerce being organized as a sort of supergovernment of the United States to supervise and direct everything that we do down here, and it is this business in government that is the cause of these discrepancies. I think we will have to get some of that system of business out of government and let the Government attend to its business.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I be impertinent enough to ask whether the Senator from Iowa would vote for an amendment to the postal laws providing that the second-class mail matter should pay postage sufficient to meet the cost of transportation?

Mr. BROOKHART. I think probably I would. I certainly would if it levied a tax on the Saturday Evening Post and the other reactionary journals that are getting the benefit of the present rate and making their millions out of it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not want to be considered as indicting in a wholesale way the Post Office Department or the administrative and executive branches of the Government; but I think it may be said with much certainty and assurance that the Government, in its efforts to manage many of these great enterprises, such as the ships and the railroads and other activities to which reference might be made, because in part of the influences referred to by the Senator from New York and the hampering legislation by Congress, has been unable to bring about those economies and to accomplish the work with that efficiency that would characterize the efficient business organization of the American people.

The American people, generally speaking, are efficient in the management of their own affairs; and under the competitive system there has been developed an alertness and business capacity that has given to this Nation a preeminent place industrially among the nations of the world.

The spirit of individualism and of proper integration which exists among the American people, together with our democratic institutions and political ideals, is responsible for the great triumphs which have come to this Republic, and for the position of primacy which it occupies in the industrial, economic, and political world.

If America had been a paternalistic government, if it had been a socialism, if the Federal Government had taken over the activities which belong to private individuals, we would not have had $300,000,000,000 of private property. We would not have been the financial power in the world which all concede the United States to be.

It is true, as indicated by the Senator from Iowa, that some corporations have grown too large. I do not agree with the position of Mr. Roosevelt that corporations may not be too large. I think they may be too large; and, as was pointed out by Mr. Justice Brandeis, corporations may become so big as to become unwieldy and inefficient and unable to compete with smaller organizations which are directing their energies along the same lines.

In the same way, the Government may become so big, so unwieldy that it will cease to properly function. That is the condition, many believe, of our Government to-day. It is becoming paternalistic, bureaucratic, and inefficient. It can not properly manage the affairs which legitimately belong to it. We spend our time in creating commissions and bureaus and agencies to take over and contest a multitude of matters which belong to the States. This is a Government of and by commissions who frame laws and regulations by which the people are governed. And Senators on both sides of the Chamber are adding to the responsibilities and duties of the Federal Government by imprudent and often unwise and unconstitutional legislation, and we are contributing to the inefficiency and incompetency of the Federal Government by devolving upon it duties and responsibilities with which it is not charged under the Constitution, and which it can not economically or properly perform.

But, to come back to the measure before us, Mr. President, I think every Senator is in sympathy with the farmers and would be glad to do everything possible for their relief. If this measure, waiving the question of the paternalism and the constitutionality of the scheme which it contemplates, would be of aid to the farmer, I should support it, but in my opinion it would not. It will prevent the organization of private companies to engage in rural transportation. In many sections of the country—I know in some parts of my own State—private persons have organized companies to operate motors and transport to the cities the products of the farm and to the rural districts the commodities desired by the farmers. That will be done more generally throughout the United States as time goes on.

Such a transportation system or something needed by the people can not be developed in a day; but it will be developed as the needs of the people require. But if the Government is projected into this business, it will arrest, indeed prevent, private activity. And with the Government carrying on a business of such magnitude it will mean hundreds of thousands of additional Federal employees and a bureaucratic system that will be oppressive and inefficient. It will mean that thousands and tens of thousands of busses and automobiles and trucks must be purchased by the Government; that thousands of garages must be built; that Federal machinery must be provided for caring for freight; warehouses will ultimately be needed and all of the machinery set up by transportation companies. In other words, if the Government embarks upon this scheme as it is contemplated, it will eventuate in the engaging in all forms of transportation in all parts of the land.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BRUCE. I want to ask the Senator from Utah whether in his conclusions he does not to some little extent lose sight of the fact that this bill contemplates purely an experimental project? Do his arguments apply with full force to such a case as is presented by the bill? It provides for experimentation by the Post Office Department on rural routes to see how far it is possible to transport agricultural products directly from the producer to the consumer and to find out what the cost of that may be. Anyhow, is it not likely that very much valuable information would be elicited by this experiment so that we may be able to see how much good this would do if it should be carried into effect?

I quite agree with the principles which underlie the argument of the Senator. I am sure he is not more strongly impressed with the correctness of those principles than I am myself, but it seems to me he loses sight a little bit of the fact that what is to be inaugurated by this enactment is an experiment, and it seems to me that after that experiment had been made we could tell better than we can tell now how far the scheme was chimerical and how far it was not.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I do not say the scheme is chimerical; that is, that it can not be carried out. It is an unwise and unpolitic scheme. It will prove a costly and dangerous scheme. It will project the Government into policies which will be harmful to all classes of people. But so long as the Treasury of the United States is behind it, it can succeed; but the annual deficit will be colossal. Germany is in the transportation business; though, of course, she is losing billions of marks every day. Other governments have undertaken the business of common carriers but without success. I ask the Senator if this experiment is not for the purpose ultimately of projecting the Government into the transportation business?

Mr. BRUCE. I suppose it is, provided it develops results sufficiently beneficial to the public to warrant the extension of the experiment.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator desire that the Government of the United States, through the Post Office Department or through any other department, shall be a common carrier of freight, farm products, and all other products?

Mr. BRUCE. Indeed I do not, on any general scale; but it seems to me there might be some reasonable expansion of the postal facilities, perhaps, for the relief of the farmers.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator where he would stop? If we inaugurate this system, and transport farm products from the country to Baltimore, where will we stop? Will it be with butter and eggs? The Senator knows that we do not stop in the parcel-post system with small articles; freight is hauled. I have seen iron rails hauled and I have seen livestock hauled, with great loss to the Government.

Mr. BRUCE. I think it should be limited to portable articles, of course; articles more or less readily portable.

Mr. KING. But we do not limit it.

Mr. BRUCE. I know that. There are anomalies under the present system, but I think those might be corrected. I mean to say that if we reached the point where the Government found itself fairly embarking in the business of transportation on a large scale, then we would find ourselves face to face with the question of whether the Government should not own and operate the railroads, and the Senator from Utah is not more inflexibly antagonistic to that idea than I am.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Maryland is a man of large experience and a valuable addition to the Senate. I ask the Senator now, Does he not believe that if the Post Office Department reports that this experiment has been a success it will inaugurate a system under which the Government of the United States will carry the products of the farm, because if the plan is put into operation in one State it will be extended to all States, and soon the Government would have a nation-wide organization carrying the freight of the people—farmers and manufacturers and all others?

Mr. BRUCE. I personally believe that the result of this experiment will be to establish the utter inadvisability of continuing on any very considerable scale the present rural mail-delivery system; but it seems to me, all the same, that the experiment might be tried, and we could judge ourselves, the Senator from Utah and I and every other citizen of the United States could judge for ourselves how far the experiment suggested the wisdom of any further extension of the operation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think when the able Senator from Maryland concedes, as his replies have conceded, that if this experimentation shows, as it will show, that the products of the farms can be carried to the cities, then it will be inevitable that the pressure will be so great by officials of the Government and others that the plan will be imposed upon the Government and put into operation.

There are many who believe that we can not keep out of it and that the Government will take over the railroads. I hope the time will not arrive when that will be done. But I feel quite sure that if we shall inaugurate the plan contemplated by this measure, and begin the expansion of that plan, the demand will be made that the Government shall take over the railroads and perhaps other public utilities; already there is a demand for the Government to build power plants at various parts of the United States and to engage in various kinds of business which private enterprise has developed.

I have just been in a country where there is state capitalism. They had communism at first, but it brought starvation and death and economic ruin. A change resulted in a form of state capitalism as to the "big" or "key" industries; but there is still confusion and poverty and evils and sorrows which we can not understand and appreciate. Then the railroads are being operated by the Government at an enormous loss. Twenty-five to thirty per cent of all taxes levied in Russia go to make up this deficit. A large part goes to pay the deficits arising from the operation of the ships upon the Volga, upon the Caspian and the Black Seas, and a large part of it goes to meet the deficits resulting from operating the sugar factories and the textile mills and the iron mills, those key and basic industries which lie at the foundation of prosperity, aside from agriculture, of any progressive and enterprising state.

Those great industries are running behind to the extent of hundreds of millions of rubles annually, though there is no competition. The inefficiency of the government, the red tape, the huge bureaucracy established under a paternalistic form of government forbid economy, forbid efficiency, and in the long run must culminate in the destruction of the industries.

Mr. President, let me repeat that in my opinion the farmers will not profit by this bill or the plan which it is the precursor of. They will be better served by private enterprise than by the Government; they will get their products to market much more cheaply by private carriers than by the United States.

Under this bill we are giving the Post Office Department a great deal of discretion. It may reduce the postage on food products. It has discretion to determine what the rates shall be, whether high or low. Rates may be higher in one section, on one route, than on some other routes.

AGRICULTURAL DIVERSIFICATION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, Senate bill 2250.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2250) to promote a permanent system of self-supporting agriculture in regions adversely affected by the stimulation of wheat production during the war and aggravated by many years of small yields and high production costs of wheat.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The principal clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Ferris	King	Ralston
Ball	Fess	Ladd	Ransdell
Borah	Fletcher	Lodge	Reed, Mo.
Brookhart	Frazier	McCormick	Reed, Pa.
Bruce	George	McKellar	Sheppard
Bursum	Hale	McKinley	Shields
Cameron	Harreld	McLean	Smith
Capper	Harris	McNary	Smoot
Copeland	Harrison	Moses	Spencer
Couzens	Howell	Neely	Stanfield
Curtis	Johnson, Minn.	Norris	Stephens
Dale	Jones, N. Mex.	Oddie	Trammell
Dill	Jones, Wash.	Pepper	Wadsworth
Edge	Kendrick	Phipps	Walsh, Mont.
Edwards	Keyes	Pittman	Willis

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to perfect an amendment that was pending yesterday when the Senate adjourned. I have changed the wording somewhat of the first amendment that was offered, but the amendment which I am about to offer carries the same idea. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment which I now send to the desk may be pending instead of the other amendment, and that the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAM-

MELL] shall apply to this amendment the same as it did to my former amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has a right to modify his own amendment. The Secretary will report the amendment as now proposed by the Senator from Mississippi.

The READING CLERK. On page 1, line 4, after "United States" strike out down to and including line 3 on page 2, and insert in lieu thereof a comma and the following:

particularly in the wheat areas dependent almost entirely upon a single crop, resulting from the stimulation of production of a single crop during the recent war and aggravated during subsequent years by low yields and high cost of production, but also in other areas dependent almost entirely upon a single crop, where conditions warrant it, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, should be changed through the encouragement of a system of agriculture not dependent for its success upon a single crop, but one which would include the raising of livestock, such as dairy and beef cattle, hogs, sheep, poultry, and the products thereof.

On page 3, line 2, after "cropper" strike out down to "no loan" on line 9, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Loans and advances shall be made only to such farmers in the areas of the country embraced within the provisions of this act as are not reasonably able through their own resources or through existing credit facilities to initiate upon their farms a system of diversified farming, but who show their willingness to enter upon such an undertaking and who may be reasonably expected to develop such a system if given aid and opportunity.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] applies to this amendment and is pending.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I regret very much that I am unable to cast my vote for the proposed legislation. There are two reasons for my regret. The first is that I realize that the condition of the farmers of the country and especially those out West is a very serious one. Their plight is one with which I believe we all sympathize, and I do especially. I have always voted for farmers' measures, except when a high tariff was proposed as a means of helping them, and I think when I voted against those high-tariff provisions I did not vote against the farmers, but for their benefit. The very wheat farmers who are the beneficiaries of the proposed legislation were not benefited by the heavy tariff of 30 cents a bushel on wheat. The President has since added another 12 cents, and even a tariff of 42 cents a bushel does not help the farmers, and we all know that it does not help them. Time and experience has shown that a high tariff on wheat does not really affect the price. It is a fallacy.

However, I regret very much that I can not support the measure because of the plight of the farmers.

In the next place, I feel very kindly disposed toward the proponent of the bill, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD]. He is an able and splendid Senator, and I know that anything to which he gives his heart and mind is, in his judgment, worthy. I regret to have to differ with him about a matter that he considers so important.

I want to read a part of the second section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 2. That from the approval of this act and until June 30, 1926, the Secretary of Agriculture shall be empowered and authorized to make advances or loans to farmers, as defined and limited in this section, in a sum not exceeding $1,000 for the purchase of livestock, including dairy and beef cattle, hogs, sheep, and poultry suitable for the development of a system of agriculture as contemplated by the purposes of this act. The Secretary may purchase such livestock and supply same to the borrower at cost; such advances, loans, or sales shall be made upon such terms and conditions and subject to such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe, including provision for the repayment thereof by amortization or otherwise—

And so forth.

We who have been here for several years, or ever since the war, at any rate, recall that during the war the Government stimulated the production of wheat, but that at the same time, from the beginning of its stimulation, it has likewise stimulated wheat prices. We who were here at the time recall with a great deal of clearness that a fixed price of $2.26 a bushel was established by the Congress. All the wheat farmers wanted it, and the bill was passed for their benefit. I notice by reading the act approved March 4, 1919, that the Government appropriated $1,000,000,000 to make that guarantee of the price fixed good. We authorized it to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States; yet it is claimed now by the friends of the pending bill that because the Government then fixed the price of wheat and stimulated the production of wheat it is our duty, when the price of wheat is low, to furnish the farmer money with which to rotate his crops and engage in some other kind of farming business, namely, that of livestock, hogs, and poultry.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Did I understand the Senator from Tennessee to say that the Government paid out a billion dollars to the wheat farmers?

Mr. McKELLAR. I read from the act, not that the Government had paid it out but that Congress appropriated money for the purpose of carrying the act into effect.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Did we ever pay out any money?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know how much we paid out, but I will read from the act for the benefit of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I know what the act provided, but, as a matter of fact, was not wheat in Europe being bought by the European Governments at very much above that price?

Mr. McKELLAR. I can not say as to that.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the Senator from Tennessee yield to me?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. There were some $3,000,000 expended under that act for seed purposes.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That sum was expended for seed; but what I am speaking about is keeping up the price of wheat.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no doubt in the world that the guaranty by the United States Government had the effect of raising the price very considerably more than it would have been if that guaranty had not been made. However, that may be, I will say to the Senator and to the Senate that the wheat farmers of the country wanted the price fixed at that time. The then Senator from North Dakota, Mr. McCumber, the then Senator from Oklahoma, Mr. Gore, the former Senator from Illinois, Mr. Sherman, and various other Senators who were here and spoke on the bill——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will yield in just one moment. All those Senators argued at that time that that was the purpose of the then pending bill. That was in 1919. If the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] will excuse me a moment, I desire to read from a speech which was delivered by the then Senator from Illinois, Mr. Sherman, at that time. Mr. Sherman said:

I have no doubt of that. Congress must accept its share of the responsibility.

I remember when Senators voted here, it was argued that there ought to be a guaranty on wheat prices in order to stimulate production. The argument was adopted, "It is an artificial stimulus, it is true; but the conditions are artificial." The war conditions being abnormal, as they were, Congress deemed itself justified in making that guaranteed price. That is illustrative of the finite wisdom of mankind. Before we get through we shall have more of that, but this illustrates, so far as we have traveled, the utter unreliability of human judgment when men begin to interfere with markets. The Senate, the House, and the executive department undertook to perform a task that the business men—the producers and the distributors of a hundred million people—were carrying. We shouldered that burden. I think it was a short-sighted policy. I voted for some of it. It was a war policy, and I am willing now to vote for appropriations to buy the wheat or to change the price and to pocket the loss. We had better do that than to keep up the price of wheat and its resulting products in the Atlantic seaboard towns or to millions of private consumers.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. Just one moment. I promised first to yield to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], and then I will yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. NORRIS. The question which I desire to ask the Senator from Tennessee is whether he does not realize from the debates which then took place here that it was the understanding of the Congress that the price then fixed should not be the maximum price, but that we were fixing the minimum price, which, by action of the Government, became the maximum price?

Mr. McKELLAR. It became the maximum price, but I have no doubt in my mind that the act affected the price of wheat.

Mr. NORRIS. The price of wheat was going to take its ordinary course according to the law of supply and demand so long as it remained above the price fixed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. SMITH. I wanted to call the Senator's attention to the fact that when that bill was reported here and was being debated the whole debate revolved around the fact that the price fixed was a minimum, below which the Government would make it good, and that above that price the sky was the limit, no matter from what source the price was derived.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will now speak to the amendment for a few moments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator has been talking to the amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then I will speak to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Very well. The Senator is recognized for 10 minutes on the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, there are one or two things I wish to say.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator, but I hope he will be as brief as possible.

Mr. SMITH. I wanted to explain to the Senator that what I have stated being the fact, I do not believe there was a member of the committee who understood that there was what was popularly known as a "joker" in the bill. There was a clause toward the end of the bill which provided that the food controller should have the right to name a price, beyond which he would consider it profiteering, and therefore any higher price was estopped. The bill had hardly passed Congress, however, before he made the guaranty price, the price above which profiteering would start, and made the minimum the maximum.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Does the Senator from South Carolina——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have just a very few moments.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I will take but a moment, if the Senator will yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Does the Senator from South Carolina not remember that the committee did not so understand it, and that I called attention to its effect about fifty times on the floor?

Mr. SMITH. The argument was made that, perhaps, the Senator from Missouri was mistaken, but the bill was hardly more than passed before it was put into effect in the manner I have suggested.

Mr. REED of Missouri. They found out that I was not mistaken.

Mr. SMITH. That is true.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, what I said was that the farmers were here asking for that legislation, just as they are here, through their representatives, asking for the passage of the pending measure. That is shown by the speech of Senator Gore, of Oklahoma, in February, 1919, and the speech of Senator McCumber about the same time, and by the speeches of those who had charge of the legislation.

I am not here to criticize that legislation. In view of the condition which then existed, perhaps Congress was wise in attempting to remedy it to the best of its ability at that time. I regret that this bill does not remedy the present grave situation. I wish this were such a bill that we all could vote for it in the interest of the farmer. I want to see the farmer prosper, because I know that the prosperity of the whole country is dependent upon the prosperity of the farmer, and we ought to see to it by all proper legislation that he shall be aided whenever it is right for the Congress to do so.

Mr. President, what will be the natural result of this measure? Suppose we lend the farmers in the wheat-growing regions a thousand dollars each to enable them to go into the cattle business and into the poultry business and into the hog business and they go into any of those lines of business; and suppose that conditions should arise next fall or the fall following under which wheat should command a greater price than it does now, then it would be exceedingly advantageous to those farmers if they had wheat on hand to sell; but by reason of this action of Congress they will not have the wheat. They will have hogs; they will have poultry; they will have cattle instead of wheat, and those commodities perhaps will be at a low price. What will be the result? If the reasoning behind this bill is correct, then it will be the duty of the Congress to step forward and say, "We caused you to make that mistake; we stimulated the hog industry and the chicken industry and the cattle industry; we caused you, by lending you money, to change your crop from wheat to livestock, and therefore we must make that good." Where are we going to stop? Mr. President, I say this legislation is indefensible when the light of reason is brought to bear upon it. I do not see how any Senator can vote to establish such a policy in our legislation. It is undemocratic; it is unwise. I hope that the Agricultural Committee, whether this bill shall pass or not, will get together and report out a wiser and better measure in which all of the Members of the Senate can join in order to help the farmer, because we all want to do what is best for him as well as what is best for the country.

I ought not to predict—it is ordinarily unwise to make a prediction—but when it was contended during the course of the debate on the tariff bill that a high tariff on wheat would benefit the farmers, I said then that, in my judgment, a high tariff on wheat would never materially aid the farmers, and that prediction has been verified; so I will venture to say that the pending bill, which proposes to loan $75,000,000 to certain farmers, will not have any better result. It will not help the wheat farmers as a whole; it will not help them individually; it will probably get a lot of them into trouble which they would not get into if the bill were not passed. The wise thing to do, Senators, is to defeat this measure, and I am going to vote against it. The passage of such a bill will be a waste of fifty or seventy-five millions of the people's money without any corresponding benefit to the wheat farmers. We can not have tax reduction if we indulge in such legislation—such ill-considered and ill-advised legislation—as this.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL].

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The queston is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], on which the Chair understands the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I desire to make a few comments on the pending amendment. I have spoken once; I do not know whether my time was charged to the amendment or charged to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair does not know, because he was not in the chair at that time.

Mr. TRAMMELL. It is immaterial, for I think I have at least 10 minutes on one or the other.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that the Senator spoke on his own amendment, and the Senator has 10 minutes on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi if he desires to use it in that way.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I will take time on that amendment.

Mr. President, I proposed the amendment to strike out the word "particularly," referring to the wheat areas, because I wanted it made clear to the officers who are to administer this legislation, if it shall be enacted into law, that it was not in the mind of Congress that the benefits under this measure should be restricted to the wheat areas and that Congress had fully determined that question as expressed by the legislation. Without a record vote, it seems to be the desire of probably a majority of the Senate that we make it very plain that that is the principal object and purpose of the legislation, namely, to furnish aid within the wheat areas of the country only. I think if we are going to enact legislation along this line, we should certainly adopt the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi and in the form in which he has proposed it.

I can see no justification whatever from the argument which has been advanced here for appropriating $50,000,000 of the taxpayers' money, funds which are to be raised from every State within the Union, for the purpose of assisting some three or four States that suffered following the war on account of the depression in wheat prices, which was very unfortunate and which was lamented by myself and by the people quite generally throughout the country. Yet, in fact, the purpose of this measure is to require the taxpayers of 43 or 45 other American States to raise funds by income taxes, nuisance taxes, or whatever it may be, for the purpose of expending $50,000,000 in three or four States. Why? On the ground that they suffered from the low price of wheat at a time when it is claimed there was overproduction, and then, as stated in the bill, later there was underproduction. If that were a condition unlike the condition which has been experienced in many States of the Union by our agricultural interests, then there might possibly be some excuse for the discrimination, but the condition which existed in that limited area, involving disaster and misfortune, is not unlike what was experienced in many sections throughout our country. In fact, very largely our farmers suffered from one consequence or another following the war or during the war.

In my State, just as was true in the wheat-growing States, the Government appealed for increased crops. To the Northwest the Government said: "Increase and enlarge your wheat production." In my section of the country, where we produce other crops—potatoes, for instance, Florida having become quite a potato-producing State—the Government appealed for an increase of the production of potatoes. We produce early vegetables there to a large extent. The Government appealed to us to enlarge and extend our cabbage crop, and this applied all along the line. We produced sweet potatoes, for instance. The Government even carried on a campaign down there for the production of sweet potatoes. Then they appealed to us to extend our farming operations to include the production of castor beans used in connection with the production of oil for the airplane, and our people with patriotism and zeal engaged largely in an attempt to raise these beans. In consequence, Senators, following the war hundreds upon hundreds of acres of cabbages were plowed up in my State, with no market for them. Sweet potatoes were allowed to rot and decay for lack of a market. Thousands upon thousands of barrels of Irish potatoes would not bring in the market the cost of gathering and the freight charges to the market. The citrus fruit growers also suffered loss in 1920. The people of my State following the war suffered, I believe, at a reasonable estimate $30,000,000 or $40,000,000 in the depreciation of their crops and their inability to sell those crops at fair prices.

We have not asked for any legislation to relieve that situation. The people of the State of Florida have courageously and bravely faced the situation, and have tried to overcome those disasters following as a consequence of the war; but we take the position that if you are going to try to adjust such situations every State in the Union is entitled to be considered, and you should not pass legislation that will apply only to a small part of the Republic.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. TRAMMELL. If the Senator will pardon me, I have only 10 minutes, and I shall be glad if he will speak in his own time.

Mr. NORRIS. I have not any time.

Mr. TRAMMELL. If you are going to adjust the situation, why not make a survey of the agricultural conditions throughout the country and see who suffered and who did not suffer by virtue of alluring invitations to engage more extensively in agriculture and in the production of various crops, instead of attempting to adopt legislation the object and purpose of which is to assist a very limited number of farmers in a very limited number of States? In order to give them this assistance, you propose to tax the entire American people in every State in the Union to the extent of $50,000,000. That is what it means. You propose to take $50,000,000 from the pockets of the taxpayers of all the other States in this Union and give it to them to assist them in remedying the misfortunes of war. Not only agriculture, but manufacturing industries and almost all kinds of business in this country, taking them in groups and in classes, at some time or other, either during the war or following the war, suffered disaster.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. TRAMMELL. If the Senator will pardon me, I have only 10 minutes. We are under the limitation of debate now. I dislike not to yield to the Senator, but we have only 10 minutes each, and this is my last minute, if the Senator will pardon me.

We have that situation. In my State the mining and the shipping and the marketing of phosphates was a very profitable enterprise. In that industry millions upon millions of dollars are invested. Within one county of the State we have over $150,000,000 invested in phosphate mines and plants. That industry was reasonably prosperous prior to the war, but in consequence of the war we were unable to get vessels in which to transport our phosphates. That paralyzed the phosphate business for a time, and within my home county, which is quite a phosphate section, there were 4,000 or 5,000 men in idleness for want of employment who had been previously engaged in the phosphate mines, and yet they could not get employment because the mines had to be closed down in consequence of the war and on account of the inability of the operators to procure ships to transport the phosphates. The lumber industry in my State was hampered for quite a while.

The naval-stores industry was paralyzed and thousands and millions of dollars lost. So I say if we are going to attempt to make readjustments with our people on account of the misfortunes of war, we have quite an undertaking on hand; and if we are going to make a complete and a just restitution we should take into consideration the misfortunes which befell the agricultural interests and other interests in the various States throughout the Union, and not restrict it to three or four States.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I can not feel that the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] has given due consideration to the importance of agriculture. I remember that when the railroads were turned back to their private owners we took a great many times $50,000,000 out of the Treasury of the United States, not to make up a deficit or a loss, but to make up profits to the railroads on their investment. Altogether, we have given them perhaps about $1,800,000,000 that they were not entitled to when we come to consider their relation to everything else.

Agriculture is about one-third of all the United States. About one-third of all the property wealth is invested in agriculture, and the last census shows that 51,000,000 of our people are agriculturists. Agriculture at this time is in a prostrate condition as a result of governmental action. It is a result of the Federal reserve deflation policy, which was a governmental action. It is a result of the high profits of the Steel Trust, the Sugar Trust, the Tobacco Trust, and all the other big combinations which agriculture must pay for what it uses in its business; and those high prices are promoted by tariff legislation, direct governmental action. The credit system of the United States, charging agriculture perhaps an average of at least 7 per cent interest when it ought to be not higher than 4 per cent, is built up under a system of enactments of the Government of the United States. Yet this great business, with its sixty billions of capital since it was deflated—more than eighty billions before—this great business, with all these people engaged in it is on the verge of bankruptcy. Practically every farmer in the United States at this moment is in fear of losing his home. These few States in the wheat-growing corner are the worst off of all.

I do not think this bill is a cure for the whole situation, or anything of the kind. I would rather have a great bill that did meet the whole situation, but I see no good chance of that. I hope we will amend the McNary-Haugen bill and pass it, following this bill. It is not in conflict with this emergency measure. Therefore I think, in view of the extravagant use of governmental money for other instrumentalities in this matter, that $50,000,000 is a little bit of a mite for these great States.

I desire to ask the Senator from Mississippi something about his amendment. I do not believe it was understood. As I understand the purpose of that amendment it is not to defeat this bill, but it is offered as a prelude to taking out that $25,000,000 item. Is that correct?

Mr. HARRISON. May I say to the Senator that whether the item of $25,000,000 which was added by the committee is adopted or not the amendment I have offered should be adopted, for the reason that there is a difference of opinion on the other side among Senators as to what is in the wheat area. Some say that the wheat area is North and South Dakota, Minnesota, Montana, and part of Wyoming. Nebraska might be construed as not being in the wheat area. Kansas or Iowa might be considered as not being in the wheat area. So I have included a proposition there putting it in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, where the conditions warrant it, to make loans to farmers in other parts of the country outside of the wheat area.

Mr. BROOKHART. Does it include all crops, or is it based upon wheat crops in all parts of the country?

Mr. HARRISON. It includes country that is almost a one-crop country, and its purpose is to encourage diversification.

Mr. BROOKHART. Whether it is wheat or some other crop?

Mr. HARRISON. Whether it is wheat or cotton or what not. It is to encourage diversification where the farmers are in a very bad condition, leaving it in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture to make the advancements.

Mr. BROOKHART. Really, Mr. President, I can see no objection to that amendment, and can see no reason why it should defeat the whole bill if it is adopted.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I have already spoken on the amendment. I desire to speak for a minute or two on the bill, merely for the purpose of pointing out what seems to me to be two fundamental errors in the argument made by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL].

In the first place, it is not contemplated, as his remarks seem to contemplate, that whatever advances are here made are to be in the nature of gifts. The bill distinctly provides in section 2:

> Such advances, loans, or sales shall be made upon such terms and conditions and subject to such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe, including provision for the repayment thereof by amortization or otherwise, but no loan or advance shall be made for a period of more than five years from the date thereof.

In other words, it is not a gift at all; it is simply a loan, to be repaid. So it is unfair, or leads to an unfair conclusion, to say that we are proposing to take $50,000,000 and give it to somebody.

The second point, and it seems to me the fundamental one to be considered in favor of this bill without the amendments, is the fact that the condition by which the wheat farmers of the country have been confronted is a condition produced very largely by the Government of the United States itself. The Senator from Florida referred to the fact that fruit growers and vegetable growers experienced difficulties. No doubt; but that was incidental and unavoidable. In this particular case, however, the evil by which the wheat growers were confronted was in part, at least, due to legislation that was enacted by Congress in undertaking to fix the price of wheat, legislation about the wisdom of which I should have very serious doubts, but at all events the situation so far as it affects the wheat growers was different from that which affected other farmers.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. I propose to strike out the words "where the conditions warrant it, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida offers an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to strike from the modified amendment the words "where the conditions warrant it, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture."

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, with the amendment I have proposed added, the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi would specify one group which would be entitled to benefits under this measure, and then would prescribe a general group to which benefits may be extended, and would not restrict it to the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture to make further investigations and determining that question. In other words, Congress would specifically express itself in favor of two groups which would be entitled to the benefits under this measure, those within the wheat area and those not in the wheat area who are similarly situated; and I think that if we are to deal fairly with all sections of the country it should be so provided.

Of course, we know largely the history of this legislation. It is brought about by those who expect to get aid for the wheat areas and no one else. We have not heard of the Secretary of Agriculture suggesting any assistance to anybody else. As far as we know he does not maintain any particularly sympathetic attitude toward assisting farmers engaged in any other particular class of agriculture. I think Congress should make the bill include benefits to the farmers within the Cotton Belt, which would cover a great many of our Southern States, and in my own State we grew cotton rather extensively prior to the advent of the boll weevil. The industry is reviving considerably at the present time. By the way, we never got any assistance on account of the boll weevil devastating the farms throughout the northern part of my State for a period of years. Our farmers never received any assistance in diversifying their crops, and they needed it, and needed it just as sorely as do the wheat producers in the areas referred to in this bill. We have enjoyed our seasons of prosperity and plenty, but, on the other hand, we have at times suffered great loss.

In regard to the question of the payments to the railroads, which has been raised in the Senate, that is a question which should stand on its own merits. So far as I am concerned, when the legislation providing for the payments to the railroads was pending, I voted against the loans, and I voted against the payments which were made to the railroads. I also voted against giving them a guaranty. So no one can accuse me of any inconsistency in my attitude on that point. The whole trouble with the pending legislation is that it only provides for aid for a limited number of farms in only three or four States. It is the game of taxing the many for the benefit of the few. For every farmer you would aid you propose to tax 50 other farmers, thousands of whom were just as unfortunate as the few the bill would aid.

We are proposing to raise $50,000,000. We are proposing to lend it; and I believe even the friends of this idea do not contend that more than 60 or 75 per cent will ever be returned. I think in a large measure we will have a repetition of the history of the advances made to the arid-land projects in the West. Congress advanced millions and millions of dollars on account of arid-land reclamation; and, of course, every time an appropriation was made we heard that it was to be returned, but no very great percentage of the loans have been returned. Session after session we are called upon to enact legislation to relieve those people from the payments of interest for given periods.

After all, whether this is to be in the nature of a loan or an advance, or whatever it is to be, it means that the American people will have to furnish $50,000,000 for that purpose. That is what it means; and yet we are talking about tax reduction.

Practically every Senator who is going to vote for this has been heralded throughout the country as being in favor of tax reduction. Yet it resolves itself to this, that it is proposed that we tax the American people for the purpose of raising $50,000,000 to assist a group of citizens engaged in agriculture within 3 or 4 States, and I think that the people of the other 44 or 45 States have a little to say about it. We should deal with the people with equal justice, and afford to the farmers located within the other States the same privileges and advances and loans to recuperate from their disastrous misfortunes which we extend to the farmers in those 3 or 4 States.

I have always been sympathetic with agricultural interests. I have done all in my power for them in many respects, and I do not believe that the farmers of the country have a better friend in the United States Senate than myself; but when I am befriending farmers and agriculture I do not restrict my sympathy, my interest in them, and my desire to aid them to those of only 3 or 4 States and bar from the munificent provisions of legislation the agricultural interests of, say, 44 or 45 other States. The measure we are considering embraces just such form of discrimination. I think we should deal equitably and fairly with the agricultural interests generally, and not pick out just a few.

Of course, if these limited number had had a different experience from others, it would be a different question; but that is not true, as far as the misfortunes of the war are concerned. Much is said about the question of wheat prices during the war and what Congress did. I remember quite well that the wheat producers came here seeking a price-fixing law, and when they first came they were willing to accept less than the $2.20, at which figure the price was finally adjusted. I remember at first they said, "Give us a guaranty of $1.75 for wheat." Then the price of wheat advanced a little and they said $2, and finally it resulted in Congress enacting legislation fixing the minimum price of wheat, as I recall, at either $2.20 or $2.26.

Mr. SMITH. Two dollars and twenty cents.

Mr. TRAMMELL. That legislation was enacted at the request and under the inspiration of the agricultural interests of this country who were engaged in wheat production. Then, because wheat happened to go higher later on, they claimed as one of the misfortunes of war that they lost some money on some wheat following the war.

Down in my State we have thousands and thousands of people engaged in different agricultural pursuits who would have been delighted to have Congress fix minimum prices for the products of the farms of my State, instead of them suffering a loss throughout the entire period of the war, and for probably one or two years following the war. Yet, because those wheat farmers had that misfortune, they want the American people to raise $50,000,000 more, which we would take from the taxpayers of the 45 or 46 other States of the Union, and put the money down there to assist them.

I do not think we should discriminate in this way. I would like to help the farmers of the wheat area, but in justice I can not sit idly by and see the people of my State and of the dozens of other States taxed for the purpose of raising money to assist the wheat farmers when the pending bill discriminates against and refuses the same measure of relief to the people of my State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Fess	King	Reed, Mo.
Ball	Fletcher	Ladd	Reed, Pa.
Borah	Frazier	Lodge	Sheppard
Brookhart	George	McCormick	Shields
Bruce	Gerry	McKellar	Simmons
Bursum	Glass	McLean	Smith
Cameron	Gooding	McNary	Smoot
Capper	Hale	Moses	Stanfield
Copeland	Harris	Neely	Stephens
Couzens	Harrison	Norris	Swanson
Curtis	Howell	Oddie	Trammell
Dale	Johnson, Minn.	Pepper	Wadsworth
Dill	Jones, N. Mex.	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
Edge	Jones, Wash.	Pittman	Walsh, Mont.
Edwards	Kendrick	Ralston	Warren
Ferris	Keyes	Ransdell	Willis

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-four Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I would like to have the proposed amendment reported as offered by the Senator from Mississippi, together with the amendment which is offered to it by the Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The READING CLERK. The modified amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi is as follows:

On page 1, line 4, after "United States," strike out down to and including line 3, on page 2, and insert in lieu thereof a comma and the following:

particularly in the wheat areas dependent almost entirely upon a single crop, resulting from the stimulation of production of a single crop during the recent war and aggravated during subsequent years by low yields and high costs of production, but also in other areas dependent almost entirely upon a single crop, where conditions warrant it, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, should be changed through the encouragement of a system of agriculture not dependent for its success upon a single crop, but one which would include the raising of livestock, such as dairy and beef cattle, hogs, sheep, poultry, and the products thereof.

The Senator from Florida proposes to amend the modified amendment by striking out the words "where conditions warrant it, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture."

Mr. REED of Missouri. If the amendment of the Senator from Florida is agreed to, the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi would then read—particularly in the wheat areas dependent almost entirely upon a single crop, resulting from the stimulation of production of a single crop during the recent war, and aggravated during subsequent years by low yields and high costs of production, but also in other areas dependent almost entirely upon a single crop, should be changed through the encouragement of a system of agriculture not dependent for its success upon a single crop, but one which would include the raising of livestock, such as dairy and beef cattle, hogs, sheep, poultry, and the products thereof.

The first remark I want to make is that in that form it would be the most remarkable specimen of the English language which has yet been engraven in the statute books of the United States. I think that sentence is without subject, predicate, or object as I hastily read it through. A clause is taken out of the middle of the amendment, leaving it in that condition.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi is not printed, and I had to read it hurriedly and prepare my amendment hastily. It may be that the whole provision will have to be rewritten. Of course, the Senator understands what I want to eliminate.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes; I do.

Mr. TRAMMELL. If I had a printed copy of the bill with the amendment before me, I could present the amendment to the amendment a little more artistically than I have done.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I am charging neither of the Senators with writing bad English, but when they collaborate together, the one in producing and the other in reducing, they have a residuum here that is a little mixed. I suggest to them that if they are going to offer the amendment in the form in which it is now proposed to be amended by the Senator from Florida it would be well to have a committee on style revise it.

Mr. President, I have watched with some curiosity and a little amusement the course of the debate. It reminds me of Hogarth's The Rake's Progress. It has been going from bad to worse. We start in with a proposition that we are going to aid a small section of the United States where wheat has been largely grown. We are going to do nothing for the wheat farmers outside of that section.

Immediately that point is raised it is seen at once that the wheat grower just outside of that particular territory which seems to be in the minds of the drafters of the bill is entitled to just the same treatment as the wheat grower inside of it. That is so logical that it is proposed to amend the bill to include all the wheat growers. Then it is immediately seen that to limit the measure to the wheat grower who has suffered and to cut out the man who has raised something else and has suffered is also inequitable and that the benefits of the bill should be extended to him. Of course it follows that then we ought to extend the benefits of the bill to anybody else who suffered misfortunes.

Incidentally why not extend the benefits of the bill equally to all the people of the United States by not levying taxes upon them all for the benefit of a certain particular portion of the community? The progress of the bill leads to that. You admit you have no right to help the wheat grower of a particular section and not of the other. You admit that there is no reason why the wheat grower should be singled out. But you now seek to extend the benefit to other products. You admit by these various steps that it is inequitable to distribute the money unless you distribute it equitably. You can not distribute it equitably unless you distribute it to everybody, and you have to take it from everybody to distribute it back to everybody.

The truth about the matter is that this is a piece of unconscionably vicious legislation. We talk here out of one corner of our mouths about economy in Government, about cutting down taxes, and then the first time there is a propaganda brought forward for the expenditure of a huge amount of money we proceed to vote the money out. Then we justify it by the singular logic I have heard advanced here that we have wasted money on other things, so why not waste some more? Having passed this bill, if we do pass it, it is an additional precedent for expending more money in a wasteful way, for we will then say, in addition to all the other waste we have indulged in, "Well, we gave $50,000,000 to the wheat farmer in addition to everything else, and now, therefore, we ought to disregard our duty here and give something to somebody else," and so keep on shoveling out the money at one side of the Treasury and grasping it from the people at the other and letting one wrong justify the doing of another wrong. That is where the logic ends, and it ought not to be heard in this Chamber. The thing to do now is to stop the waste of the people's money and not expend a dollar except where it is necessary to expend it for the proper purposes of the Government. Cut down our taxes, reduce our burdens, and stop attempting to make the United States Government a wet nurse for every unfortunate man there is in the land.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do. I have very little time, but I yield as much as I can.

Mr. BROOKHART. Does the Senator from Missouri think that the money given to the railroads was wasted?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not propose to discuss the merits of this question by measuring up the rights or wrongs of the question against the rights or wrongs of something that has already happened. That is a strange kind of logic. That is a good deal like saying that a man robbed you of your purse yesterday, and, hence, somebody has a right to rob you of your purse to-day. It is a good deal like saying you committed a crime yesterday, and, therefore, it is all right to commit another crime to-day. I can not go into the railroad question and the voting of money in comparison with the one before us. The two questions are not allied. There are many distinctions. I am not responsible for the railroad legislation. I voted against that measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Missouri has expired.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, in order that the minds of Senators may not be confused, I want to draw their attention to the fact that the bill carries two provisions for appropriations. One is for carrying out the purposes of the act in respect to wheat areas, for which there is appropriated $50,000,000, and another is for carrying out the purposes of the act with respect to other areas, for which there is appropriated $25,000,000. When we look at the proposition as originally presented it confines itself solely to wheat areas, and the language of the bill must be changed to conform to those provisions which attach to the appropriations. That is the sole object of the amendment I have offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARRISON. The yeas and nays have been ordered on my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], and vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GREENE], and vote "nay."

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD]. In his absence, I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLER], and vote "nay."

Mr. PHIPPS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PITTMAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] on this amendment. I understand that if he were present he would vote "nay," and, if at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I desire to inquire whether the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. HARRELD] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have a pair with that Senator, and find I am unable to obtain a transfer. I will announce that if I were permitted to vote, I should vote "yea," but as I am not permitted to vote I shall withhold my vote.

I wish to announce, while on my feet, that my colleague, the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], is detained from the Senate by reason of illness. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea." He is paired, however, with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], and vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. On this question I am paired with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. McCORMICK. I have a standing pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. I am unable to transfer my pair, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. ERNST] is paired on the pending amendment with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY].

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 49, as follows:

YEAS—15.

Brookhart	Fletcher	Mayfield	Smith
Bursum	Harris	Ralston	Stephens
Cameron	Harrison	Sheppard	Trammell
Dill	Jones, N. Mex.	Shipstead

NAYS—49.

Adams	Fess	King	Reed, Pa.
Ball	Frazier	Ladd	Shields
Borah	George	Lodge	Shortridge
Bruce	Gerry	McKellar	Smoot
Capper	Glass	McLean	Spencer
Colt	Gooding	McNary	Stanfield
Copeland	Hale	Moses	Swanson
Couzens	Howell	Norris	Wadsworth
Curtis	Johnson, Minn.	Oddie	Walsh, Mass.
Dale	Jones, Wash.	Pepper	Walsh, Mont.
Edge	Kendrick	Ransdell	Watson
Edwards	Keyes	Reed, Mo.	Willis
Ferris

NOT VOTING—32.

Ashurst	Ernst	McCormick	Robinson
Bayard	Fernald	McKinley	Simmons
Brandegee	Greene	Neely	Stanley
Broussard	Harreld	Norbeck	Sterling
Caraway	Heflin	Overman	Underwood
Cummins	Johnson, Calif.	Owen	Warren
Dial	La Follette	Phipps	Weller
Elkins	Lenroot	Pittman	Wheeler

So Mr. HARRISON's amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, of course I appreciate the fact that there are many committees at work, and for that reason Senators can not remain continuously on the floor of the Senate. Consequently they sometimes come in and, asking some other Senator what is the question before the Senate, vote hastily and without due consideration of the pending matter.

I desire, however, to call the attention of the Senate to the meaning of the vote which has just been taken. Here is a bill about which Senators from the wheat section differ as to whether its provisions will apply to only four States or five States or six States. Nearly all of them agree that it does not apply to Kansas, for instance; that it does not apply to Nebraska, for instance; that it would not apply, perhaps, to Idaho; and yet, when I seek to amend and clarify the proposition by stating in an amendment that where farmers of those States are pressed down by such conditions they should have the same opportunity as farmers who live, perhaps, in Minnesota or North Dakota or Montana to get a thousand dollars in order to diversify their farming I see Senators representing those States vote against the amendment that would permit those farmers to come here and secure relief under the provisions of the bill.

I see the Senators from Kansas take that position and vote against the amendment; I see the Senators from Idaho take that position; I see the Senators from Oregon take that position; I see the Senators from Nebraska taking that position, and also Senators from Ohio taking that position, and on down the line, as the RECORD will reveal. Perhaps those Senators will answer to their constituents next November why it was when they had an opportunity by voting for an amendment which if adopted would provide that the farmers of their States who are in distress, perhaps just as much so as the farmers who live in the wheat area, should have this relief, they did not vote for the amendment which would give them the permission to come to the Secretary of Agriculture, make their application for a thousand dollars, and get the money.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho will say that he is prepared to apply the same rule against the farmers of Idaho that he has just applied against the farmers of Mississippi. I am against the bill and all amendments to it, because I do not believe the bill, if it becomes a law, will help the farmers; and it will be used to defeat other bills, such as the McNary bill, which, if enacted, will help the farmers.

Mr. McCORMICK. May I ask if I have heard the first lamentation over the dissolution of the farm bloc?

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator from Illinois would stay here and not be aroused so much by the opposition back in Illinois, he would know what the farm bloc is doing; but I noticed the Senator from Illinois did not vote upon my amendment at all. I do not know what he will say to the farmers of Illinois when he returns to take up his campaign in that State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the first committee amendment.

The READING CLERK. In section 2, on page 3, line 4, before the word "loans," and on the same page, line 11, after the word "opportunity," it is proposed to strike out the parentheses; in line 12, before the word "who," to strike out "farmers" and insert "any farmer"; in the same line, after the word "who," to strike out "have" and insert "has"; in line 14, after the word "upon," to strike out "their" and insert "his"; and on page 4, line 9, after the word "and," to strike out "transportating" and insert "transporting," so as make the section read:

SEC. 2. That from the approval of this act and until June 30, 1926, the Secretary of Agriculture shall be empowered and authorized to make advances or loans to farmers, as defined and limited in this section, in a sum not exceeding $1,000 for the purchase of livestock, including dairy and beef cattle, hogs, sheep, and poultry suitable for the development of a system of agriculture as contemplated by the purposes of this act. The Secretary may purchase such livestock and supply same to the borrower at cost; such advances, loans, or sales shall be made upon such terms and conditions and subject to such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe, including provision for the repayment thereof by amortization or otherwise, but no loan or advance shall be made for a period of more than five years from the date thereof, and all loans shall bear interest at a rate not to exceed 6 per cent per annum and shall be secured by lien on the livestock obtained through the means thereof and upon all the natural increase of such livestock, which said lien shall have priority in payment over all other liens on such livestock and their natural increase.

For the purposes of this act a farmer is defined as a person engaged in and dependent upon agriculture for the support of himself and his family whether in the capacity of owner, tenant, or cropper. Loans and advances shall be made only to such farmers in the wheat areas of the country as are not reasonably able through their own resources or through existing credit facilities to initiate upon their farms a system of diversified farming, but who show their willingness to enter upon such an undertaking and who may be reasonably expected to develop such a system if given aid and opportunity. No loan shall, however, be made to any farmer who has overdue principal and interest or general obligations likely to result in early foreclosure of mortgages or other liens upon his farm lands or necessary farm equipment unless extension shall be granted by his creditors in such form as will give him a reasonable opportunity to work out his future and to get an ultimate benefit from such loan. The application for a loan or advance shall include an agreement by each farmer to use the proceeds thereof for the purchase of livestock as contemplated by the provisions of this act.

The Secretary shall avail himself of such information as can be furnished by the agricultural colleges of the various States and other agricultural authorities and agencies, including also the Federal land bank system and the intermediate credit system, in determining what may be appropriate systems of agriculture for a given area and for information with reference to all related subjects. The Secretary shall arrange with county boards, county commissioners, or other local advisory committees or agencies for initial assistance and subsequent supervision as it may deem proper to promote the efficient accomplishment of the purposes of this act and may do all things necessary in locating, purchasing, and transporting the required suitable livestock. The Secretary may also, in his discretion, utilize agencies existing at State agricultural colleges, including cooperative agricultural extension forces, to assist him in carrying out the provisions of this act and may reimburse such colleges for the necessary expenses incurred at the request of the Secretary: Provided, That regular employees of agricultural colleges or cooperative extension workers shall not be authorized to pass upon applications for loans, nor shall they be utilized in other than a general advisory capacity in the purchase of livestock: Provided further, That there shall be no preference for or discrimination against members of any farm organization in carrying out the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, on page 4, after line 21, to strike out "That for carrying out the purposes of this act, it is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $50,000,000, of which not more than $20,000,000 shall become available during the present fiscal year, not more than $20,000,000 during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and not more than $10,000,000 during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1926, but any portion so authorized to be appropriated and remain available for the ensuing fiscal year. When made available said amounts may be paid to the Secretary from time to time as he may certify its requirements to the Secretary of the Treasury of payments from borrowers whether of principal or interest made during the period in which the Secretary exercises his loaning powes are to be credited by the Treasury to the Secretary and may be expended by the Secretary within the purposes of this act," and insert:

That for carrying out the purposes of this act in respect of wheat areas there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000,000, of which $20,000,000 shall be available during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, $20,000,000 during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and $10,000,000 during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1926, but any amount so appropriated for and not expended during any such fiscal year shall remain available for expenditure until June 30, 1926.

For carrying out the purposes of this act in respect of other areas, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $25,000,000, of which $10,000,000 shall be available during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and $15,000,000 during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, but any amount so appropriated for and not expended during any such fiscal year shall remain available for expenditure until June 30, 1926.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I inquire what the question is, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the committee amendment to strike out and insert.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Have the words proposed to be substituted been read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary has just completed reading the proposed substitute.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I call attention to the fact that this appropriation runs for two years in the future. Nobody can tell anything about what the conditions will be then; $20,000,000 can be expended up to June of this year, $20,000,000 next year, and $10,000,000 the year after that.

If this is an emergency, if some people in that country are suffering, if we are giving this out to afford temporary relief, it seems to me utterly indefensible to make provision for the appropriation of money to be expended two years from this date. If these people are suffering, they are suffering now. If they need help, they need it this year; and we could very well afford, even if we were going to give them help for this year, if that was concluded to be wise, to leave to the next Congress the appropriations for succeeding years.

It seems to me there is absolutely no defense whatever that can be made of a proposition to appropriate now money to be expended three years from now, when in the meantime Congress will be in session; so I move to strike out of the committee amendment all after the figures "1924," in line 16, all of the remainder of the paragraph down to and including line 21.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri offers an amendment to the committee amendment, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 5, commencing on line 16, it is proposed to strike out:

Twenty million dollars during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and $10,000,000 during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1926, but any amount so appropriated for and not expended during any such fiscal year shall remain available for expenditure until June 30, 1926.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri to the committee amendment.

Mr. REED of Missouri. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the previous vote as to my pair, I vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of my pair as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement of my pair and its transfer as on the previous ballot, I vote "nay."

Mr. SIMMONS (when Mr. OVERMAN'S name was called). I make the same announcement that I have heretofore made with reference to my colleague [Mr. OVERMAN].

Mr. PHIPPS (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement made on the previous vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). Announcing the same pair and transfer as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement of my pair, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McCORMICK. Making the same announcement as before, I withhold my vote.

Mr. PITTMAN. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE]. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. ERNST] has a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY].

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 38, as follows:

YEAS—22.

Adams	Ferris	McKellar	Stephens
Borah	Fletcher	Reed, Mo.	Swanson
Bruce	George	Reed, Pa.	Trammell

So the amendment of Mr. REED of Missouri to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, earlier in the consideration of the bill I sent to the desk two necessary amendments. The first one is, on line 13, page 5, after the word "hereby," to insert "authorized to be," so that it will be authorized to be appropriated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming offers an amendment to the committee amendment, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The READING CLERK. On page 5, line 13, before the word "appropriated," it is proposed to insert the words "authorized to be."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, what does this amendment propose to do—to make an authorization instead of making an appropriation?

Mr. WARREN. The bill as it was originally drawn authorized the appropriation of the money, as such bills always are drawn and always should be drawn. If the Senator will look on page 4, line 23, he will see the words "is hereby authorized to be appropriated."

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. We are now legislating, and, of course, the Committee on Appropriations appropriates under these bills. It should read, "is hereby authorized to be appropriated," with an appropriation to follow.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD] whether he agrees to that amendment? That was a question which came up in the committee, and the committee recommended an appropriation instead of an authorization. I am just wondering if the Senator agrees to it.

Mr. LADD. Mr. President, I should not object to it in this particular place, but I am going to suggest that we vote against the committee amendment. The committee amendment was inserted because the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] was very anxious to have the $25,000,000 included. I did not want to see the bill defeated in the committee and I consented to put it in; but I am convinced now that it is unwise, and I suggest that we vote in this case against the committee amendment and carry it back to the language of the original bill.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, as I understand the Senator, he wishes to strike out all of this language in italics and reinstate the former language?

Mr. LADD. I do.

Mr. WARREN. That would take out the language that I have asked to amend; and I dare say that to amend it as I have proposed would still leave it open to striking out, as the Senator has suggested.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I move that this bill be recommitted to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi moves that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and on that motion he asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] to the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] and vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of the transfer of my pair as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement of my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. PHIPPS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of my pair as before, I withhold my vote.

Mr. PITTMAN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before regarding my pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD], but I am advised that if he were here he would vote as I intend to vote. Therefore I feel free to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before as to my pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before concerning the transfer of my pair, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. ERNST] is paired with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY].

Mr. McCORMICK. Making the same announcement as before, I withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 33, as follows:

YEAS—27.

Ball	Fletcher	McKellar	Spencer
Borah	George	Moses	Stephens
Bruce	Gerry	Pepper	Swanson
Couzens	Gooding	Reed, Mo.	Trammell

So the Senate refused to recommit the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I offer the same amendment, to be inserted on line 23, page 5.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 5, line 23, before the word "appropriated," insert the words "authorized to be."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question first is on the amendment of the committee to strike out section 3 and insert the italics to line 5, page 6, as amended.

Mr. NORRIS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LADD. Mr. President, I suggest that this committee amendment be not approved.

Mr. FLETCHER. We can not hear the Senator.

Mr. LADD. I suggest that those who are in favor of the bill vote against the committee amendment, and that would carry it back to its original form.

Mr. HARRISON. As I understand it, this latter proposition already has been adopted. Both the appropriations have been changed to authorizations. I understand the amendments offered by the Senator from Wyoming have been adopted, and that the Senator from New Mexico has offered an amendment upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the Senator from Mississippi is mistaken. The Senate has not passed upon the committee amendment as amended by the amendments offered by the Senator from Wyoming. That question is now being submitted to the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from North Dakota is not seeking to knock out this $25,000,000 for the areas other than the wheat area, is he?

Mr. LADD. I am seeking to go back to the section of the bill as originally introduced.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I may be guilty of making an impertinent inquiry, but do I understand now, and is the Senate to understand, that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is requesting the Senate to reject a committee amendment?

Mr. LADD. That is what I suggested, that the committee amendment be rejected, and that will carry it back to the lines which are crossed out.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I assume, then, the Senator speaks for the committee?

Mr. LADD. I do not know that we have had a committee meeting, but I know that this is the consensus of many of the committee; not all.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. HARRISON. Carrying out that suggestion, then, the Senate would vote down everything on page 5, including lines 12 to 25, and on page 6 down to and including line 5, would it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the way the Chair understands it. The committee has stricken out section 3 and proposes a substitution, which goes down to section 4, and now the question is on adopting the committee amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. I merely desire to say that of course many Senators realizing that they made a mistake before when they voted to give to these wheat areas opportunities that they were not willing to give to the farmers in their own section they have a right now to vote to give their farmers an opportunity to get something. Of course, in voting to strike this provision down you are voting against your own farmers. I merely suggest that.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I am a little curious to know just what kind of proceedings we are inaugurating. The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry meet and amend the bill, and report a bill as the action of the committee. In that way it gets before the Senate. Then we are told by one of the members of that committee that the reason they permitted one particular amendment in the committee was in order to get the bill reported, that there were some people in the committee who would not vote for the bill without the amendment, and consequently, not being able to report the bill without the votes of those members, they inserted an amendment which would satisfy those gentlemen, and got them to vote for the report of the committee by putting in the amendment.

Having gotten the bill before the Senate in that way, they now "double cross" their associates, if I may use the expression in this dignified body, and say that they are going now to ask that the thing they did in order to get a report shall be undone in the Senate. Is that to be the new style of ethics we are to have here? It seems to me that if this bill got here by any such means as that it ought to go back to the committee, and we ought to find out what the committee means.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I am not so much interested in how the bill got here as I would like to know how one is to vote who is against the bill. I am rather dazed on this subject.

Mr. REED of Missouri. It seems to be a question of "pork." There is one group of gentlemen who want $50,000,000 for their section and do not want anybody else to have anything. There is another group of gentlemen who could not vote for that sort of a measure unless they could solace their conscience—and their constituency—by having a provision that their constituency should get something also. Of course the question as to the fairness of the division does not appear to enter into it. About four States are to get $50,000,000, and about 44 States are to get $25,000,000. Nevertheless, the committee arranged to distribute that $25,000,000 to the 44 States in order to get some help from some of the Representatives of those 44 States, who were willing to take the rind while the other gentlemen took the bacon.

Then we have the astonishing statement that that sort of a game was played to get the bill into the Senate. In the 12 years I have been in the Senate I never before heard such a statement made. What a pitiful thing it is to find men who, instead of passing upon these questions upon their merits, are passing upon them upon the basis of how much they are to get in their part of the country, and what a defenseless bill you have here that is put forward with the cry that there is an immediate emergency, that it is almost a case of charity to help people over a present distress, and you propose to expend some fifty or sixty million dollars, not this year, but next year and the following year. If we pursue this sort of policy we can bankrupt this Government, we can keep adding to the burden of taxation. If we are to take care of this condition which happens to exist in the Northwest, then why not take care of everybody in this country who has suffered by reason of the war? Why not take care of everybody who suffered by reason of a drouth? Why not take care of everybody who has made an improvident investment? If any man in the Northwest or elsewhere ought to have been raising cattle when he was only raising wheat that was his mistake. The people in my State who have raised wheat and who have raised all other farm products are suffering. The farmers are not starving, but they have suffered great losses.

It is proposed to tax the people of my section of the country who did have diversified farming for the benefit of those who saw fit to put their eggs all in one basket. Then it is proposed to tax the people all over the United States who are engaged in enterprises which they have made successful or partially successful, or in which they have failed, for the benefit of a few people in the United States. That is paternalism run mad. It will not even carry you on in the election. If the Government is to do things of this kind, there is no end and no limit. The Government ought to constitute itself a guardian ad litem for every misadventure there is in the United States. When we get down to the final argument on this question we always go back to the claim that we did something of a bad character in the past. If we did, it is time to stop it right now.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, being a member of the committee who voted against the amendment in the committee, and representing here a constituency that will not get a dollar under the provisions of the bill, I think I can consistently come to the defense of those who believe that the amendment of the committee ought to be defeated. The bill was framed on a certain condition that, in my judgment and in the judgment of the committee, was fully established before the committee, to meet a certain condition which I fully explained once before and which I am not going to explain now. Then came the committee amendment on which we are now about to vote. It does not comply with the theory of the bill at all. It proposes an appropriation of $25,000,000 in addition and in no sense carries out the theory of the bill.

I am not criticizing any Senator who believes that our theory is wrong. As I said, I was against it in the committee. We had hearings, and those who appeared before the committee convinced me and convinced the committee. The amendment was not put on until after long deliberation by the committee in executive session on other amendments that have already been agreed to. It was offered then when there was nothing else left at the succeeding day, after we had worked all day on the bill and came together again, and it was voted in without five minutes of consideration. A majority of the committee voting for it, it was put in and of course became a committee amendment. I do not know of anything, and there was nothing said, at least in the committee, to show that anyone voted for the amendment because he thought it would help to pass the bill when it got into the Senate. Whether any member of the committee had such an idea I have no knowledge and say nothing in regard to it. The facts are that it went in and became a committee amendment.

I announced at the beginning that if the amendment, together with other amendments and one still to be offered, should be agreed to, they were completely at variance with the theory that was had in drafting the bill and in bringing it before the Senate. Therefore, it seems to me that if we want to carry out the provisions of the bill we ought to defeat the amendment.

I ought to add that the defeating of the amendment, even if the bill is passed, will save $25,000,000 to the Treasury of the United States. It will make the bill appropriate $50,000,000 instead of $75,000,000. The $25,000,000, as the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has said, would apply to the entire country. Everybody knows that that would not amount to anything, and that it would take a good many times $25,000,000 if we are going to help everybody who has lost money in agriculture by reason of the war. I can not see any reason for it unless we discard entirely the theory of those who have drafted the bill, and arrange a bill to pay money to everybody who has lost money in agriculture. That was not the idea of those who favored the bill. It seems to me, therefore, that the committee amendment ought to be defeated.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think there is some misunderstanding about the vote which is about to be taken. The vote is to be taken on the committee amendment. Those who desire to retain the language in the bill will vote "yea," and those who desire to strike it out will vote "nay." Am I not correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendment strikes out a part of the original text of the bill and substitutes other language. A vote "yea" will strike out and insert. A vote "nay" will retain the original language of the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I say——

Mr. NORRIS. I am perfectly willing to ask unanimous consent for the Senator to talk again on the amendment. He has already spoken once.

Mr. HARRISON. I have not spoken on the pending amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has not?

Mr. HARRISON. No. I talked on the amendment which I offered and which was defeated, and I talked 10 minutes on the bill, but I have not talked on the pending amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi talked on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming to the amendment, and is entitled to speak on the pending amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not want a false impression to get out with reference to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD]. In the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry the Senator from North Dakota was opposed to the $25,000,000 amendment, the same as the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. The majority of the committee, however, were in favor of it. May I say that the overwhelming majority of the committee were in favor of the legislation. I do not think that the amendment being incorporated in the bill influenced or helped to get the bill out of the committee. It would have been reported out of the committee whether the amendment increasing the amount $25,000,000 had been adopted or not. I pointed out to the committee, when I presented the amendment in the committee, that there were certain people suffering in my section of the country, for instance, not because of an overproduction of crops but because of the ravages of the boll weevil that left the farmers, who in previous years had raised 42 bales of cotton on their farms, with only 2 bales of cotton last year, and that they were one-crop farmers, and they have the same right to relief as have the wheat farmers in the wheat section of the country where conditions warrant it, whether it was in the Northwest or in New England or anywhere else in the country. That was the sole object in presenting my amendment.

I merely rose to say that the Senator from North Dakota has acted in good faith throughout. He opposed the amendment in the committee and he has opposed it here. I never expected him to be in favor of the amendment. The amendment had no influence at all in getting the bill reported to the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish merely to state that the Senator from Mississippi has stated the facts accurately as I understand them.

Mr. HARRISON. May I say further that the amendment which I offered this morning was to clarify the language of the bill. The amendment I offered would have been a necessary amendment had the $25,000,000 provision, which is now sought to be stricken from the bill, been incorporated originally in the bill. When my amendment was defeated, which it was overwhelmingly, I realized that it carried with it the defeat of the $25,000,000 provision that is to be voted on now, because if the $25,000,000 provision should be retained in the bill we must go back and incorporate in the bill my amendment that was voted on and defeated earlier in the day.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator again?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator will remember that when he offered his amendment I suggested that we should vote on the committee amendment first.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I did that because I thought if this language stayed in the bill, then the other amendments were necessary. I agree with the Senator that if the amendment stays in we ought to adopt the other amendment which the Senator has offered, and which was defeated.

Mr. HARRISON. Absolutely.

Mr. COPELAND. I would like to ask the Senator from Mississippi if he has overlooked the title of the bill, which is as follows:

A bill to promote a permanent system of self-supporting agriculture in regions adversely affected by the stimulation of wheat production during the war, etc.

I take it that is to give relief in a territory where they are now without financial credit and can not get it.

Mr. HARRISON. That was the object of the bill, but there are certain sections of the country that are in a condition just as deplorable as the wheat areas, and those persons should have the same opportunities under the bill to get the money as these other people.

Mr. COPELAND. I agree perfectly with the Senator from Mississippi, but there should be another bill for that purpose. This bill was for the specific purpose of relieving the conditions in the wheat-growing section of the country.

Mr. GLASS. Does not the Senator from New York think that if we get many more bills of this nature here we would have to present a bill to increase rather than decrease taxes?

Mr. COPELAND. Oh, undoubtedly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the committee amendment, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. Those in favor of the adoption of the committee amendment will vote "yea" and those opposed to the adoption of the committee amendment will vote "nay." The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico (when his name was called). Making the same announcement regarding my pair as upon the previous vote, I transfer that pair to the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] and vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement of my pair as previously made, I vote "nay."

Mr. PHIPPS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before in reference to my pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. PITTMAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE]. I understand if present he would vote "nay." If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea." In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before in relation to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], I vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before relative to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before as to my pair, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

The result was announced—yeas 12, nays 52, as follows:

YEAS—12.

So the committee amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next committee amendment.

The next committee amendment was, on page 6, after line 5, to insert a new section as follows:

SEC. 4. The Secretary is authorized to provide by regulation or otherwise for the repayment or collection of all amounts, including interest, in respect of any sale, advance, or loan made under the provisions of this act. There is hereby established in the Treasury a fund to be known as the "livestock loan fund," and all such amounts repaid or collected shall be covered into such fund, and are reserved, set aside, and appropriated, to be available until June 30, 1926, for the use of the Secretary in accordance with the provisions of this act. After June 30, 1926, all amounts remaining in such fund, and all amounts, including interest, repaid or collected in respect of any such sale, advance, or loan, shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, there is a very considerable portion of the pending bill which, to my mind, has little, if any, significance whatever. If I may have the attention of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD], I desire to say that I refer to the portion of section 2 commencing in line 22, on page 2, down to and including line 21, on the next page.

Mr. LADD. I will be glad to hear the suggestions of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The portion of the bill to which I refer reads as follows:

The Secretary shall avail himself of such information as can be furnished by the agricultural colleges of the various States and other agricultural authorities and agencies—

Of course the Secretary of Agriculture could get information from those sources and from any other sources; but the bill continues—including also the Federal land bank system and the intermediate credit system, in determining what may be appropriate systems of agriculture for a given area and for information with reference to all related subjects.

That is merely in the nature of an admonition or suggestion; it is not legislation at all.

The Secretary shall arrange with county boards, county commissioners, or other local advisory committees or agencies for initial assistance and subsequent supervision as it may deem proper to promote the efficient accomplishment of the purposes of this act—

Of course, being given power to carry out the act, he is given power to make use of such agencies as may be available—and may do all things necessary in locating, purchasing, and transporting the required suitable livestock. The Secretary may also, in his discretion—

That is, he may or may not, as he sees fit—utilize agencies existing at State agricultural colleges, including cooperative agricultural extension forces—

That is, he may use them or not, as he sees proper—to assist him in carrying out the provisions of this act and may reimburse such colleges for the necessary expenses incurred at the request of the Secretary: Provided, That regular employees of agricultural colleges or cooperative extension workers shall not be authorized to pass upon applications for loans, nor shall they be utilized in other than a general advisory capacity in the purchase of livestock: Provided further, That there shall be no preference for or discrimination against members of any farm organization in carrying out the provisions of this act.

Mr. President, I offer as a substitute for the language which I have read a few lines which it seems to me will accomplish the purpose and are in the nature of legislation. This bill authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to make certain loans. It, therefore, authorizes him to establish any independent machinery that he may care to set up. We ought to exercise every possible economy in the distribution of this fund, in making every dollar of it available for the purposes for which the legislation is intended and is so much needed, as has been so succinctly and forcefully set forth repeatedly upon this floor. There is an existing governmental agency altogether appropriate to the purpose of making these loans under the direction of the Secretary; that is, the agricultural credit system. Why not simply say that the Secretary shall avail himself of the agricultural credit system for the purpose of making these loans? I express that idea in the following:

The Secretary in executing the functions vested in him by this act shall, so far as practicable, utilize the Federal intermediate credit bank system, and the Federal Farm Loan Board and the directors and officers of the Federal intermediate credit banks shall cooperate with the Secretary for such purpose.

The Senator from North Dakota will remember that all of the loans made in that section of the country, I think, have been made in this way through the farm loan banks. So why not utilize those existing agencies whose business it is to make loans to the farmers, either the Federal Farm Loan Board or other agencies. The bill says the Secretary may, in his discretion, make use of them just as he sees fit, and undoubtedly he will employ them; but it will be observed that the bill does not require him to make use of them, and neither does it specify the manner in which he is to make use of them. I would eliminate all of that language, because it really means nothing, and not empower the Secretary of Agriculture to set up another piece of expensive machinery for the purpose of making these loans.

Mr. LADD. The purpose was to have the work done by the Secretary of Agriculture directly with the farmers themselves, as was done in the seed loans, by the utilization of the county agents, the experiment station men, and the county commissioners, who might volunteer, where it was deemed necessary, without going through the banks at all, thus saving any unnecessary expense.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Secretary, of course, may do that, but that would involve the creation of a new organization, and where would the power rest? Of course the Secretary can not personally make the loans.

Mr. LADD. Neither did he make the loans personally in the several States of North and South Dakota, Montana, Minnesota, and Idaho in the case of the seed-wheat loans.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is correct.

Mr. LADD. He utilized the same agencies we provide for here, except that an additional agency, the county commissioners, is provided for, but he did not utilize the banks except such banks as he wanted to make deposits in.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But the difficulty about that is that the boards of county commissioners and farm bureau agencies and that kind of thing are not skilled in the making of loans. We ought to safeguard this measure by putting it in the hands of some one whose business it is to weigh securities. The Federal farm banks, it seems to me, are the appropriate agencies through which to get the recommendations. Of course, there is no difficulty about using the agricultural extension agencies and the boards of county commissioners and the farm bureaus and all of those instrumentalities for the purpose of gathering information as to the responsibility of borrowers or persons who desire to borrow, or getting information concerning the particular kind of agricultural activity that is suited to a particular place. All that information can be secured; but we must lodge the power to make the loans somewhere. Now, this bill, of course, lodges it with the Secretary of Agriculture, and my amendment will not change that, but the question is what agencies in the field are going to recommend these loans?

Mr. LADD. The agencies which the Secretary of Agriculture employs for that purpose.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly.

Mr. LADD. If it is left to the farm loan banks, the Federal land banks, or the intermediate credit banks, there is only one in an entire district, and it will be from six months to a year behind before deciding whether or not a farmer is entitled to receive money.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let me remark to the Senator that so far as that is concerned it will not delay the procedure at all, because the Secretary of Agriculture has to get the information in just exactly the same way that the institutions named get the information; through their local representatives, whomsoever they shall designate for that purpose.

Now, what I am endeavoring to avoid, let me say to the Senator—and, of course, I want to give the bill my support—is the utilization of a considerable portion of this fund for the purpose of supporting an independent piece of machinery which the Secretary of Agriculture may set up in the various States when we already have governmental machinery for making these loans.

Mr. LADD. I do not believe that the cost was any greater or even as great in handling the loans for seed wheat as it would have been if they had gone through these banks and the banks had to send their agents out or had employed a large corps of agents to go out and do the same thing. Here we have the agents in the field. County agents are in nearly every county in the State of North Dakota, for example.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Montana has expired. The Chair suggests that he send his amendment to the desk so that the Secretary may read it.

The READING CLERK. The Senator from Montana proposes to strike out, on page 3, lines 22, 23, 24, and 25, and all of page 4 down to section 3, on line 21, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

The Secretary, in executing the functions vested in him by this act, shall, so far as practicable, utilize the Federal intermediate credit bank system; and the Federal Farm Loan Board and the directors and officers of the Federal intermediate credit banks shall cooperate with the Secretary for such purpose.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, what difference does it make whether this fund is to be administered through a regular banking channel, accustomed to make loans and accustomed to weigh securities, or administered through the Secretary of Agriculture?

Some days ago, when the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] was talking, I asked the direct question if it was intended to make this a commercial transaction between the Government and the farmers, and he said very frankly that it was not. He did argue that the Government would not necessarily lose a great deal of this money, but he did not deny nor did he hesitate to affirm that the Government would lose a portion of the money, and that the transaction was not intended to be a commercial transaction between the Government and the borrowers. It might be just as appropriate not only to eliminate the language in the bill but to reject the amendment suggested by the Senator from Montana and substitute some political committee. If it is not to be a commercial transaction between the Government and the men who are to receive the money and to promise solemnly to repay it, then it must be some other kind of transaction that is proposed here in this utterly defenseless legislation.

All the time it has been insisted that there did apply to these four Northwestern States some peculiar reason that did not apply to any other section of the country, and all the time it has been pointed out that there was just as much a one-crop-slavery system in the South as there was in the Northwest, and all the time it has been pointed out that the conditions were just as bad in the South as they were in the Northwest. Indeed, the very candid and frank and most admirable Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] admitted that the conditions were as bad, but he insisted that the conditions were due to different reasons.

We are told here that we ought to vote this aid when it is not even pretended that it is a business transaction nor yet a sound commercial transaction, for what reason? Because the wheat farmers of the Northwest, perchance through the action of the Congress or through the misapprehension of the wheat farmers in interpreting that action, greatly increased their acreage in wheat. What has come upon the farmers of the South? The boll weevil, perhaps an act of Providence; but there is very little difference between suffering from an act of Providence and suffering upon the part of a section resulting from misinterpreting the action of the Congress with respect to an increase of acreage because perchance it was assumed that the war would go on and that there would be a need for wheat production. But, Mr. President, let me say now that just the same appeal was made to the South and to the East and to the Central West that was made to these four States in the Northwest, and that appeal was to produce food crops and to produce food crops without stint; and the farmers all over America reorganized their farming and tried to produce food crops.

Mr. President, let us face the situation frankly, and let us say that there is no need to select the agricultural colleges to afford a means of administering your fund, because it is openly confessed that it is not a commercial, it is not a business, it is not a defensible piece of legislation; and let us reject, Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, any suggestion that it be administered through a business instrumentality already existing under this Government, because what is here proposed is not a business proposition at all. It is a pure gift out of the pockets of the taxpayers of 48 States into the pockets of a single class of the taxpayers of 4 States in the Northwest. That is all it is. It is not individualism, it is not socialism; it is not one-thousandth time as defensible as a socialistic scheme and as a socialistic state. It is a proposal to subsidize individuals, not named in the bill it is true, but a proposal nevertheless to subsidize individuals, and the very identity of the individuals is located by reason of the fact that they must be residents of those four States in the Northwest.

Mr. President, I come from an agricultural State. I have all of my personal investments in agriculture. I know what the condition of the farmer has been and is, but I know that the American farmer never will be assisted back to his feet by any proposal that simply piles up upon the whole body of the people an enormous burden of taxation, a continual and mounting burden of taxation; and the farmer never will be put back upon his feet by these paternalistic schemes of government. Disguise them as you may, find for them an excuse in previous mistakes of the Congress, if you please, and you have laid the foundation for a communism in this country that is destructive of our Government and of every principle that has made the American farmer the one independent and conservative and outstanding element in our history.

Mr. President, the whole legislation is nothing but a faulty and cheap bid for something that does not come through business channels. It is not good even as an election measure. I dare say that any man who will go into the States of Senators who vote for this measure and submit it to the people fairly and squarely will find that it is not even good as a campaign measure.

I have heard it intimated and suggested in the public press that the President of the United States is himself favorable to this legislation. I do not believe it and I will not believe it until he has affixed his signature to a piece of legislation a proponent of which, the admirable and candid Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], admits is to be an uncommercial and therefore an unbusinesslike transaction, justified upon the assumption that in previous years the Congress itself has laid the foundation for this sort of indefensible socialistic legislation by its own mistakes.

Mr. President, ordinarily I should have said nothing; but when it is proposed to use the established agencies of Government, that can do American agriculture some service, to administer a fund which is not supposed in any sense to be a fund to be administered as a sound commercial proposition, then I think I have the right to voice my sentiments here. Senators from the South, at least, will find when they go back to face the hard-pressed taxpayers of the South that they have added nothing to themselves politically. I dislike to use the term "political," but if it is not commercial, if it not businesslike, if every Senator knows that it means a loss to this Government, then what else is it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Georgia has expired.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I am in favor of the purpose of this measure, but I also believe that when the Government steps in to aid any industry it should do so upon purely business principles; that it should adopt methods whereby it will be assured of the return of all, or at least the greater part, of every dollar invested.

It is proposed in this measure to afford assistance—funds, livestock, in fact—to those who may not be entitled to credit according to the usual rules of business. The Government can no more afford to loan to a man who has no credit than an individual can afford to loan to a man who has no credit; but when it comes to the sale of merchandise—yes, livestock—there is a method that can be adopted that is approved by business experience. That method is utilized all over this country to furnish merchandise to individuals who have no credit in the commercial sense, and that method is the contract installment plan.

The principle involved is this: A sale is made, but the title to the property does not pass until the property is paid for. That is the method that is adopted by every furniture installment house, by every installment house doing business in other lines, dealing with people with no commercial credit.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. HOWELL. I do.

Mr. BRUCE. May I suggest to the Senator one question? If no title would pass, how would the farmer dispose of the increase of the cattle? Or how would he be able to put the possession of the livestock to any useful purpose of any description?

Mr. HOWELL. I will come to that shortly. As I have stated, there is a method that will enable a person to sell to one without commercial credit and yet be assured of a return of his property, or of collecting the amount charged for that property.

It is extraordinary what a small loss is entailed in doing this character of business. I happen to be familiar with this kind of business, as I managed for several years the publicly owned gas plant in Omaha, and one of our activities was the conduct of an appliance store, which, during the past three and a half years, has sold something less than $1,000,000 worth of merchandise, and our average losses were less than a quarter of 1 per cent upon the sales, and not over 10 per cent was required to be paid down at the time of purchase. We simply investigated to determine that the person was an upright individual, and, irrespective of his means, we sold him the merchandise, and we collected the money. Experience in various lines of business has taught that this can be done, and be done successfully, and if Congress proposes to aid the farmers in question it ought to adopt business methods well recognized as sound for such an emergency.

As a consequence, I have prepared a substitute for this bill, which I will offer later, which provides how the Secretary of Agriculture can proceed, and I will read just one clause of it. It provides that he shall be authorized to purchase livestock, including dairy and beef cattle, hogs, and sheep, suitable for the development of a system of agriculture as contemplated for the purposes of this act, and to sell the same to farmers upon the contract installment plan, all deferred payments to bear interest at not to exceed 6 per cent per annum.

No contract shall run for more than five years or be for more than $1,000, and the title to the livestock, including the natural increase thereof, shall remain in the United States until paid for. Such contract shall be in the form prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture. That answers the question of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I do not think it answers my question at all. Suppose——

Mr. HOWELL. I was about to explain.

Mr. BRUCE. Very well.

Mr. HOWELL. The contract may be made to provide that if it is wise to sell a portion of the stock to be slaughtered or of the increase for other purposes application may be made therefor and the transaction carried out upon the payment of a certain proportion of the whole of the return to the Government at that time, as deemed proper. In other words, this contract can be made to cover every contingency of that character. Moreover, the Government will be in a position in case of failure on the part of the purchaser to properly take care of his livestock or for other reason to take possession of it and to sell it as seen fit. In other words, the Government will be in a position to protect itself under any conditions.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator if these questions are not mere matters of administration rather than of principle involved in the bill, and would it not be better to amend the bill and let the bill be handled in that way than to defeat the bill?

Mr. HOWELL. I have a substitute measure here which covers this feature, and which also includes all the provisions of the bill which have been thus far approved and adopted by the Senate. The only change is that it provides for the contract installment sales plan instead of the loan plan as provided in the pending measure; that is, transferring the property, the title passing to the purchaser, and the Government having a lien for the money advanced.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Nebraska one question. Of course, under the provisions of this bill the Government could lend a farmer money for the purpose of buying chickens.

Mr. HOWELL. Just a moment. May I say that in my substitute I have cut out poultry.

Mr. BRUCE. The Senator has cut out poultry?

Mr. HOWELL. I have.

Mr. BRUCE. That is a confession of weakness in the bill in the beginning, of course.

Mr. HOWELL. So far as I am concerned, I do not think poultry should be included in the bill.

Mr. BRUCE. Of course, generally, when money is loaned on livestock, or on tangible property of any kind, the security to the man who makes the loan consists in the fact that he retains possession of the pledge. Under this bill, of course, the Government would not have possession of the pledge at all. The Senator says he has eliminated chickens. I commend the Senator for the very fine discretion he has exhibited in that respect, at least, because I could not conceive of anything that would be more hopelessly precarious than a lien reserved on a rooster or a hen, when we reflect, in the first place, that they are very much in the habit of going about at their own sweet will, and, as I pointed out to the Senator the other day, they are subject to the depredations of hawks and minks and weasels——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. BRUCE. I suppose I will have to die with it.

Mr. HOWELL. I offer the amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill, and I ask that it may be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I understand that final action on the bill can not be had this evening, so I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and the Senate (at 5 o'clock p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, March 12, 1924, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 11, 1924.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, Thou dost manifest Thyself toward us in teacher, friend, and father. We ask Thee, blessed Lord, to give us strength to rise above human nature so that languor shall not be in our hearts, weariness on our brows, and weakness in our lives. Forgive our sinful thoughts and faltering steps, and make our sense of right more acute and our power of resistance more courageous. The Teacher of Nazareth is the way of God to us; oh, may He be the way of us to God. Help us to dedicate our powers to Thee and to Thine. Let us feel the working of a noble discontent that cries for a better day, a better country, and a better world. Bless us with souls tempered with fire, fervent, heroic, and friends of man. Through Christ. Amen.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills and Senate concurrent resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 1703. An act for the relief of J. G. Seupelt;

S. 2315. An act to amend an act entitled, "An act for the division of the lands and funds of the Osage Indians in Oklahoma, and for other purposes," approved June 28, 1906, and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto;

S. 2169. An act to amend in certain particulars the national defense act of June 3, 1916, as amended, and for other purposes;

S. 2392. An act authorizing an appropriation to indemnify damages caused by the search for the body of Admiral John Paul Jones;

S. 2198. An act to grant the consent of Congress to the Southern Railway Co. to maintain a bridge across the Tennessee River at Knoxville, in the county of Knox, State of Tennessee;

S. 2332. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State of South Dakota for the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between Hughes County and Stanley County, S. Dak.

Senate Concurrent Resolution 5.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there shall be compiled, printed with illustrations, and bound, as may be directed by the Joint Committee on Printing, 25,000 copies of the oration delivered by the Hon. Charles Evans Hughes in the House of Representatives during the exercises held in memory of the late President Warren G. Harding on February 27, 1924, including all the proceedings and the program of exercises, of which 8,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 17,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 2818. An act to grant the consent of Congress to construct, maintain, and operate a dam and spillway across the Waccamaw River in North Carolina;

H. R. 3845. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Little Calumet River at Riverdale, Ill.;

H. R. 4120. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Greater Wenatchee Irrigation District to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Columbia River;

H. R. 4182. An act authorizing the city of Ludington, Mason County, Mich., to construct a bridge across an arm of Pere Marquette Lake;

H. R. 4187. An act to legalize a bridge across the St. Louis River in Carlton County, State of Minnesota;

H. R. 4984. An act to authorize the Clay County bridge district, in the State of Arkansas, to construct a bridge over Current River;

H. R. 4457. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in any claims which the Cherokee Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 6901. An act to amend section 252 of the revenue act of 1921 in respect of credits and refunds.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills and Senate concurrent resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 2392. An act authorizing an appropriation to indemnify damages caused by the search for the body of Admiral John Paul Jones; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

S. 1703. An act for the relief of J. G. Seupelt; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 2169. An act to amend in certain particulars the national defense act of June 3, 1916, as amended, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 2315. An act to amend an act entitled "An act for the division of the lands and funds of the Osage Indians in Oklahoma, and for other purposes," approved June 28, 1906, and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 2332. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State of South Dakota for the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between Hughes County and Stanley County, S. Dak.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Senate Concurrent Resolution 5.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there shall be compiled, printed with illustrations, and bound, as may be directed by the Joint Committee on Printing, 25,000 copies of the oration delivered by the Hon. Charles Evans Hughes in the House of Representatives during the exercises held in memory of the late President Warren G. Harding on February 27, 1924, including all the proceedings and the program of exercises, of which 8,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 17,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

To the Committee on Printing.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill and a joint resolution of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 6901. An act to amend section 252 of the revenue act of 1921 in respect of credits and refunds; and

S. J. Res. 91. Joint resolution to authorize the National Society United States Daughters of 1812 to place a marble tablet on the Francis Scott Key Bridge.

COINAGE OF COMMEMORATION COINS.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 684 and place the same upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 684 and place it upon its passage. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 684) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the commencement on June 18, 1923, of the work of carving on Stone Mountain, in the State of Georgia, a monument to the valor of the soldiers of the South, which was the inspiration of their sons and daughters and grandsons and granddaughters in the Spanish-American and World Wars, and in memory of Warren G. Harding, President of the United States of America, in whose administration the work was begun.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in commemoration of the commencement on June 18, 1923, of the work of carving on Stone Mountain, in the State of Georgia, a monument to the valor of the soldiers of the South, which was the inspiration of their sons and daughters and grandsons and granddaughters in the Spanish-American and World Wars, and in memory of Warren G. Harding, President of the United States of America, in whose administration the work was begun, there shall be coined at the mints of the United States silver 50-cent pieces to the number of not more than five million, such 50-cent pieces to be of the standard troy weight, composition, diameter, device, and design as shall be fixed by the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, which said 50-cent pieces shall be legal tender in any payment to the amount of their face value.

SEC. 2. That the coins herein authorized shall be issued only upon the request of the executive committee of the Stone Mountain Confederate Monumental Association, a corporation of Atlanta, Ga., and upon payment by such executive committee for and on behalf of the Stone Mountain Confederate Monumental Association of the par value of such coins, and it shall be permissible for the said Stone Mountain Confederate Monumental Association to obtain said coins upon said payment, all at one time or at separate times and in separate amounts, as it may determine.

SEC. 3. That all laws now in force relating to the subsidiary silver coins of the United States and the coining or striking of the same, regulating and guarding the process of coinage, providing for the purchase of material and for the transportation, distribution, and redemption of coins, for the prevention of debasement or counterfeiting, for security of the coin, or for any other purposes, whether said laws are penal or otherwise, shall, so far as applicable, apply to the coinage herein authorized: Provided, That the United States shall not be subject to the expense of making the necessary dies and other preparations for this coinage.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 5259, of exactly the same tenor as this bill, be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. It is clear there is no quorum present.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Abernathy	Fleetwood	Little	Rogers, N. H.
Aldrich	Fredericks	Logan	Rosenbloom
Anderson	Frothingham	Luce	Sanders, Ind.
Anthony	Fulmer	McClintic	Sanders, N. Y.
Black, N. Y.	Funk	McDuffie	Seger
Black, Tex.	Gallivan	Michaelson	Sites
Britten	Goldsborough	Miller, Ill.	Sullivan
Browne, Wis.	Greene, Mass.	Morin	Sweet
Cable	Hawes	Nelson, Me.	Taber
Connolly, Pa.	Johnson, S. Dak.	Newton, Mo.	Taylor, Colo.
Corning	Jost	Nolan	Tincher
Croll	Kahn	O'Brien	Vare
Curry	Kendall	Paige	Voigt
Davey	Kiess	Peery	Wainwright
Deal	Knutson	Perlman	Ward, N. C.
Dempsey	Kvale	Phillips	Wertz
Denison	Larsen, Ga.	Porter	Williams, Ill.
Dickstein	Lee, Ga.	Quayle	Wolff
Eagan	Lehlbach	Rathbone	Wood
Edmonds	Lineberger	Reed, W. Va.	Wright
Fairchild	Linthicum	Reid, Ill.	Wyant

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and forty-six Members have answered to their names; a quorum is present.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

A QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland rises to a question of personal privilege. The gentleman will state his question of personal privilege.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, my name has been printed in the newspapers of the country——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman need not proceed further; the gentleman is recognized on a question of personal privilege.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time because I went to the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary and asked that I be recognized first on this resolution which is coming up before the House and which recites, "Resolved, That the House take no further action for the present to procure from the Attorney General the information heretofore requested of the Attorney General under House Resolution 211." Now, I ask the Members of this House to put themselves in my position for just a moment and in their own minds review this entire procedure. The first intimation I had of this coupling of my name with the charges before the Chicago grand jury was, I think, last Tuesday night, when Mr. Arthur Henning, of the Chicago Tribune, called me up over the telephone about midnight, awakened me from my sleep, and told me that the New York newspapers were publishing my name as one of those referred to in the report of the Chicago grand jury. I asked Mr. Henning what the charges were, and he told me he had been informed that I had accepted a bribe of $30,000 for securing the parole of certain Federal prisoners. I said, "Mr. Henning, in the seven years I have been in the Congress I have only gone once personally to the Department of Justice in a parole case, and that was a young man recently who was accused—in fact, pleaded guilty—of robbing the mails of $32, a man with a wife and two children, of Hagerstown, Md."; and that is the only parole case in the seven years I have been in Congress that I ever went to the Department of Justice on in person, although my office force has handled many cases of a minor nature. Then later there come other charges, not from any official source, not from the Department of Justice, I am informed; but, notwithstanding, charges were made against my name and against my character.

Gentlemen, I have been in public life for 15 years. I have searched every official act in this last trying week and I am absolutely conscious of having done no wrong at any time, and I resent with all that is in me the methods which have been used to wipe me off the slate by one stroke of the pen without giving me an opportunity to be heard and without knowing what the charges are except insinuations, except accusations which, according to the statement of the majority leader on this floor, come from crooks and criminals. [Applause.] Now, it is proposed by the great Judiciary Committee to refer this matter back to the Department of Justice for further investigation. Well, matters have been referred to the Department of Justice before, and I have known of cases which are marked to be investigated up there for two years, and I can not afford, gentlemen of the House, to labor under these charges until [applause] the Department of Justice gets ready to investigate them upon the acknowledged statement of the gentlemen who wrote the report of the grand jury in Chicago that they were made merely upon the statements of acknowledged crooks and criminals. And so I believe I have a right to ask that other action be taken, that if this House feels that I am guilty of any wrongdoing it ought to investigate the alleged acts of wrongdoing and ought either to exonerate me or ought to kick me out of that door, because I have no right to sit in this body. But in the absence of definite information I have been unable to meet these charges. I have not talked to a single member of the Committee on the Judiciary, except the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER], the acting chairman, on the floor yesterday after they made up the report, so far as I can remember. I have not talked to the Speaker or others, because I have been in a maze and unable to know just how to proceed. But this morning early Mr. Crim called me on the telephone and asked me to stop and see him at the Hamilton Hotel, and told me, quoting his words, "I am free to admit that in your case the charges are not supported by evidence, and I would not indict any man on the word of a crook."

Now, I did not go to see Mr. Crim. I told him that this matter was coming up in the House this morning, and I felt that my duty to myself compelled me to be here when this matter was before the House, but that I would come with some one to talk with him later, but I could not and would not come to see him this morning. [Applause.]

I did not seek this interview. It came from Mr. Crim, and I am sure that when the membership of the House realize that an attempt has been made to absolutely ruin two innocent men, guilty of no wrongdoing, by one of the strangest procedures that has ever taken place in this country, they will give me and give my colleague [Mr. LANGLEY] what we are entitled to, a complete and full investigation by the membership of this House, and I believe that when I obtain that investigation they will exonerate me absolutely of any wrongdoing. [Applause.]

This procedure is not going to stop the Department of Justice. This letter of the Attorney General, stating that he could not send up here the official records or the evidence, is mere quibbling about details. Surely the Department of Justice has or can make two sets of records if they have any evidence. Let them lay before a committee of the House one set of records in this case and let them proceed under their constitutional authority and by due process of law to take such action as they feel the evidence in this case justifies.

I am opposed to this resolution in its present form. I have no objection to that part of the Committee on the Judiciary's recommendation that the matter be referred back to the Attorney General. Let them proceed to the fullest extent, but this House owes it to me and it owes it to itself to conduct an investigation of these charges and these allegations against my character at the earliest possible moment. [Applause.]

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up a report from the Committee on the Judiciary and the resolution thereto appended.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls up a resolution from the Committee on the Judiciary. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House take no further action for the present to procure from the Attorney General the information heretofore requested of the Attorney General by the House under House Resolution 211.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield while I offer an amendment?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. DOMINICK. I just want to state at this time, Mr. Speaker, to the House and for the information of the House that while no formal minority report has been filed by me, I gave notice to the committee of a verbal objection to the report, and I wanted that to go into the RECORD as my formal minority report against the recommendation of the committee, and that I would have a substitute to offer at the proper time to the recommendation of the committee. I believe that is correct, Mr. Chairman, is it not?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield again?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. For a question.

Mr. DOMINICK. I thought that possibly, just at this time, it might be well for my substitute to be presented for the information of the House. It is very brief. I mean, to have it read, not to offer it, at this time.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I certainly will yield, for that purpose only.

Mr. DOMINICK. Just to have it read for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it for the information of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the reply of the Attorney General, under date of March 7, 1924, to House Resolution No. 211 is not responsive to the inquiry of the House nor satisfactory to the House. The attention of the Attorney General is called to the House resolution, and he is hereby directed to transmit to the House of Representatives the names of the two Members of Congress and the nature of the charges made against them, as directed in that resolution.

[Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I could not hear what the gentleman said. That is simply submitted for information?

The SPEAKER. Yes; for information.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. That is all, sir.

Mr. DOMINICK. It will be offered.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the House that I sympathize most deeply with the gentleman who has just addressed you [Mr. ZIHLMAN] under a question of privilege, explaining his position and his wishes regarding this matter. I am very sure there is no one who is more solicitous for his good name, not even himself, than I am in connection with this matter. You in your wisdom, gentlemen, saw fit to refer to your Committee on the Judiciary a communication from the Attorney General in response to House Resolution No. 211. Your committee undertook to discharge the duty imposed on them by you in a spirit of fairness, in a spirit of calmness, with a desire to do that which the law, the dignity, and the honor of the House require, and to report back to you their very best judgment as to what procedure should be adopted.

I wish to say to the House that this is not a matter for a hysterical disposition. This is a matter which sets a precedent. We want to act with the dignity and propriety that belong to a great legislative body. Let me ask your attention to the facts and circumstances, as I have gleaned them, not only from the address of the gentleman who preceded me but from the action of the House and the press. No one living mortal has accused any Member of this House of any impropriety of action or conduct by name. Now, then, how has this matter come about? A newspaper man called a Member of the House on the telephone and said, "Your name is connected thus and so with this public matter." What ought to have been the reply of the Member of Congress in question? "You print a syllable of that in a newspaper in this land and I will arrest you for libel and prosecute you to prison." [Laughter.] That is right, and you may laugh, but that was his duty, and that is the course I would have pursued if a man had called me over the phone and told me my name was to be published in connection with a charge of this kind.

There is no responsible accusation from any quarter.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. No; not just now. You take the letter of the Attorney General, sent to the House in reply to the resolution:

I am unwilling to make public the name of any man against whom any criminal charge has been made until the evidence in my possession convinces me that there is reasonable ground to believe that the person is guilty as charged and until proper legal steps shall have been taken to protect the public interests.

What right have we to compel an official of the executive department of the Government to proclaim the names of persons who have been mentioned in the report of a grand jury or referred to in the report of a grand jury when there is not sufficient evidence to warrant an accusation? The Attorney General said he would not expose to the community, with the official stamp of the Department of Justice, the name of any man unless, after investigation, there was sufficient evidence to warrant such a course.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Yes; I will yield to the minority leader.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the Attorney General had stopped there the situation, to my mind, would have been entirely different, but the Attorney General went much further than the sentence which the gentleman from Pennsylvania has just quoted.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Of course, it is impossible for me to anticipate or interpret what is in the mind of the gentleman from Tennessee in making this interruption and making this statement.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have no hesitation in stating what is in my mind.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Well, the gentleman will have an opportunity to state it; there is no difficulty about that. I have not confined my remarks and do not propose to confine my remarks to that single quotation from the letter of the Attorney General. You can consider only one quotation at a time, and that one I have stated with reference to the duty of the Attorney General regarding the publishing of names when he has not sufficient evidence to warrant him in making any names public.

Now, then, it is further stated in the letter of the Attorney General:

To transmit to you the nature of the charges made against any persons under investigation in the Department of Justice is incompatible with the public interest and will tend to defeat the ends of justice.

If, however, the House of Representatives of the United States, acting within its constitutional power (under Article I), to punish its Members for disorderly behavior or to expel such Member, requests that all the evidence now in the possession of anyone connected with the Department of Justice shall be turned over to the House of Representatives—

Then all the information he possesses will be placed at its disposal.

In the opinion of your committee that answer presented a perfectly proper and natural answer from the head of that department of the Government. There was no infringement of the dignity of this House.

Let us take the case—and in saying this I have no relation whatever in my mind to the men who have voluntarily placed themselves before the House as suspected Members—and suppose that this House, in the flush of excitement, in the heat of sympathy and overflowing kindheartedness, were to take up and investigate and declare that there was nothing against the men who thus came before the House for inspection and examination, and then suppose that the investigation of the Department of Justice in this supposed case went on to a grand jury, went on into a court, went on to a trial and a conviction, what a position this House would be in, having assumed, out of generosity and a spirit of kindness, to proceed at once, and then face the possibility of finding a verdict that would be entirely different from the conclusion which they had reached.

Now, I am debating simply the question of what the duty of the man holding the office of Attorney General would be under the nature of the inquiry which was addressed to him by the House. He has a right to look at the matter in its broadest light and with all its possibilities. He must determine whether or not he has the evidence to warrant even an accusation. He did not make the accusation; neither did his department. I say, he did not make the accusation; it came through the action of the grand jury of a county in a sister State.

This man, pursuing the rule that governs in such matters, has replied to the letter of inquiry in the only legal way it could be answered. No lawyer, when he stops to reflect and disassociates in his mind the question of personal sympathy and personal relationship, will dare say that any other course or conduct could have been adopted under the rules and regulations and the procedure that should govern in such matters as these.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Yes; I will yield for a question.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I want to ask the gentleman about the report of the grand jury and as to just how that report happened to have been made public. The report of a grand jury is ordinarily for the prosecuting officials and the judge. Now, did the gentleman's committee inquire into that in any way?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. That was not referred to us and we did not inquire into it. I wish to say to the gentleman that the information, so far as it has come to me, is this: Not through the Department of Justice, and not through the action of a court, but through an outsider the information got to members of the press, and, with the avidity which they always display for a sensational item, they got on this movement for names and brought forward these suggestions, and they finally reached the ears of certain men who seemed to think they related to them.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It was stated by Mr. Crim, in the presence of several gentlemen, that he had written the report at the request of the grand jury; that the report was thereafter submitted to the judge, but whether any request was made of the judge to have the report sealed does not appear.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. No.

Mr. LONGWORTH. As a matter of fact, the report was made public and was accessible to all the newspapers.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I want to know, as a matter of practice, about something with which I am not cognizant. Is the report of a grand jury in a Federal district court made a matter of public record or is it held private?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Unless it is ordered to be sealed it is made a matter of public record and can be consulted by anyone.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Was that true in this case?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. KING. Do I understand that there were indictments found in these cases?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. There were no indictments found.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Yes; yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I wish to suggest to my colleague, as pertinent to the inquiry respecting Mr. Crim, that that gentleman himself submitted to the chairman of the Judiciary Committee a letter in which he disavowed, as strongly as possible, that he ever disclosed any information or any intimation as to the grand jury report, but that he only spoke of it to those who were in an official position to have such information.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Virginia is quite right. Mr. Crim called at the committee room and furnished a letter which I exhibited to the members of the committee, and I ask unanimous consent of the House to spread that letter on the RECORD as part of my remarks in an extension of my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD for the purpose indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BUTLER and Mr. ROACH rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I can not yield just now.

Mr. Crim distinctly avers in the most earnest and positive manner that he never communicated this matter to anyone, except in the line of his duty to those who were over him; that he never gave out one single item of information to the press in any direction or spoke to anyone else outside of those who had to hear from him in the line of his duty.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman yield? I want to ask the gentleman a question for information, if the gentleman will permit me. The gentleman states, and the gentleman is recognized as one of the ablest lawyers in this House, that it was the duty of the Member when awakened at night to threaten a suit for libel. Does not the gentleman know, as a matter of law, that a grand jury report or a court proceeding is absolutely privileged and not libelous.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is quite correct.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. And the newspapers can print that.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. But the gentleman must remember that this grand jury report mentioned no names.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Certainly not.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Therefore when the man's name was to be put in public print, the responsibility rested upon the paper, and I would have guaranteed his conviction in any court of justice in this land if he had dared to name me in connection with a matter of that sort and publish it to the world, even though a grand jury had mysteriously asserted that somebody had been impugned in his conduct who was a Member of this House.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does not the gentleman think, if the gentleman will permit one more question, that when a libel has been published involving 435 Members of this House, the House ought to take action? [Applause.]

Mr. UPSHAW. Will the gentleman yield? Considering the matter of publicity, does not the gentleman remember that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN] said in his first statement that Mr. Crim telephoned his, ZIHLMAN'S, name to several different people as soon as he arrived in Washington.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I wish to say to the gentleman that that is not true. I do not mean your statement is not true, sir; but that Mr. Crim telephoned to anybody, I am satisfied, is not true.

Mr. UPSHAW. The issue then is between Mr. Crim and Mr. ZIHLMAN.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. No; I can not yield now. I wish to say that I have met Mr. Crim once or twice in my life.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I wish to say that I did say in my brief statement a few days ago, Saturday I think it was, that I had been informed by men of absolute reliability that he had telephoned the names; but I stated that merely upon the information given me. I have no positive knowledge about that, and the RECORD will bear out the fact that I stated that it was upon the authority of some one who had given it to me.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. That is what I understood, and in saying that it was not true I had that in mind.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question along a different line from the questions that have been asked and in connection with another phase of the matter? Why is it the Attorney General did not follow the custom of 100 years or more and have the President of the United States tell the Congress that it was incompatible with the public interest rather than to take the responsibility himself?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I can not tell you that. I do not know that it is the practice of 100 years. I can tell you of one incident that comes to my knowledge. I think the gentleman from Virginia looked at the same precedent, where the official of the department replied—and it is true that later the President himself sanctioned what had been done—and this was in the administration of that very great man, Grover Cleveland, when he was President of the United States, and he took the ground, in opposition to what Senator Edmunds had contended for, that his department, as an executive department of this Government, could not be forced to give the information sought at the dictation of a committee, although in that case it would seem to have been almost a proper thing to do, for the Senate was about to pass upon the question of an appointment in which they acted cooperating with the President of the United States.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Just for a question.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I wonder why your committee did not see proper to get the present President of the United States to back up the Attorney General in saying it was incompatible with the public interest.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. That question is unworthy of an answer, and I am surprised that the gentleman from Texas would put it.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Of course, that is the gentleman's viewpoint about it.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. The gentleman knows perfectly well that was not referred to our committee, and it would have been a piece of impudence and impertinence for us to have intruded along that line. [Applause.]

Mr. STEAGALL. May I ask the gentleman a question now?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. STEAGALL. The newspapers carried a report to the effect that the special agent of the Department of Justice, Mr. Crim, stated in an interview, before the department had been called on by this House to furnish any information, that he was going to pursue this inquiry in the courts; that he did not know how long it would take, and that it might take considerable time; but that he would not in the meantime divulge the information to the House. Is not that true?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. No; it is not.

Mr. STEAGALL. Did the committee make any inquiry as to whether that statement, which was carried in the press, was correct or not?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I have a statement that amply convinces me that is not true.

Mr. STEAGALL. One other question——

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Listen just a moment. We were not appointed to go on a fishing expedition as to what any newspaper might have published in connection with this thing. That was not the duty of a dignified committee of this House and the question that was submitted to us involved no such consideration. It is perfectly ridiculous to put it to us in that way.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I will, if it is simply an inquiry and not a statement.

Mr. STEAGALL. Is not this true that the papers at the same time carried the statement that Mr. Crim had reported to the President, and the statement from the President saying that he would have a full investigation made of this matter, but not by the Congress.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I simply say that I am sure that that is not true. It is a newspaper article that the gentleman quotes from. I do not know what newspaper he quotes, nor what the source of the information of that paper was, but I assure the gentleman that that is not the fact.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. KING. Does the gentleman know whether Mr. Crim assisted the grand jury in Cook County in writing that report of the grand jury which appears on the first page of the report filed by the gentleman's committee?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. My information in regard to that is this: That the grand jury through a witness that came before them got this information about these two Members of Congress and they threatened to make it public and send a communication to the President of the United States upon the subject, and to avoid that and protect the names they were told that their only duty would be to report it to the court that had appointed them, and that information and instruction was sound. That is the only thing they ought to have done.

Mr. KING. Was this special report which is printed on the first page of the report of the gentleman's committee made by Mr. Crim, or under his advice?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I can not tell the gentleman who aided or assisted in making the report for the grand jury, but if the grand jury had something they wanted to disclose and insisted upon disclosing it, whoever was in charge of the case would have to assist them in putting it into proper legal form. I do not believe that Mr. Crim was in any manner responsible for the insertion of that paragraph in the report. That was the act of the grand jury.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. McSWAIN. The gentleman having assured us of the falsity of certain reports and the credibility of certain persons, how did the distinguished gentleman and his dignified committee ascertain these facts extraneous of the record without doing a little outside fishing?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. That question ought to get its answer by a response of silence. I did not say what the gentleman says. I said here to this House that the evidence satisfied my mind, knowing what I do about the publications, that it was not true as reported in the newspaper.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. No.

Mr. McSWAIN. Then I ask the gentleman——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. STEAGALL. Will the gentleman yield to me to call attention to one brief statement in the report?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I decline to yield to the gentleman again.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. TUCKER. I find in the report of the committee the following statement:

> Under the reply of the Attorney General there is but one of two courses open to the House of Representatives:
> (a) The House take full charge of the investigation and evidence of the alleged charges and relieve the Department of Justice from any further responsibility.

I do not understand that. As I understand it, the Department of Justice is charged with the duty of investigating breaches of the law. This House is charged with the duty of investigating of breaches of propriety, and I do not see what the committee means.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I shall answer the gentleman from Virginia to the best of my ability, that the situation presented one of two alternatives, and I am not speaking of the law but of the fact. The Attorney General reported that it would be inadvisable to have two investigations proceeding at the same time, hunting for the same witnesses and going over the same ground, but that if the House wished under the proceeding which it had a right to institute to examine into the question of the conduct of its Members, if it wanted to proceed in that way, then he would wait until that was concluded, so that the alternative was presented by the situation itself of the House attempting to proceed to examine into the question of the conduct of its Members, suspending for the time being the investigation by the Department of Justice; and we concluded that we ought not to relieve the Department of Justice from the duty of going on with their investigation.

Mr. TUCKER. Suppose we appoint a committee to investigate this at the instance of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN], and suppose the Attorney General is summoned before that committee, will he give evidence?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I reply to that by saying that in his letter he has tendered it to the committee. He does not ask for subpœna. He says that if we decide upon such course all of the facts—everything that is in his possession—will go to the service of the House. That is the attitude of the Department of Justice upon that subject.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. This thought is in my mind about this whole proposition: Ordinarily when matters of this kind are investigated by congressional committees, immunity is conferred upon the persons who are charged with crime, especially if they testify before such a congressional inquiry. Suppose this House takes up these matters and investigates for itself. In case there was any crime attaching to it, would it confer immunity upon those who were guilty of such crime? Has the gentleman investigated that?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I have not.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. That is a very pertinent matter here. The question is whether a congressional investigation will immunize anyone who had committed any crime.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. In most cases it does, but as to whether it would in this investigation of disorderly conduct of a Member or not I am unwilling to put my opinion on record.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I know that I have investigated it to some extent, and that where a person charged with crime testifies to the same matter before a congressional committee and does not waive immunity, it does confer immunity.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I am inclined to think that the gentleman from Illinois is correct.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. As I understand it, a crook was called before a certain grand jury, and in the course of the hearing he said that two Members of Congress are charged with wrongdoing. Did the crook mention the names of the two Members? Has my friend any information about that?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I am unable to state, but I am sure that they must have been mentioned. They were not mentioned in the report of the grand jury.

Mr. BUTLER. Has my friend learned how that information was carried to the public?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Oh, the report of the grand jury was published.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand the two Members are not named in the report.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. No names were mentioned, but you see how easy it would be of an inquiring reporter to go after the witness who was before the grand jury and ask about the names. How easy when you remember there are 23 men on the grand jury from whom there could be a leak. Is it an unusual thing to find a leakage in an investigation of this kind?

Mr. BUTLER. If the gentleman will yield again. Did not the gentleman learn the names of the persons who conveyed this information to the public?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. It is impossible to learn that.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Another question. Under these circumstances do we not owe it to ourselves to inquire who these Members of Congress are and what the charges are? [Applause.] Should not we punish these two men or at least make this inquiry? There is no better prosecuting officer in America than the gentleman I am now addressing, and he knows how long it takes to drag out a libel suit against a newspaper.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I wish to say to the House most earnestly that in the opinion of our committee, with the exception of the minority report which was presented by one, that it was agreed that it was unwise for this House to proceed further along the line of this resolution and that the proper course to pursue would be for the present, as this resolution says, to permit the Department of Justice to go on with this examination in its regular and orderly course, and if within a reasonably short time there is not a report that will satisfy this House, then it is in our power to proceed further in this matter and endeavor to get it cleared up; but it is considered unwise for this House to start an investigation against two of its Members on the thought that they have been accused of disorderly and improper conduct when there is no official accuser, no responsible accuser, and cross-purposes with the Department of Justice in their investigation.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Pardon me just a second. The Attorney General has practically said to this House there is insufficient evidence in his hands and in his possession to present the names of any gentleman to the House. He wants, as his duty requires, to inquire further, and in all human probability you will find that within a few days you would get an exoneration of everybody in this House on a report from the Department of Justice that there is no responsible accuser nor sufficient evidence. How much better that is than for the House in the warmth of its affection for an individual Member or in the enthusiasm of individual friendship to proceed with an investigation which might be characterized through circumstances developed afterwards as a whitewash by the House of its own Members. Understand, gentlemen, I am not saying one word against these two men who have spoken on the floor in connection with this matter. I personally believe in their integrity, and will so believe until the evidence comes, if it should come, that can shake that belief. But I say for their sake, as well as for the sake of the dignity and the honor of the House, we ought to permit this matter to proceed in a regular and orderly course in which, if we adopt this resolution, it is about to be pursued.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I do.

Mr. WINGO. I notice in the answer to the Attorney General that the second ground for his refusal is—

> To transmit to you the nature of the charges made against any persons under investigation in the Department of Justice is incompatible with the public interests and will tend to defeat the ends of justice.

In the judgment of the committee how would it be incompatible with the public interest and defeat the ends of justice for this House to be advised of the nature of the charges against Members who are under charge and the names of the Members?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. The Department of Justice has not made any charge against any Member.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman did not get my inquiry.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. But it can make an investigation, and that investigation may disclose that no charges are to be made against anybody and ought not to be made.

Mr. WINGO. But the gentleman did not get the question.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Here is an officer of the Government charged with the duty of administering the office to which an investigation of criminal charges is a part of his work, and if he is called upon to disclose the charges and to make known what to rely upon, any man who has ever held the office of a prosecuting officer can readily see how that might interfere with the Department of Justice and defeat the efforts of the investigator.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman will yield. I fear the gentleman did not get my question exactly. I am inquiring in reference to the facts, and I am not thinking about the personal sympathy side but thinking about the public interest and the question of defeating the ends of justice. And my question is not at all antagonistic. Now the facts are that the statement has been made by the grand jury that evidence has come before it which shows that two Members of Congress have accepted money in such a way as to call for a criminal investigation. Now, assuming that the House can be trusted as much as the grand jury, how would it be incompatible with the public interest and how could it defeat the ends of justice for us to ascertain and expel a Member who may be guilty of misconduct?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Because the House has nothing to do with the question except the question of propriety and conduct of a Member. There are only two things the House can do, one is to censure or expel. That does not reach the crime, and what the House might disclose or ascertain might be practically to defeat the ends of justice.

Mr. WINGO. Just how would the ends of justice be defeated?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. That was the unanimous decision of the committee, with the exception of one.

Mr. DOMINICK. Not unanimous.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I said except one.

Mr. WINGO. Just how would it defeat it?

Mr. DOMINICK. Not a unanimous agreement.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Yes; I say you excepted.

Mr. WINGO. That is the point I want to get your judgment on as a lawyer. How would it grant immunity if we refused to grant immunity to the witnesses who came before us, and how would it defeat an indictment by a grand jury by direction of the district attorney, laying the evidence before it, for this House to get the facts without granting immunity to any witness upon which we could discharge our duty and expel a Member if the facts justified it? How would that interfere? The assumption is that the House would not grant immunity to anybody, and unless we grant immunity and take testimony——

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. If immunity follows a committee of investigation, it follows as a matter of law. The House will have nothing to do with it unless it changes the law, and that requires the consent of Congress.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman is familiar with the law, he knows they may waive immunity.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I can not yield further. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DOMINICK rose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from South Carolina. The gentleman from Pennsylvania reserves the balance of his time.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield——

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand. The gentleman is entitled to one hour. He used 40 minutes and reserved the balance. The gentleman from South Carolina sought recognition, and the Chair recognized him.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I wanted to know what the rule is. I was going to yield him time.

I ask to have printed as a part of my remarks the following letter:

> Hon. GEORGE GRAHAM,
> "The House," Washington, D. C.
>
> MY DEAR MR. GRAHAM: If you have the opportunity, please state in the most emphatic way with reference to the report of the grand jury at Chicago that I have not in any manner indicated nor mentioned the names of the Members of Congress referred to therein to any person other than officials, and to them only in strict accordance with my official duty.
> Sincerely,
> JOHN W. H. CRIM.

Mr. DOMINICK. I do not ask for any time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania could have yielded, but he had only 20 minutes to yield. The Chair not understanding that, recognized the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In view of the conversation about the parliamentary status, I desire to ask the Speaker if there is to be but one hour's discussion of this resolution, to be controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

The SPEAKER. No. That is for the House to decide. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from South Carolina, and he is entitled to an hour.

Mr. DOMINICK. I do not suppose that is to be taken out of my time.

The SPEAKER. Of course not.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Speaker and gentleman of the House, on the 6th day of March there was passed a resolution by the House, the resolving words being "That the Attorney General be directed to transmit to the House of Representatives the names of the two Members of Congress and the nature of the charges made against them." In response to that direction of the House the Attorney General wrote back a letter to the House, through the Speaker, in which, as some Members characterized it, there was practically a defiance of the House, and denying their authority, saying that he would do certain things and furnish certain testimony and certain evidence if a proper resolution was passed by the House calling on him to furnish it, and practically threatening that in the event he was called upon for this information he would stop or practically suspend any further investigation in regard to the matter.

That, to my mind, was one of the most curious positions I have ever seen taken by any man who claims to be a good lawyer, and especially a man who is at the head of the Department of Justice, taking the position, in effect, that if we proceeded with an investigation here in the House he would not do anything in the Department of Justice. These matters are entirely separate. Under the law this House has the right to control its membership and regulate the conduct of its Members. They can suspend or expel Members, and if they are suspended or expelled for a crime, that action on the part of the House in regulating the conduct of its Members does not affect any criminal prosecution that might be brought against them whatsoever.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DOMINICK. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. Does the gentleman think this resolution exonerates our colleagues, and says in effect that they have not violated the proprieties of the House, and if the Attorney General has got any prosecution let him bring it.

Mr. DOMINICK. We have all gone afield to a large extent in the discussion of this question. We started discussing it last Saturday afternoon at half past 2 o'clock in the Committee on the Judiciary and we were in session two or three hours, and on Monday morning we started at 9 o'clock and continued until 2 o'clock, and then from 2.30 we continued until 4.30. The discussion has gone afield both in our committee and in the proceedings here to-day. The question is not, gentlemen, as to whether or not we shall have an investigation of JOHN LANGLEY and FRED ZIHLMAN, but the question is a higher one to my mind, as to whether or not the honor and dignity and the prerogatives and the rights of this House shall be respected by a Cabinet officer that we have. [Applause.]

This is a threefold question. It has various angles to it. When I heard the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] and when I heard the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN], I could imagine their feelings under these charges and rumors that have been made. That is one feature of the matter. They have a right to know whether they are the charged ones or not. And then next to that here are 433 other Members of this House. There is not a Member of this House that has not had claims before the Veterans' Bureau, that has not had claims before the Pension Bureau, that has not had matters up before the Department of Justice; and yet to-day when we have only newspaper reports as to who these suspected men are, every man on the floor of this House can just as easily be charged, on account of the fact that he had written a letter to the Veterans' Bureau or to the Pension Bureau.

Now, while the newspapers have fixed these two names, these two Members have come before the House and they have disclaimed any knowledge of any wrongdoing. Where does that put the balance of you? At the same time we are informed that the Department of Justice and the President of the United States have been advised by a representative of the Government of the names of these Members. Why can we not get those names and settle it and fix it? Then after we get those names and the charges against them, it is up to the House to decide whether or not it shall take any action or wait for the action of the courts. Those Members will at least have their names, and the balance of us will have our names, expunged from this suspicion. Is not that a fair proposition?

We have not asked the Department of Justice for any evidence. We have not asked it for any affidavits. We have simply asked it for the names of these two alleged Members of Congress, with the nature of the charges, whether they are guilty of embezzlement or bribery. We have not even asked it for a copy of the indictment, if an indictment has been rendered.

Now, gentlemen, I do not know that the matter really requires any discussion. As I stated a little while ago, it is really amusing to see that the Attorney General would attempt to relieve himself from his duty by saying that if he furnished anything to us he would have to stop. As I stated, the two proceedings are entirely separate and distinct.

In the Senate case of Joseph R. Burton, in the Fifty-ninth Congress, the question arose as to whether or not a Senator, having been convicted in the courts under section 1782, Revised Statutes, the conviction would ipso facto vacate the seat of the convicted Senator. The question came before the Supreme Court of the United States, and in the opinion of the court, rendered May 21, 1906, by Mr. Justice Harlan, it is stated:

> In our judgment there is no necessary connection between the conviction of a Senator of a public offense prescribed by statute and the authority of the Senate in the particulars named. While the framers of the Constitution intended that each department should keep within its appointed sphere of public action, it was never contemplated that the authority of the Senate to admit to a seat in its body one who had been duly elected as a Senator, or its power to expel him after being admitted, should in any degree limit or restrict the authority of Congress to enact such statutes, not forbidden by the Constitution, as the public interests required for carrying into effect the powers granted to it.

Now, another matter, gentlemen, that is a little curious to me. I hate at any time to find myself not in accord with my associates on the Judiciary Committee. I have been on that committee for three years, and in my opinion it is one of the least partisan committees we have in the House, and I hate to find myself in the lonesome minority of one on this question. But you can read the report as prepared by a subcommittee, and thrashed out for five or six hours in executive session, and you do not see a single authority or a single precedent cited in that report. So far as the committee report is concerned, and I might add so far as the discussion goes, there was very little attention paid to any precedents, and some of them say we have no precedents in this matter.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOMINICK. Yes.

Mr. McSWAIN. Talking about the matter of precedents, suppose we accept the conclusion of the committee and back off; will it not establish beyond doubt the proposition that we are helpless to obtain information from any executive officer?

Mr. DOMINICK. There is no doubt at all about that. I now want to refer to page 186, section 1886, Hinds' Precedents. The House having asserted its right to direct the heads of the executive departments to furnish information, the Secretary of War returned an answer to a portion of the inquiry, declining to respond to the remainder. On December 2, 1861 (2d sess., 37th Cong., Jour., p. 10), the House agreed to the following resolution:

> Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to report to the House whether any, and if any, what measures have been taken to ascertain who is responsible for the disastrous movement of our troops at Balls Bluff.

The Secretary of War having replied that a compliance with the resolution would, in the opinion of the General in Chief, be injurious to the public service, on January 6, 1862, Mr. Roscoe Conkling, of New York, submitted the following:

> Resolved, That the said answer is not responsive nor satisfactory to the House, and that the Secretary be directed to return a further answer.

In the debate on this resolution it was urged, on the one hand, that the management of the Armies belonged to the executive department of the Government, and that an investigation into failures belonged rather to the military tribunals than to the House. On the other hand, it was urged that as the Congress raised the Armies it had a right to direct the heads of the executive departments to furnish information, and that this right, exercised also by the Parliament of Great Britain, had been recognized by the rule of the House adopted in 1820. The House agreed to the resolution—yeas 80, nays 54.

And yet, gentlemen, they say we have no precedents in the matter. I want to say, my friends, that if we have not any precedents, or if the Congress, or either House of the Congress, finds itself in a situation where it can not call for information from the heads of departments, then it is high time for us to be passing some legislation by which we can require information that is desired by our House. [Applause.]

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOMINICK. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. I desire to direct the gentleman's attention to the fact that this concerns the honor of every Member of this House, which is a much more pertinent matter than even that matter to which the gentleman has referred.

Mr. DOMINICK. I stated that a few moments ago in the early part of my remarks.

Now, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, as a substitute for what has been offered, and in the nature of a minority report, I have offered the resolution which has already been read from the desk, and I will read it again for the information of some of the membership who probably were not here at the time it was read:

Resolved, That the reply of the Attorney General under date of March 7, 1924, to House Resolution No. 211 is not responsive to the inquiry of the House or satisfactory to the House.

The attention of the Attorney General is called to the House resolution, and he is hereby directed to transmit to the House of Representatives the names of the two Members of Congress and the nature of the charges made against them, as directed in that resolution.

In my closing remarks, gentlemen, I want to remind you of one thing that I have been trying to stress in all my discussions of this question: The matter now before the House is not whether we will make an investigation of any charges that have been made, but the question is whether or not we will require the Attorney General of the United States to furnish the information that has been requested by a proper resolution of this House; and if you will keep that in mind, stick to the issue, and not let it be muddied by other propositions, I have no doubt as to the result of a vote on this question. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, as one of the members of your Judiciary Committee it is my duty to give to the House the benefit of the judgment and conclusion at which I have arrived.

I am not unmindful of the temper of the House; I am not unmindful of the disposition of the House to get this information from the Attorney General, but I am going to discharge my duty when I shall have done so; then the responsibility is yours.

There are one or two things which I believe it would be helpful to eliminate from our consideration at the beginning. In my judgment the adoption of this resolution would establish no precedent, as some gentlemen seem to fear. You will observe that the language of the resolution is that for the present the House do not insist further upon the Attorney General complying with the request. There is no abandonment, no surrender of claim of right. If it wants to do it, it can renew its request at any time in the future. It also leaves the House free to do anything which the House may desire to do with reference to the appointment of a committee to investigate the matter of these charges.

Now, as to the subject matter submitted to your Judiciary Committee. It was the reply of the Attorney General. Let us get this narrowed down as rapidly and as completely as we can. The Attorney General said to the House, in substance, "I will comply with your request for the names and the charges." There is no question about that. He imposed a condition, however, gentlemen, to that reply which, in my judgment—and I have thought over it for a good while—it would be unwise to accept. The Attorney General says that if this request is renewed he will comply and will also send data, and so forth, and suspend until the House shall have concluded its investigation. This is the legislative branch of a Government which has three coordinate branches. The Attorney General belongs to the executive branch of the Government. It is the duty of the Attorney General to prosecute offenses against the laws which we as the legislative branch enact. That is his business.

The Attorney General says that he is in the midst of an investigation to ascertain whether or not the laws enacted by the Congress have been violated. We have that information. Now, whether we believe the Attorney General is a good man or a bad man, whether we believe he is sincere or not, he is the responsible agent under the President charged with the enforcement of the law. He got his commission from the President and the Senate, and the President and the Senators get their power to create the present incumbent, Attorney General, from the people of the United States. Standing upon his official responsibility, with a discretion which we know he has, the Attorney General says that it is his purpose when he complies with any further request for this information, if made by the House, to suspend the efforts of his office while the House is proceeding.

Now, I do not agree with him. I think the Attorney General ought to have sent the names and the charges and proceeded with the matter. But it is not my judgment, or the judgment of the House, which would or could control this exercise of executive discretion. It is his discretion, received from the same source from which we have received our legislative discretion, the Constitution. It is his judgment that controls within the scope of his discretion. Let us get the situation clearly. He says that he will send the names, that he will send the charges; he will send everything he has. There is no use of this House discussing its inability to get from the Attorney General what it wants. It can get it. And when the Attorney General sends it down here he will dump on this House the full responsibility, and that is the fact. I am not talking about any legal or speculative fact. I am talking about the actual fact; responsibility for any failure to indict, and responsibility for any failure to convict, and responsibility for the failure of full and complete vindication, which otherwise would come from such failure to indict or convict. We are dealing with an actual situation and not a theory.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; not now. I will directly. All right; I will yield now. Perhaps that would be better.

Mr. STEVENSON. I want to ask the gentleman if he thinks the Attorney General has the right to put that alternative to the House and say you either have got to keep out or I will keep out? Has not the House the right to determine the fitness of its Members to sit, and has not the Attorney General the right to determine whether Members shall be prosecuted for crime, and are they not two entirely separate and distinct propositions?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I am not discussing the rights; I am discussing the power to do it. I do not believe he has the right, but he has the discretion and the power to do it, and he has told us that is what he proposes to do. I am talking about what you will get. We are not dealing with a theory; we are dealing with a situation. What are you going to do with these names and these charges and this evidence when the Attorney General sends them down here to the House and suspends action? I say I do not think the Attorney General ought to do it, but he has the power to do it; and what are you going to do with it when you get it? The House can not prosecute. It can not convict. It can not even impeach one of its Members. It can only expel.

If there be a man in this House guilty of the offense charged, he deserves a penalty and a punishment greater than expulsion. If there be a man in this House under the suspicion of a direct charge, that man deserves a greater vindication, a more complete vindication, than his fellows of this body can give to him. [Applause.] Those are the facts of this situation. There is a way for the House to proceed to purge itself without affording either reason or excuse for the Attorney General to pass his responsibility to the House. At least the House should make reasonable effort to proceed in that way before permitting the Attorney General to excuse himself even temporarily.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I regret I can not at this point. I want the guilty convicted. I want the House purged if there be any guilty among us, and I want with all intensity of desire the innocent vindicated. Vindication is not an act. Vindication means a restoration of proper relationship in the confidence of good people. That is what it means. I want us so to proceed that all innocent men under any sort of a cloud will have that sort of vindication. There is one of two things about this situation: Either the Attorney General is proceeding in good faith in the position which he has taken or he wants to get rid of this business. Suppose he is not proceeding in good faith and you insist and get this whole matter in the House.

The Attorney General will step aside, and you will have walked into the prettiest little trap that has ever been laid since my experience in this Congress. What are you going to do with this responsibility when you get it? You may say that the responsibility is not yours; that the Attorney General ought to proceed. But you can not escape the responsibility of having done that which the Attorney General told you would result in his suspending procedure.

Suppose you do this and render a verdict of "not guilty" and retain these men here. We are dealing with a situation, and an unusual situation. What then? I want these men, if they are free, to walk among their fellows and no human ever be able to say that these men are wearing a coat of whitewash put on them by their colleagues. You are not dealing with any theory here, gentlemen. You are dealing with reputation, with the psychology of the country, as well as with great public interest. Here are two men whose names have been associated with these alleged offenses. I do not believe the Attorney General treated them or this House right. I do not believe Mr. Crim discharged his duty as he ought to have discharged it. I read a statement from the witness from whom it is alleged Mr. Crim got this information, printed in the Chicago Tribune of the 7th of this month. He said that Mr. Crim was looking through some papers, and in these papers he discovered some documents out of which these rumors, this hurt to individuals, and this hurt to public confidence in the responsible agents of the Government grew. If this statement is true, Mr. Crim, knowing that the Chicago grand jury had no jurisdiction, ought to have put those papers in his pocket and brought them back and submitted them to a grand jury that did have jurisdiction. [Applause.] It was a dastardly thing for any man in power and with responsibility to permit those names to go before that grand jury, which had no jurisdiction and could do nothing more than to submit a report from which suspicion could fly abroad through the land to the hurt of men, to the hurt not of the House of Representatives merely but to the Nation. I do not say there was any purpose to divert suspicion to make the country talk about somebody else for a while; but if there was any such purpose, this procedure at Chicago and what has happened here would be about what would be expected in the carrying out of that purpose. The Chicago grand jury reports that Members of Congress are charged by witnesses with illegal acts. Rumors are turned loose in Washington and elsewhere.

The Chicago grand jury can not proceed because it has no jurisdiction. Persons named can not meet charges there because there is no indictment. They can not meet them here because there is none. They can not meet them in the House because even the names are uncertain and the offense is not named. In the meantime the whole House is placed under a blanket suspicion, which the Attorney General will not help remove, except upon a shift of responsibility which the House can not afford to accept. Of course, you gentlemen resent this. Of course the grand jury had no right to make such a public report. Mr. Crim was there. He doubtless helped prepare that report. These names were given publicity in violation of every public and private duty. And gentlemen with fire in their eyes propose to walk into this trap. That is what you are fixing to do. Why are you going to do this? Use your heads. This House has the power to appoint a special committee if it wants to, to go to the bottom of this thing. The Attorney General's office is not the only source of information. You can go to the people from whom Mr. Crim got his information if you want to. Why do you insist on taking hold of the hot end of the poker which the Attorney General is handing to you. Do you not see it is hot? When the Attorney General comes to me and says, "Yes; you can have it; and you can have the whole thing," I say, "No; thank you, Mr. Attorney General; you keep it; we will go somewhere else and get what we want, if we want it; we may come to you later, but not now." They started the matter, and now let them finish it. What are you going to do? It is your responsibility. To-morrow or the day after or the next week, if you should appoint this committee and it finds that it can not get the information from any other source, then you can go to the Attorney General, if you desire to do so.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. DOMINICK. Is there any suggestion in resolution No. 212, or any request of the Attorney General, as to any investigation upon the part of the House?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No.

Mr. DOMINICK. The House has asked only for the names of the two Members who are mentioned and the nature and character of the crimes charged.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. But my colleague is too wise to believe that all the House would do would be to get the names of the two men from the Attorney General and then remain impotent, silent, inactive while the accentuated suspicion resulting from that act rested against them. It would be a crime for the House to do that. [Applause.]

Mr. DOMINICK. Does the gentleman think it is for the Attorney General to advise the House as to this procedure?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; I do not. I do not think so for a minute. The House submitted to us the concrete proposition of what we should do with regard to the reply of the Attorney General. Nothing else was within our jurisdiction. We have reported as to nothing else.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I would like to know if the gentleman does not believe that when the two names and the nature of the charges are furnished, the House would certainly follow it up by a committee to investigate?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I think so. I think the House would. That is the point I just made. I stated that as clearly as I could. And I ask my friend from Florida, whose sound judgment I have learned to rely upon, if you believe, as you must, that you have a considerable probability of getting the names and the nature of the charges from another source, which would not give the Attorney General any excuse to lie down on this matter, if I should put it that way, does not your judgment suggest that you explore that source first before asking the Attorney General again for the information, when he has told you as plainly as he could that he would give you everything that he has and stand aside while you wrestled with it?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit one more question?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The office of the Attorney General is a statutory office, created by the Congress?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. He is our creature. We direct him to do a certain thing. He threatens us in his reply by saying that if we force him to do this he is going to throw up his hands and not perform his duty.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does the gentleman think that is right?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; I do not. It may provoke, even anger us. But I think the smartest thing that ever came from human lips is the saying that he whom the gods would destroy they first make mad. [Applause.] We must not act on this proposition because we may be provoked at the Attorney General and do not believe that he did as he ought to have done. He has a very shrewd mind which is working quite calmly these days. I have not examined the question, but I do not raise any question as to the power of the House in this particular matter to summon the Attorney General and compel his testimony, but at the same time I know there is no power in this House to compel the Attorney General to proceed with these transactions after the House has taken jurisdiction. There is no power in this House to prevent the Attorney General, when this House has taken jurisdiction, from failing to go ahead with his matters. If the Attorney General's prosecution falls down, there is no power to prevent the Attorney General from saying that he would have convicted if the House had not interfered, and there is nothing to prevent a lot of good people from believing it. This House owes a duty not to itself alone but to the people of the Nation so to proceed as to hold the confidence of the country. We come and we go, but the House is a permanent entity. It will be here when we are all gone.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I wish the gentleman would explain to this House how in the name of heaven an investigation here with these alleged charges can even tend to defeat the ends of justice. These men ar not going to run away; they can not escape if they tried to do it.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The gentleman entirely misunderstood my statement. I never said anything of the kind. I said that you could not prevent the Attorney General from saying it. Can you? Is not my statement sound?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. You can not prevent him from saying something; that is true; yes. The Attorney General did say in his reply that it might defeat the ends of justice.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Suppose you were the prosecuting attorney engaged in the investigation and somebody else received from you—you surrendered to somebody else—documentary proof that you had. Then suppose the prosecution fails. Would not you as prosecuting attorney have a pretty good excuse to offer? You would at least have a better one than if you had not surrendered the custody of your documents. If somebody should ask you why you did it and you could answer that you were requested by a high authority and you sent all that would help some, would it not? That is just common horse sense.

Mr. HOCH. Does the gentleman think that if the House should have an investigation such as he suggests, and such as rather appeals to me, without the calling upon the Attorney General, the Attorney General would then have an excuse that the investigation of the House interfered with his investigation?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not think so. Certainly not so good an excuse. It is my idea, gentlemen, that the House should consider first whether it desires to investigate these charges. It has never formally decided. If so, then it should create a special committee to make inquiry from sources other than the Attorney General. The committee would have sense enough to do that without instruction. If that committee should report to the House after it had undertaken to make that exploration that it could not progress satisfactorily, then for the first time, in my humble opinion, should the House consider permitting the Attorney General to dump into the laps of this House the documents which he has and the responsibility which he has. If that is not good sense, then I must confess I have not got any.

I now yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. UPSHAW].

Mr. UPSHAW. Does not the gentleman recognize this fact, that this question that is before this House can not be disposed of by a mere brush of the hand, and the nicety of the situation is this: This provides for the Department of Justice pursuing an offense against the Federal law, but it does not provide for its pursuing an offense against the honor of the House of Representatives and against its membership.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I agree thoroughly, but in the discharge of any duty the House owes it ought not to put forth any excuse for an officer connected with another branch of the Government. That is the point I am trying to make. If I have not made that point, then I have spoken in vain. That is the only point I am insisting upon, that the House in discharging the duty which it owes to its membership and to the country ought not, in the first instance, do that which will afford any excuse for any man connected with any branch of the Government not to discharge it to his fullest and complete responsibility.

I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARD].

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Reference having been made in this debate to a very serious doubt of whether the Department of Justice can make out a case, I put this question to the gentleman. Suppose no case developed by the Department of Justice, suppose there is no true bill returned and nothing done by this House, how does the House get from under the aspersion already cast upon it? What remedy have these two Members whose names were singled out or mentioned, or any other Member?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. In my judgment the failure of the grand jury to indict or the failure to convict, and I speak with deep sympathy for my brethren whose names are involved, would be the one and only complete vindication possible in the present situation.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Now this question. Realizing the fact that no action for libel nor indictment will lie against the newspapers for publishing a fair and ungarbled report of the proceedings of a grand jury, which represents the highest privilege under the law of this land, therefore withdraw the House resolution, which is the effect of the report of the committee, and I understand the effect of your conclusion to be that until the dawn of eternity no proceeding will be had nor can be had by which these Members can make and establish a permanent record of innocence which they assert.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; the House to-morrow, and always until the day of its adjournment, will have all the power to investigate and vindicate the Members whose names have been mentioned and remove the suspicion that may rest against this body as it has now. Gentlemen, do not permit the House with its power unimpaired now make it possible for an Attorney General and Mr. Crim, if they should be so disposed, to pass——

Mr. JONES. The buck.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The buck, as my colleague from Texas puts the words in my mouth.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. If I understand my colleague's position, it is that the House shall remain in a state of inactivity until the Attorney General's office shall make an investigation and report. Now, if that is the gentleman's point, what would prevent any of the bureaus of the department from having all kinds of charges against various Members of the House, without divulging their names, and going on indefinitely?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I am sorry I have not made myself clear.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I understand my colleague's position well. My colleague wants to wait and let the Attorney General——

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; I do not, and I have never said it.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. That is what is recommended.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I did not say so. This is what we recommend: That we do not at this moment further insist upon getting the names and charges from the Attorney General, because he tells us that if he gives to us those names and charges he will cease activity until the House has finished. We do not want to have the House responsible for the Attorney General suspending, whether for good cause or mere excuse——

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I will.

Mr. SCOTT. Both the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] in the presence of this House waived all their immunity; how does the gentleman figure that under that position the Department of Justice can evade any responsibility?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Not actual responsibility, but we are dealing pretty largely with the psychology of a situation. These men do not appear to be concerned about the final results of any investigation or prosecution. They say they are innocent. But it is the psychology of the country and of their constituents, of honest men generally, which concerns them. That is the terrible tragedy of a thing like this. At least that is one phase of it.

Mr. DYER. In line with the question propounded by one gentleman, let me call attention to the resolution of the House itself, which says the House would take no further action for the present. That does not mean we are going to give the Department of Justice absolute time. Unless they responded promptly and immediately the House would take action.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I understand from the gentleman's argument that he favors the House doing nothing at this time and turning this case over to the Attorney General.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. If at first you do not succeed, try, try again. No, sir.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. You do not want the committee appointed to investigate that?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I did not say that. There is nothing in the resolution that says that.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What does the gentleman propose that the House shall do?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I propose that the House do not further pursue at this time the effort to get this information from the Attorney General. It was not submitted to the Committee on the Judiciary to recommend to the House what it should do with reference to the general subject matter.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman is not in favor of the adoption of the proposed substitute resolution which would secure, if adopted, the appointment of a committee immediately by the House to take charge of the investigation? The gentleman is opposed to the adoption of that substitute resolution?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I have not investigated the substitute resolution.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It proposes the appointment of a subcommittee for that duty.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I would not oppose that. You understand I am speaking personally.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I understand the gentleman is speaking generally in favor of delay on the part of the House?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then I am unable to interpret the gentleman's words.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I can not help it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Be that as it may, let me ask the gentleman another question. On Thursday last the floor leader [Mr. LONGWORTH] described an interview which on that day he had with Mr. Crim, the gentleman who conducted the proceedings in behalf of the Government before the grand jury in Chicago, and Mr. Seymour, Acting Attorney General of the United States, and the gentleman from Ohio said this:

Mr. Crim stated that a very large part of the evidence used in investigating the War Veterans' Bureau case came from crooks and criminals who were turning State's evidence, and that in asking them questions their answers frequently led far afield and that he was compelled to follow those clues as far as they went.

Now, those thieves and criminals in the presence of the grand jury gave such evidence that that grand jury, a thousand miles away from the Veterans' Bureau, indicted the chief, and in their report they say that, besides the matter relative to the Veterans' Bureau—

> Certain other facts not directly pertaining to the Veterans' Bureau were developed by counsel for the Government, which we regard as of great importance, and among those certain moneys were paid to two Members of Congress.

Now, the gentleman from Texas knows that that grand jury, in saying that, meant that those payments were corrupt payments, because payments in the legitimate transaction of business would not have been mentioned. Therefore an impartial grand jury, unacquainted with the situation, in investigating one corrupt bureau of the Government, found transactions which they deemed of great importance reflecting upon the integrity of every Member of the House because we are unable from their statements to identify the two Members. By the statement of an impartial jury we have two unidentified corrupt men on the floor of this House, and that evidence was adduced from the same men whose evidence led to the indictment of the former Director of the Veterans' Bureau.

I will ask the gentleman from Texas the question after I read this. Mr. LONGWORTH said—and it is a part of the same speech of the gentleman from Ohio:

> Gentlemen, that is the position this House is in to-day, with these gross slurs and insinuations cast upon Members of our body and no assurance whatever that anything is going to be done within months from now.

The gentleman from Texas understands that that means not until after the primaries have been held; not until after conventions are held; and the honest men on this floor want to be investigated now. The Republican leader said also——

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I can not yield further to the gentleman.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I ask that the gentleman have another 20 minutes. Does the gentleman believe that the House of Representatives should turn over to Mr. Daugherty, whose assistant says there may be no trial for months, this question as to whether there are guilty men on this floor?

Mr. FOSTER. If the gentleman will yield, I would suggest that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] misunderstands what the Dominick substitute is if he thinks it provides for the appointment of a committee at this time. The substitute merely asked for the information requested in Resolution No. 211 and stops there.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. JONES. I just want to ask a question for information. I sympathize with a goodly portion of what the gentleman has said, but I was wondering whether we could not adopt this resolution and adopt an amendment providing for a special committee to make an independent investigation on the part of the House without interfering with the Attorney General.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. MONTAGUE and Mr. DOMINICK rose.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I can not yield further, because I want to conclude with just this statement: There is not involved in this resolution that which as a precedent, if adopted, would limit the powers of the House. That is avoided by the words in the resolution "at this time." I am not going to argue that. There is not involved a determination whether or not the House shall appoint a special committee immediately thoroughly to investigate the matters which grow out of these charges. There is not involved in this resolution anything which would later on prevent the House from asking the Attorney General for this information.

This is what is involved, and this is all that is involved in this resolution: Whether or not this House at this time shall renew its request of the Attorney General, and have the Attorney General send the names, send the charges, send every record, and step aside until the House gets through. Now, then, the question is: Do you or do you not want that to be done? If you do not want that done, vote this resolution up. If you want that done, defeat the resolution.

Mr. DOMINICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. DOMINICK. I do not think there has been any proposal here on the part of anybody to have the Attorney General send any records.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Now, gentlemen, let us see about that.

Mr. DOMINICK. That was the suggestion in the letter of the Attorney General.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Ah, yes; that is true.

Mr. DOMINICK. But I have not heard any proposal before our committee or on the floor of the House about records.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. There are two parties dealing with this—the Congress and the Attorney General.

Mr. DOMINICK. I understand.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Now, when a man says to you, if you ask me to send a horse, "I will send a horse with a saddle and a bridle." That is what he has told you. You know it. Then if you send word up to that man to send down a horse, can you pretend to be surprised when you look at the horse and find he has the saddle and a bridle with him?

Is there a man on the floor of this House who does not this minute know, with all the certainty that a mind can have in regard to a thing which is to transpire in the future, that if we renew this request, whether the Attorney General ought to send them or not, that he will send the names and the charges and step aside until we get through? Is there any man who can pretend he is ignorant of that?

Mr. STEAGALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; I will not, and I do not mean to be discourteous. Can any man pretend to be ignorant of the consequences which will flow from a renewal of that request? Now I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL], to whom I was, unfortunately, a little discourteous.

Mr. STEAGALL. The question I wanted to ask was this: Does the gentleman think anything the Attorney General's office can do with this matter is more important to the country than the exercising by this House of its right and duty to deal with this matter in order, if a corrupt Member sits here, that we may take proper action?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; but does the gentleman at this time and at this stage of the proceedings want to be understood—I do not ask him the question because he might ask to interrupt me again—as believing that the Attorney General's office is the only source from which we can get information?

Mr. VESTAL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. VESTAL. The fact that the House passes this resolution would not in any wise prevent the House from appointing a special committee to investigate the acts of these Members, would it?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Not at all; and I have said that over and over again.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, we are all assuming that nobody is guilty until they are proven to be so, but suppose it should transpire that we require the production of this evidence, the names, and the nature of the charges, and that whatever evidence the department has is not sufficient to justify conviction at this time, and acting upon that evidence the House proceeds to exonerate its Members, but that later the department finds, by running out these leads from place to place, that there is evidence which would prove guilt, what position will the House be in if it should have already exonerated its Members?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I can not say. Now, gentlemen, I want to thank you for your consideration. I have discharged my duty; the responsibility is yours, and if you want this matter from the Attorney General you can get it; if you want to take this responsibility you can do it. There is no uncertainty as to how to proceed to get it and no uncertainty as to the consequences of such procedure.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a moment? I wonder if we could arrive at an understanding as to the length of this debate?

Mr. DOMINICK. I think I have 40 minutes remaining, and I have applications for enough time to consume all of that and more. I want to get through with this matter, of course, as soon as possible.

Mr. LONGWORTH. As the parliamentary situation stands now, any gentleman who obtains recognition obtains it for one hour, and I was wondering whether we could have an understanding that the debate should close at the end of the gentleman's hour and at the end of the hour of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DOMINICK. I have no objection to an arrangement along that line. I think I can conclude my requests within the time remaining. I believe I have 40 minutes remaining.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that at the end of the hour controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the hour controlled by the gentleman from South Carolina that debate shall be closed on this resolution.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I, as a member of the Committee on the Judiciary and its subcommittee, have given a great deal of thought to this matter. I desire to have adequate time to express my views to the House. I very seldom vex this House with a speech.

Mr. LONGWORTH. How much time would the gentleman like?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am not accustomed to speaking long, and if you do not impose any limitations upon me I think I will get through quicker than to have some compulsion behind me all the time.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then, Mr. Speaker, I modify my request to include half an hour after the conclusion of the hour of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the hour of the gentleman from South Carolina and ask unanimous consent that thereafter a vote be had on the resolution and all amendments.

Mr. DYER. That time to be controlled by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE]?

Mr. LONGWORTH. That half hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MONTAGUE. As far as I am individually concerned, Mr. Speaker, I do not care to control the time of debate. If it is only half an hour I must apportion that out to other gentlemen who desire to speak and that means that I can not present my views to this House. I must have my own time. Of course, I do not mean to impose conditions on the House, but I know my own limitations and I desire to speak without any compulsion as to time.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then I modify my request to include at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that after the conclusion of the hour of the gentleman from South Carolina and the hour of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] debate close. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask how much time there is remaining upon this side?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DOMINICK] has 40 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] has 20 minutes remaining.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, just one suggestion. Of course, the request would include the right of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] to close the debate. It is merely a limitation on the time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] has 20 minutes and can use that as he pleases.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Of course the gentleman from Virginia could speak before that.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to have it understood as to whether or not all of my time should be used before the time of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] is used.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania undoubtedly has the right to close the debate.

Mr. DOMINICK. I understand that; but I would like, probably, to reserve some of my time.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think the gentleman could have an understanding with the gentleman from Virginia about that.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio to give me 10 or 15 minutes to speak on this very important subject.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then I will add to my request 15 minutes for the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DOMINICK. Reserving the right to object further, Mr. Speaker, I stated a moment ago I thought that possibly I could get through with the remaining time I had and comply with my requests, but in looking over the list and at the suggestion of some others who have asked me for time, and in view of the fact that the opposition to the committee report has used only one hour, I think the gentleman had better give me at least a half hour more. That would give the opposition, or the minority, in so far as this resolution from the Judiciary Committee is concerned, one hour and a half, and as it is now the gentleman from Pennsylvania has one hour, the gentleman from Texas has an hour, and the gentleman from Virginia has half an hour or more. That is two hours and a half, and I will have had only one hour.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] was going to speak on the gentleman's side.

Mr. DOMINICK. That would give me 1 hour and 15 minutes. I hope the gentleman from Wisconsin will speak for my side.

Mr. DYER. Does not my colleague think that it is fair for one member of the committee to control that much time as against 19 members?

Mr. DOMINICK. It is not a question of a member of the committee controlling time; it is a question of division of debate on a question that is being debated before the House.

Mr. DYER. But members of the committee on this side have to forego speaking because of the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DOMINICK. I ask that the request be modified in order to extend me an additional half hour.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Of course, the gentleman is speaking on his own amendment and that does not necessarily mean the minority. The minority, in effect, are those opposed to the resolution of the Committee on the Judiciary, and the gentleman is speaking on a particular amendment. I think my request is a fair one, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. DOMINICK. I filed it as a minority report.

Mr. DYER. Oh, no; the gentleman stated in the committee he would not file a minority report.

Mr. DOMINICK. The gentleman stated no such thing. The gentleman stated he would file a minority report, but it would not be formal and it would not be in writing; and the gentleman stated in his remarks this morning that his resolution was filed in the nature of a minority report.

Mr. DYER. The record of the committee will show that the gentleman did not file a minority report.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. DOMINICK. If you will add that time, I will try not to use any more time than possible, but otherwise I will have to object.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I can not accept that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DOMINICK. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I regret exceedingly that I can not agree with the position of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS]. He does not doubt the power of the Attorney General to prosecute the persons involved, irrespective of any investigation by the House, but he assumes from the letter of the Attorney General that the Attorney General will fail to do his duty, and because he believes the Attorney General will fail to do his duty, thinks that we should fail to do what we conceive to be our duty to the House and to the Members of the House.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] assumes from the letter of the Attorney General that he will fail to prosecute this case if the House undertakes an investigation. How did this question arise? It arose in investigating charges against Forbes.

Those charges grew out of a congressional investigation. Over in the Senate, when the Senate committee was investigating the oil scandal, the Attorney General had his assistant, Mr. Holland, present at the hearings, and he announced that he was following the testimony and just as soon as that investigation was completed he would proceed on the part of the Department of Justice to determine whether or not there should be a criminal prosecution. Why should he not follow the same course in this matter? How can he say that in this case, if there be an investigation, he will fail to prosecute? The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] says that he does not question the fact that he would have power to prosecute regardless of our action, but he does question the fact that he will, that he is laying a trap for us, and that we will walk into it. I shall not walk into a trap, but I say let us call his bluff because it is a bluff. If a congressional committee determines that the evidence justifies prosecution he will not dare to fail to prosecute. If he does, if he neglects his duty, then we have our remedy in such a case. We can impeach the Attorney General, and he ought to be impeached in such case. On the other hand, if as the result of the investigation it appears that there is no evidence to justify prosecution, then immediately justice will be done to the House and to the two Members who have been charged by the grand jury. If gentlemen will look on page 3733 of the RECORD they will find the statement of the grand jury report, which we are told was written by Mr. Crim, or which he assisted in writing. That report says:

Incidental to the investigation of matters of which this grand jury has jurisdiction certain facts not directly pertaining to the Veterans' Bureau were developed by counsel for the Government which we regard of great importance.

The report then goes on to refer to charges against two Members of Congress. That proves that the charges against these Members of Congress were developed by the representatives of the Department of Justice, and the Department of Justice can not now escape the responsibility for the blanket charge against the House of Representatives.

The gentleman from Texas says that we should not by any action of ours give excuse to the Attorney General to say that we prevented the prosecution. If we governed our action here upon the theory that we are going to prevent faithless officials from having excuses for their own negligence, then we could never function. Suppose we followed the gentleman from Texas and did nothing, but left the matter to the Department of Justice. He believes the Department of Justice has no evidence, in which case the Department of Justice will never act. Six months from now, when nothing has been done, if you are going to base your action merely upon what people may say about it, the people will say that JOHN LANGLEY and FRED ZIHLMAN went down and used their influence with the Department of Justice to prevent the department from bringing indictments against them, that political influence was exercised by the party in power and that indictments were stopped, and these two men, if they are the men, will remain under suspicion forever, because the Department of Justice will never take formal action, but will simply fail to prosecute because the evidence does not justify prosecution. I do not know that we can be assured that these two Members of the House are the ones referred to. Mr. ZIHLMAN said that he was informed by newspaper men that his name was mentioned, and that Mr. Crim talked to him this morning and told him that there was not sufficient evidence in his hands to justify a prosecution, or the making public of the names. But I do not know who mentioned the name of LANGLEY, and so far as the record goes this is an indictment against 435 Members of this House, against each and every one of us. There is not one of us who could tell his constituents, with assurance of having the statement accepted in every case, that ZIHLMAN and LANGLEY were the Members in question. The Department of Justice may hereafter say that some other Member was intended and was under investigation. As long as the special representative developed the testimony before the grand jury, he ought to have kept out of the report any reference to Members of Congress unless he had testimony. If he has the evidence he ought to name the men. And we should call at once for the information asked for in the resolution. The Attorney General says that if we assume responsibility for it he will send it to us. Why, he can not read. We have already assumed responsibility for it. The majority leader advocated it, the minority leader advocated it, and the House adopted it. We have called for it in order that we may pass upon the conduct of our Members. I hope that the substitute of my colleague will be adopted, insisting upon the Attorney General giving to the House the information that the House asked for in its resolution previously adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, two of my committees are now in session and I want to get to both of them, so that I am not going to detain you more than a minute or two. I have heard some most remarkable arguments in this House to-day, coming from lawyers—good lawyers. Being a sort of half-handed crossroad lawyer myself, I thought I would learn wisdom from these gentlemen. But neither the Attorney General nor any other lawyer can convince me that his compliance with the request of this House would even tend toward the defeat of justice. Two men, Members of Congress, are charged with some offense, we know not what; evidently, however, involving their integrity. How could they escape the processes of the courts in this country? How could they, by knowledge of it, defeat the ends of justice. When this Government was first organized it was provided in the Constitution that a Member of Congress in going to or returning from a session or in attending a session could be arrested only for a breach of the peace, for a felony, or for treason against the Government. The reason for that was that the minority, by having warrants issued for members of the majority, might absolutely control the action of the Congress. Suppose we submit to this. Suppose a department of this Government or every department of this Government should promulgate that certain Members of the House had been guilty of offenses—it might be the majority; it might be the minority—and by putting these men under that kind of ban they could absolutely control the legislation in the House of Representatives. If you vote for the resolution of the majority of this committee, I will tell you what the country is going to say. It will say that Daugherty has the goods on us and that we are afraid to come forward and ask for the evidence. [Applause.] As one Member of this House, having been here for 10 years, I defy the Department of Justice and all of its minions to do me any harm, and the other membership of this House ought to take that same position and tell Mr. Daugherty to come up here and put his cards on the table right here.

If he knows these men, he should tell us who they are. We are not asking him to furnish evidence. He does not have to disclose his evidence. We will get that, but we are asking him to say who they are and with what they are charged, and then we will appoint or have the Speaker appoint a special committee to investigate the charges and purge this body, if it needs purging. I believe it is all a bluff. I do not believe this body needs purging. I have been here for 17 years with JOHN LANGLEY, and while he has got his faults, just as I have and as all the rest of us have, I do not believe dishonesty is one of them, and I am from Missouri on that proposition.

They have got to show me. If they do show me, although he is my friend, I will vote to protect the integrity of this House. I have known ZIHLMAN for the seven years he has been here. I do not believe that young man is dishonest, but if they show me that he is, I will vote to protect the integrity of the House of Representatives because I regard it of higher dignity than any man or any two men or any majority even of this House. The resolution of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DOMINICK] ought to be adopted and compel the creature of the Congress to do his duty. It can not interfere with his prosecution. The oil matter is being prosecuted, is it not, and yet a committee in another body is investigating it, and why can not they go along side by side? Let us do our duty and let the Attorney General do his and not tell us what we ought to do. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I earnestly request that I have the attention of the House, certainly until I can feel myself free from any self-consciousness in pursuit of the argument which I desire to submit. It may be best first to recur to the authority under which the Committee on the Judiciary acted.

Resolved, That the Attorney General be directed to transmit to the House of Representatives the names of the two Members of Congress and the nature of the charges made against them.

Mr. SNYDER. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, a point of no quorum. I think this thing is of enough importance for Members to be in attendance and listen to the argument.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I prefer the gentleman will not do that, as it will consume some time. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his request, though I appreciate the implied compliment.

Mr. SNYDER. I withdraw it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The House in this resolution directs the Attorney General of the United States—who I may observe in passing is an arm of the President of the United States, the alter ego of the President, one of the three original Cabinet officers so-called, though legally we have no Cabinet officers—asks of him information upon two points and two points alone, namely, that he give the names of the two Members and the charges against them, not the evidence to sustain those charges, not the testimony relevant or irrelevant to the charges, but the bare names and the nature of the charges. The Attorney General in his reply does not comply with that request save conditionally. Now, the minority report is that this House resolution be reaffirmed and the request or direction be specifically renewed. Is not that the purport of the minority report? If not, I am subject to correction by the gentleman from South Carolina. We are asking again from the Department of Justice——

Mr. DOMINICK. I may state to the gentleman that in the resolution there is a statement that the reply of the Attorney General is not responsive to the inquiry of the House or satisfactory.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I may say that it is not satisfactory to me, but I am not willing to state that it is unresponsive. But the point is that the minority report asks the House to reaffirm this resolution; that is, to give us the names of the Members and the charges against them. Where are we when the Attorney General gives the House this precise information? What an unfortunate position.

Mr. DOMINICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Let me conclude. This House, then, would be in a position of having information exculpating the entire House, but with no information whatever as to the guilt or innocence of the two named, thus selfishly clearing ourselves and charging two others. [Applause.] You can not escape that conclusion.

Mr. DOMINICK. I would like to ask the gentleman in regard to the situation we would find ourselves in case he complied with this last request?

Mr. MONTAGUE. The gentleman's request.

Mr. DOMINICK. Would there be any difference in our situation if he complied and gave the information?

Mr. MONTAGUE. No; we ask for nothing and we would get nothing if replied to. We ask for barren information, and if given we would be in the same position, and no better position, so far as the merits of the case are concerned, than if not given.

Mr. DOMINICK. We would ask for something.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I have just expressed my opinion upon that, though I may be wrong. But if we have the answer, namely, the names of the Members and the charges against them, what is our position? I repeat regretfully that then the House will be plainly in the attitude of exculpating all of its Members save the two charged, and the burden of these two will be all the heavier, for no information as obtained or asked for will throw any light upon their guilt or innocence. I have the greatest sympathy and regard for these two Members, and I am unwilling to leave them alone and without protection, unless we take additional action by an additional resolution.

We are dealing here with the power of the House of Representatives, not with that of the Congress; and we are dealing with the powers of the House of Representatives in its relation to two other departments of the Government, the executive department and the judicial department, the executive department so far as it relates to the Attorney General's administration per se, and the judiciary department so far as it relates to criminal proceedings by indictments and trials. There is an old principle involved that may be considered perhaps somewhat of a last year's bird's nest, but it is the constitutional establishment of three departments of government that are separate, distinct, and independent, and therefore we have no more authority to interfere with such prosecutions in the courts than these departments of the Government have to come here and direct the legislation and mode of procedure of the House, save in the few instances wherein such power in a modified sense is expressly conferred by the Constitution.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman will permit, is not the reverse of that true, that the Department of Justice, the executive, or the judicial has no part in the discharge of our constitutional rights to determine whether or not a Member shall sit on this floor?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Oh, yes; I would not gainsay that. I would not say the gentleman is not entirely right about that. But some of the Members of the House seem to be of a wholly wrong impression. I do not controvert the power of this House to deal with the conduct of its own Members and to censure or expel them. That is all we can do. You can not impeach them.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. There are two branches of the Government involved——

Mr. MONTAGUE. Just ask the question, please.

Mr. RAKER. The judicial and the executive. The judicial has this information, namely, the members of the grand jury. Can this House compel the members of the grand jury to divulge the names of these men? Can we not?

Mr. MONTAGUE. In reply to that question I beg to state that we have the right to the names of the witnesses who appeared before the grand jury. We have no right, however, to take such testimony out of the hands of the prosecuting attorney, but we can examine those witnesses and make them tell everything they told the grand jury and the Attorney General, and our power is as great as his.

Mr. RAKER. I mean we can summon the jury.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I mean to say you can not make a grand juror tell or reveal what the witnesses testified to before the grand jury, but you can make a grand juror state who testified. We can bring members of the grand jury here and interrogate them as to the names of their witnesses.

I am now discussing the power of the department and not the rightfulness or the expediency of its exercise; with the power alone and not whether it ought or ought not to be exercised. I contend it is wholly beyond the power of the House to supervise or interfere in any way with a criminal prosecution pending in any court or in the hands of the prosecuting officer of any of the executive departments of this Government.

That question is not a new one. It has been suggested by the chairman of the committee that when Mr. Cleveland was President his Attorney General was directed by the Senate to submit certain records relating to the removal of a United States attorney and his conduct of the office. The Attorney General declined to comply on the ground that it was incompatible with the public interest. Mr. Cleveland, if I recall correctly, latterly made an able argument denying the request of the Senate, and contending that this legislative branch of the Government was transcending its powers in desiring to compel the submission of such information. It was wholly within the power of the Executive to give it or not give it. It is true that Senator Edmunds, one of the ablest lawyers in America, held the contrary view, but a minority view of very able lawyers took the view I take, and that view prevailed and no reply was made by the then Attorney General.

Mr. WINGO. Before the gentleman leaves that point may I ask him this, whether the major right involved here is not the executive right or judicial right, but the right of the legislative? Is not that the major right?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes; but no major right given by the Constitution as applying to this. There is no major right of one department of Government to override another department of Government, judicial or executive.

Mr. WINGO. Is it not true that the assumption that in order for us to inquire into the fitness of these two men we would override the executive or judicial department is a wrong assumption? Why can not——

Mr. MONTAGUE. I hope the gentleman will not argue the question now, because I have not taken that position. The gentleman must have misunderstood me.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman will permit me, that was one of the errors in the reasons assigned by the Attorney General. I was seeking as an humble Member of the House to get information from the committee that had reported to the House.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman please repeat the question he desires to present? Perhaps I did not catch it fully.

Mr. WINGO. The Attorney General takes the position that there is an antagonism in the motives and in the ultimate action of the House and of the judiciary of the country. In other words, he says it would be confusing and defeat the ends of justice for us to undertake to investigate and go into this matter, when, as a matter of fact, is not just the opposite true, that the presumption is that the House of Representatives is just as much interested in seeing that the ends of justice are served as the Department of Justice, and that both of us can pursue the same object, animated by the same motive, and that the House can be trusted to discharge its duties with just as much intelligence and, if I may be permitted to say, with just as much fidelity?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I have not disputed or controverted that statement. The House can go on at this moment and institute a trial or investigation of these two Members by a special committee. This resolution does not impair that right of the House. There seems to be a misapprehension on the part of some Members of the House as to what this committee has reported. Now I read again:

Resolved, That the House take no further action for the present to procure from the Attorney General the information heretofore requested of the Attorney General by the House under House Resolution 211.

That is, that the House will not take any further action at present to secure the information we have asked. That the House leave the Attorney General alone, and resultantly that the House may proceed in its own time and way to do as it pleases; that for the present we will not again ply the Attorney General for this barren information.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. I am very sorry I did not hear all of the gentleman's remarks, but if this House should order, by a special committee, an examination made of the facts about which we are talking, will it in any way interfere with the Department of Justice in the prosecution of the case?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think not, and even if it should, we have a right to do it, a perfect right to do it, and the adoption of this report in no way precludes or impairs the exercise of this right.

The committee was confronted with this: That the reply of the Attorney General—I assume for the purpose of argument—was unsatisfactory, and that he did not give the information the House had asked except conditionally. What was that condition? That if it would aid the House in the discharge of its functions, under the Constitution relating to the misconduct of its own Members, he would be glad to put such information as he possessed in the hands of the House. Not the names, but the information that would necessarily include the names and the charges. He says, in effect, "I will give you everything that is in my possession." Then he goes on to make a statement which, if not made, would have carried the inexorable implication, namely, that during that time, having parted with the information, he would suspend for the time being further investigation of the case. And what other Attorney General would not have done the same thing if he once dispossessed himself of such information? What could he otherwise do in the absence of the testimony?

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman will permit—and I am not asking this in a controversial spirit——

Mr. MONTAGUE. I want to yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. UPSHAW. I think the gentleman has almost answered the question I had in mind. The question I had in mind was this: Would the Attorney General be absolved from pursuing his plain duty to prosecute a Federal violation if we should insist upon the question we have a right to ask of him?

Mr. MONTAGUE. If he had simply given us the names of the two Members and the charges, I do not think it would interfere, but I do not think it would help the House in the discharge of its duties. I really think we asked for nothing and we got nothing.

Mr. WINGO. I could not follow the gentleman. The gentleman said, "Suppose he did come down here and give us the information the House said it wanted"; that was simply the names and the nature of the charges. The House did not ask the Attorney General to turn over the files. But assuming we do insist that he furnish the House the information it has asked for and he places before the House all the evidence he has. Then will the minds of the Attorney General and of his assistants be blank, so that they will not know the names of the witnesses to bring before the grand jury and will not be able to proceed? How will anybody be given immunity by that proceeding?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am not discussing immunity.

Mr. WINGO. Well, I am. The gentleman raised the question and said: "What benefit would it be to have the information, and what would prevent the department from going on?"

Mr. MONTAGUE. If I were Attorney General and turned over every bit of information I had to the House of Representatives, I should consider that ordinary courtesy would require me to suspend further action until the House got through with its consideration of the testimony submitted by me to it.

Mr. WINGO. The Attorney General has failed to show comity, but he has volunteered this.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I hope the gentleman will not inject his own views into my remarks. I would like to hear him in his own time, because he is able and can make his own argument. I desire to get along with my discussion.

Mr. WINGO. I was trying to follow the gentleman, and the gentleman has not yet told me what——

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am sorry I am unable to impart the information the gentleman desires; that is my misfortune.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman's sarcasm is wasted on me.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not intend to be sarcastic.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman is not now addressing the House as a single Member, but he is the representative of the committee, and I am asking what, in his judgment, would be incompatible with the public interest if the Attorney General should give us what we ask for?

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is a question I can not answer because I do not know what will be done. It depends upon the temperament and good sense of the Department of Justice, and also upon the exigencies of the occasion. I can not forecast that; I am not a mind reader and I can not tell the gentleman.

I come now to the point that the Attorney General says he will give the information, but pending that he will suspend further investigation. And it was upon that the committee was unwilling to accept the conditions imposed in his reply. The committee said, "We are unwilling to accept from you any conditions which would relieve the Department of Justice from the responsibility of the prosecution of this case," but with the inexorable reservation that the House had and has the complete and ample right to deal with this matter in its own way and under its full constitutional powers. That is the condition and that is the way we met and surmounted it.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. What idea did the Assistant Attorney General give your committee about how soon he thought the Department of Justice could become active in this matter?

Mr. MONTAGUE. The committee had no information on that subject at all.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Has the gentleman any information?

Mr. MONTAGUE. None whatever. I have never knowingly seen the Attorney General of the United States.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Does the gentleman know whether there is now a grand jury in session in the District of Columbia?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I have heard there was none. I do not know whether that be true or not. All of these are questions as to the prosecution of the case I thought belonged to the judiciary department of the Government. I have never thought it was the function of the House of Representatives to supervise prosecutions, and therefore, for one Member, I was unconcerned about matters of that nature.

Now, gentlemen, I have taken, perhaps, more time than I should, but I would like to impress upon the gentlemen of the House my idea as to what is the conclusion of the committee, and that is that the committee did not intend to do anything else save what this resolution avers; that is, that the House will take no further action for the present to procure from the Attorney General the information heretofore requested. That is all. We are not estopped to institute an investigation or to establish the appropriate machinery for that investigation at this hour.

All we conclude is that we will not accept the Attorney General's reply with the limitations imposed by that reply. Therefore the committee has put itself in the position of leaving with the Department of Justice the things that belong to that department, reserving to ourselves all the powers and rights that belong to the legislative department of the Government.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will.

Mr. McKEOWN. Does not the resolution of the committee virtually say that this House has every confidence in these gentlemen and that they have not even violated the proprieties that would require an investigation?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not know that the resolution says or does not say that. It is susceptible of that interpretation, I would say, by the able gentleman from Oklahoma.

Now, gentlemen, I would add another word in the most unpresumptious spirit. I have been a Member of your House about 11 years. I have an exalted appreciation of this body. I have never seen a moment when I desired to impair, but rather to enhance, its dignity and its prestige among the people of America; but public agencies are no stronger than the public support they receive, especially the legislative department of the Government. The power of the official classes of America is a vague and futile power unless sustained by an enlightened, moral, intellectual public sentiment. [Applause.]

The dignity of this House is enhanced in following strictly its own constitutional pathway. We of this House are the legislative branch of the Government, and when we exercise judicial powers, such as the purging of our membership or the exculpation or the restoration of our membership, we have complete and ample power to do that, and this resolution has not interfered with our power at all.

We simply say to the Attorney General, "You go on with your work," and it follows as a necessary conclusion we can go on with ours in our own way as we see fit. I maintain that if we do that, we have preserved in full the beneficent separation of the departments of government, a policy that has so attracted the publicists and statesmen since our Government was founded, and that we thereby enhance the House's dignity, influence, and power among the American people [applause], which is far more important than the guilt or innocence of any Member of this body.

We all bear a certain modicum of odium by reason of what has been termed the blanket indictment of the House. This is unfortunate, but it is a circumstance that the House did not bring about. Unfortunately, the political department of our Government is the one great department that is always most subject to criticism. A great House of 435 Members very easily excites or provokes criticism. Its motives are very easily to be impugned, its conduct very easily to be misconstrued, but we must accept democratic or republican forms of government, with their advantages and disadvantages. We will have to work our institutions the best we can under the terms and nature of their organic life with patriotism and loyalty to these great organic commands, instructed by precedents and nourished by traditions.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that this committee, after a great deal of thought, adopted this report. The subcommittee spent the whole of the day immediately after this resolution was referred. We sat nearly the whole of Sunday and almost all day yesterday in full committee. There was not the purpose of a single member of that committee to do any injustice to any Member or to impair the dignity or to embarrass the freedom of this House.

We had only one course to pursue; a judicial course, in conformity to law, in conformity to the Constitution, and in conformity to plain, natural justice; and we have followed what Burke would call "virtuous expediency." [Applause.]

Mr. HOCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes.

Mr. HOCH. I have been impressed with the gentleman's argument and have a very high regard for his judgment.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. HOCH. I am wondering if the gentleman has reached a conclusion as to whether it would be wise, if this resolution were adopted, to follow it with an independent investigation on the part of the House, regardless of the Attorney General's investigation.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The gentleman will appreciate that I have been addressing myself to one line of thought, and that related to the report alone, and I have a delicacy at this particular juncture in advising the House what I think it should do when it takes up the matter independently. I simply wish to impress upon the House the fact that it has ample power to do what the gentleman suggests it may do.

Mr. HOCH. I do not mean to press the inquiry, but I would be glad to have the gentleman's judgment, if he cares to state it. Of course, if he does not care to state it or has not arrived at an opinion, I would not want to press the inquiry.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I would reply generally in this way, that the House should take appropriate action to see that no injustice is done any Member of this body and that full justice is done all the Members of this body. [Applause.]

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, no matter has been debated on the floor of this House since I have been here that has interested me quite as much as the matter we have been debating to-day. I believe that the hour has struck when we are to determine whether or not a Member of Congress, that body which has boasted to be the greatest legislative body in the world, is to go about feeling that he is a respected citizen, or is to walk about with his head hung in shame expecting everybody who sees him and recognizes him as a Member of Congress to be wondering what his police record is. It is said that there was a day when to be a Roman was greater than to be a king. There was a day when a man would throw out his chest and raise his head and strut about in this community and in his home community and boast that he was a Member of Congress, but now he must, because of this unprecedented situation, rest under the cloud of suspicion thrown over every Member of this body by the indefensible action of the agent of the Department of Justice in permitting the indiscriminate use of names of Members of this body in connection with grave charges.

Gentlemen, here is the situation. One of two things has happened. Either there are sitting in this great body two men who have been corrupted, or else a most outrageous crime has been committed against two Members of this body. That is simple. There can be no gainsaying that. Let me direct your attention to this. While I respect everything that my distinguished colleague, our ex-governor of Virginia, a Member of this body [Mr. MONTAGUE], has said about these two departments being distinct and separate, yet I respectfully suggest that this charge in that grand jury report in Chicago is almost tantamount to a direct charge coming from the Department of Justice against two Members of Congress. That is what it amounts to. Why? Because a representative of the Department of Justice was there supervising the proceedings in Chicago. If matters relating to the dishonesty of two Members of this House came up in that investigation, knowing that that grand jury had nothing to do with it, it was the least he could do to so advise the grand jury and prevent that thing going into the report, and come back to Washington, report to this House that we had two crooks in this body, and institute proceedings in the courts here.

Yet he does not do that. He allows a report to come in here that two Members of Congress are involved. Then the papers blossomed out and mentioned two Members of the House, and those two men get up on the floor and deny it altogether, and I submit to you that there is not a man here who heard their statements who will believe—I will not—that either Mr. ZIHLMAN or the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] is involved. I ask you, then, who under high heaven are these men that are involved? Talk about an investigation. Whom are you going to investigate until you know the two men the grand jury was talking about? You certainly would not in the face of the statements of Mr. LANGLEY and Mr. ZIHLMAN inaugurate investigations against them. They say that they are not guilty. There is nothing to investigate. But, gentlemen, there is a "nigger in the woodpile somewhere." I ask you to carefully read the statement of the Attorney General and to digest it.

Some people have more confidence in that gentleman's integrity than I have, and I have before expressed that on the floor of this House. I have very little confidence in any investigation or in any prosecution that Mr. Daugherty will ever make in this or any other case. I do not want to do the gentleman any injustice, and I say nothing that I am not willing to put into the RECORD on my responsibility as a Representative. I have no confidence in him. Mr. Daugherty is a discredited public official and is now merely being tolerated as a member of the Cabinet, and to-day he has himself all that he can do in taking care of the investigation of himself. He has not any time to investigate a Member of this body or anybody else. Here is what he says. He says, "I will not send you the two names and the charges against the two men, but I will tell you what I will do; I will send you all of the evidence in my various departments—all of the departments of justice—against all of your Members, 'any of your Members,' and when I dump that onto you I shall wash my hands of the whole mess." I submit that a fair construction of the reply of the Attorney General warrants the belief that he has charges against other Members of Congress than the two men referred to; and if it does not, then I can not read the English language and digest it. In my judgment the biggest issue before this body is to go into this matter without fear or favor. If there has been a violation of his office by a Member of this body, put him out of Congress, no matter who he is. If the report is untrue, then let the country know it and raise the cloud of suspicion that rests upon every Member of this body.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL].

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this is about the most remarkable situation of which I have ever known. I have had some experience as prosecuting attorney and in conducting cases before grand juries. I never knew a case until this one came to my attention in which a prosecuting attorney presented matters to a grand jury and had them made the subject of reports when such grand jury was without jurisdiction to deal with the questions raised. It is, to say the least of it, a most unusual transaction. It is not true that these matters were brought up by jurors not learned in the law and who did not understand that they were dealing with matters outside their authority, as has been suggested in this debate. This unusual action was brought about by the special agent of the Department of Justice. The report of the grand jury at Chicago, as carried in the press, specifically states that the charges involving Members of this House were developed by the special agent of the Department of Justice. Let me quote from that report:

> Incidental to the investigation of matters of which this grand jury had jurisdiction certain other facts not directly pertaining to the Veterans' Bureau were developed by counsel for the Government which we regard of great importance. There is no jurisdiction of them in the northern district of Illinois, but we are assured by Mr. Crim that he will lay them before the Attorney General and the President for consideration. We do not feel that it would subserve the best interests of the Government for this jury to make public at this time the details of these transactions. This jury feels it will suffice to report to your honor that they involve (1) speculation by one or more officials of the Government wherein it has been asserted that official information was used for purposes of speculation; (2) that certain sums of money were paid to Members of Congress.

In this report is the statement that the special agent of the Department of Justice had assured the grand jury that he would report these facts to the Attorney General and to the President. Gentlemen now insist that no such report was made to President Coolidge. I hold in my hand what purports to be an interview given out at the White House by the Secretary to the President to the effect that immediate instructions had been given to the Department of Justice to proceed diligently to prosecute the cases against the two Members of this House referred to in the Chicago grand jury report. The announcement from the White House is as follows, as published in the Washington Post:

The President immediately, on noting the newspaper reports this morning that evidence before the grand jury at Chicago mentioned two Members of Congress, gave immediate instructions to Mr. Seymour, Acting Attorney General, and reiterated the instructions again this evening to Mr. Seymour that prompt and immediate steps be taken to place the evidence before a grand jury, and that he proceed with every diligence with the prosecution of the cases.

I have a statement by Special Assistant Crim, in the same paper, and which has never been repudiated so far as I know, in which the statement is made that he proposed to continue the investigation and did not know how long it would take, and that he did not propose to divulge the information in his hand. The following is the statement of Mr. Crim:

I am working on all these matters; I can't finish them in a day. It may require many days for me to finish my investigation. As the situation develops, I will report from time to time to my superiors. I have not reported to them; I will not report to them unless they send for me until I have exhausted the entire situation; I do not propose at this time to make public what I have done and I do not propose to prophesy as to what I will do in the future.

In the face of all this, criticism is indulged against the press for carrying this news throughout the land. I think the press was entirely within their rights. I think the newspapers would have been derelict in their duty if they had not published all the facts to the country as they got them.

Is it not remarkable that the Attorney General should go out of his way to submit these charges and information to a grand jury in Chicago, which was entirely without jurisdiction, and then back off and refuse to give the information to the House of Representatives, which, under the Constitution, has got specific jurisdiction to deal with the entire matter, and which has the power and the duty to take the most important action that can be had by any tribunal? There is no conflict between the duty that should be exercised by this House and that which should be exercised by the courts. Each power is separate and distinct and has its own particular field of operation and usefulness. But we should not forget in considering this matter that any action that a grand jury may take this year or next year, or that a petit jury may take in the next year or three years, as the case may be, is a trifling thing compared to the importance of the proper exercise of the duties of this House under the Constitution to see to it that any corruption in our ranks is speedily exposed and punished.

I do not speak in a spirit of partisanship. We are dealing with things about which there is no room for anything of that sort. But I want to say that the thing in which the people of this country are interested above all things else is that official life in Washington shall be clean and above reproach. If Members of this House have been guilty of corruption, our first duty is to expose and punish them. If Members who are innocent are being falsely accused and their characters assailed, it is likewise our duty to take proper action for their protection. I have always been taught that it is the duty of any citizen to respond to a summons of any court at any time and give testimony that will be helpful to that tribunal in developing the proof and dealing justly with any matter under its jurisdiction. A good citizen should not wait for a summons if he has knowledge that is essential to the proper administration of justice. What would the country think if a Member of this House should attempt to refuse to furnish information gathered through congressional investigation when such information would be helpful to the courts in dealing with matters under their jurisdiction and in dispensing justice? The Attorney General is not alone bound in all good faith to prosecute these charges in the courts of the country, but he can not live up to his duty unless he brings to the aid of the House all knowledge and all information at his command that will be helpful to the House in dealing intelligently and justly with these charges, which involve so much to the honor and dignity of the House and to the welfare of the country. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair of course prefers to recognize members of the committee. The gentleman from South Carolina has 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania has 20 minutes.

Mr. DOMINICK. I was going to suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I have been using my time and he might use some of his, so as to have a little variety.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I understood there was some reserved for the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

The SPEAKER. There was no agreement made in the House at all. The parliamentary situation is this: The gentleman from Pennsylvania has 20 minutes remaining of his hour; the gentleman from South Carolina has 20 minutes remaining of his hour. The Chair feels he must recognize members of the committee as long as that time remains; and then if the House desires further debate, the Chair will recognize any gentleman claiming the floor.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What became of the request of the gentleman from Ohio to which I objected?

The SPEAKER. That was objected to.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That was a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON].

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I have listened with much interest to the many splendid arguments which have been made pro and con in reference to this resolution this afternoon. I have a high appreciation of the sentiments animating the minds of Members of this House in regard to this matter. I think we all feel a desire for a sincere criticism of the most severe kind of the person or persons who gave out that veiled and obscure information when it found its way to the grand-jury room in Chicago. That information, obtained as it was in another proceeding and based upon testimony or statements of a questionable character, should most assuredly have been kept in secret by the officials until its truth or falsity had been determined and until the department was ready to proceed, but that was not done. It was given out and by the publicity of that information a most serious reflection was directed against the integrity of every Member of this body, and it follows naturally that there should be a keen and earnest desire to investigate and bring out the true facts. That was the purpose of Resolution 211, and it was perfectly proper and within the province of the House to pass that resolution and the Attorney General made prompt answer to it. He has stated that he does not care to and he does not believe it is within the province of his official duty to give the names of those Members or to give the information now in possession of the Department of Justice, which means that he does not care to place the stamp of his office upon that information and thereby give further weight thereto. He further states, however, if we, exercising our rights, insist thereon, he will deliver to the House, or any committee designated, all information and papers in possession of his department, but in such event and during such investigation on the part of the House he will suspend his activities. That makes the issue clear as to whether we are going to further insist upon the surrender to us of this information or leave it with him to proceed with the investigation now in progress. Arguments have been advanced here this afternoon in reference to the rights of the House of Representatives. I do not consider that question enters into this case at all for the reason the Attorney General is willing to submit this information to us if we ask for it.

It has been suggested here on the floor, as I understood it, that this information has been given out to others by the department; that the President of the United States has the names of those Members. My information is to the effect—and I believe I am correctly informed—that the President does not have this information and does not know who the Members are, except as has been stated in the newspapers. Further, that the Attorney General himself has no official information as to who the Members are. We must bear in mind that Mr. Crim, who investigated the matter at Chicago, is special counsel, and therefore very likely did not report to the Attorney General. Now, as has been so ably pointed out here by others, what will be the result if we insist upon this information coming to us from the Attorney General. If we do this, we must proceed, and if we should fail to find evidence sufficient to sustain the charges intimated in the grand jury report, if we should fail in the prosecution, the people generally would feel that we had interfered with the department's orderly prosecution of these cases; that we had hindered and delayed, yes, defeated the due administration of justice by preventing that department from proceeding with the investigation now in hand.

In fact, our insistence upon the evidence and papers the Attorney General now has, in view of the statement in his reply, would give weight to the thought that the House did not wish to have the Department of Justice pursue this investigation further; that we are afraid of such an investigation. Further, and especially so, if the investigation we make should fail to substantiate the charges, it would immediately be claimed that we had dispossessed the Attorney General, who was making a real investigation; had "whitewashed" the accused and incidentally ourselves. The charges that were alluded to in the grand-jury report are serious and affect every Member of this House. We are entitled to and should have an investigation by a body separate and distinct from the House—an investigation free from the influence of the good fellowship that is naturally supposed to prevail between the membership of this House. The proper place, it appears to me, for that investigation is in the Department of Justice; it has the machinery to do so, detectives and special agents skilled and trained in the business of collecting and marshaling evidence; it is the department charged by the Constitution and laws with the prosecution of crimes and bringing to the bar of justice persons accused of crime.

These charges, if true, then the guilty ones should not only be deprived of membership in this House but should be given sentence in a degree commensurate with the offense committed. Only in a court of competent jurisdiction can this be done. All that the House could do with the offenders, if found guilty by us, would be expulsion from the House.

We should not be misled by any arguments as to the rights or authority between the House and the Department of Justice in this matter. Remember, the Attorney General does not decline to give the facts but states it would be embarrassing for two tribunals to conduct an investigation of the same matter at the same time. We should not take it away from him. If a crime or crimes of the serious import mentioned have been committed, the membership of this House and the people of this Nation are entitled to have the same sifted to the bottom and the guilty, if any, duly punished. That and nothing less will satisfy public opinion; nothing less should satisfy us. If guilty, suitable punishment; if innocent, vindication in a court of law. Therefore let us adopt the resolution of the Committee on the Judiciary and leave the matter with the Attorney General, and in so doing it does not preclude this House from taking such independent action as it may see fit; it does not foreclose us from any further steps or independent investigation this House may later conclude to make. I hope the report and resolution of the committee will have the approval of the House. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I desire again to prefer a unanimous-consent request. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] be extended 20 minutes, of which time he will yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], and, at the conclusion of the time of the gentleman from South Carolina, that the time of general debate shall close.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania be extended for 20 minutes with the condition as stated, and at the expiration of that time and the expiration of the time of the gentleman from South Carolina debate shall close. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] 15 minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I listened attentively, as I always do, with much pleasure, to the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE], who dealt largely in technicalities and discussed elaborately the constitutional divisions between the departments of our National Government. But, with entire respect for my distinguished friend, I do not think that the constitutional question as to the separation of the departments of the Government is of primary importance in the discussion of the pending question. Now, what is the question? Two Members of this body, the public press reports, are charged in the finding of a grand jury with having corruptly received money—that is with having taken bribes. The gentlemen thus accused have in open session of the House asked for an immediate hearing on those charges by a special committee; and yet the report of the Judiciary Committee which we are now considering says, "We will let Mr. Daugherty attend to your request when he gets ready."

Now, what a strange answer that is to give men who feel within themselves the stigma put upon every Member of the House by the finding of that grand jury in Chicago. Those two Members, Mr. LANGLEY and Mr. ZIHLMAN, both my friends, have risen here and forcefully and eloquently protested their innocence, and, as I repeat, demanded an immediate hearing. But we propose by adopting this resolution on what I think a mere quibble to deny them the privilege of a prompt trial, which you, sir, and you, and you, as honest men, would ask for yourselves if the accusation had been leveled against you.

Is there a man on this floor with a conscience so callous who, if he were named in the papers as having received money corruptly, would ask that his vindication be delayed until Mr. Daugherty should find time to act? You would, if innocent, arise, as these two men have arisen, and demand an immediate hearing. I can not understand how an innocent man, under circumstances like these, could ask for delay.

Now, in that connection I want to invite your attention to one or two things that have been said here which I think are erroneous and likely to mislead, although, of course, not so intended. It has been said here that if we should proceed with an examination, the Attorney General will do nothing more. And yet that is in direct contravention of the pledge, the written pledge, of the Attorney General himself. In his letter he says:

> If the House proceeds with this investigation, I shall direct all evidence, statements, and information obtainable to be immediately turned over to you or to such committee as may be designated by the House, and will await the complete investigation of the facts of the House before continuing the investigation now being made by the Department of Justice.

In other words, he will, he promises, let the House committee investigate and report, and then he will continue his own investigation. And yet the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] and others have intimated that the Attorney General will not do anything of the kind. I thought some of the gentlemen dealing with the political side ought to have said he will not. They have intimated, however, that Mr. Daugherty will break the promise he has made to the House. Gentlemen, this is no time for quibbling. The honor of this House and your individual honor has been openly attacked.

Now please listen to what the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], the leader on the floor, said on Thursday last:

> This morning two gentlemen connected with the Department of Justice, Mr. Crim and Mr. Seymour, now Acting Attorney General, requested an interview with the Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], and myself, in which they explained how this whole thing had arisen.

Why should those two officials seek three Members of this House in order to explain how this whole thing had arisen? Their business is in the Department of Justice, not down here seeking to extenuate and excuse the action of that grand jury. But they sought to explain to men who are of great influence on the floor of this House and in politics generally. They could not influence the gentlemen to whom they explained, of course; I know that. But it shows that as appointees they were thinking about their positions, and are afraid that politics will interfere with them.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Let me say, in view of the fact that the gentleman mentioned me now, and in view of the fact that I was at the conference, that I myself did not know of any particular reason why I should be there. There ought to have been at the beginning a subcommittee created on this matter. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is right.

But now, gentlemen, listen to this from the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH]. This is from the same speech of last week:

> Mr. Crim—

Mr. Crim, the man who conducted the investigation before the Chicago grand jury—> stated that a very large part of the evidence used in investigating the War Veterans' Bureau case came from crooks and criminals who were turning State's evidence.

Now, why should Mr. Crim tell these three prominent gentlemen of the House the things he told them about the Government witnesses upon whose testimony the former Director of the Veterans' Bureau was indicted?

Why should this same Mr. Crim, the Government's lawyer, brand his own witnesses as crooks and criminals who have turned State's evidence? Mr. Forbes is to be tried. Millions of dollars have been taken from the Veterans' Bureau funds. The people of the United States feel a sense of indescribable outrage that helpless veterans have, as is apparently well established, been taken advantage of and the Treasury robbed by villains in the Veterans' Bureau. Some of them have been indicted. And yet Mr. Crim, in charge of the prosecution, comes here and announces that the witnesses are crooks and criminals. Whatever his motive in saying these things about his own witnesses, he ought to be reminded that crooks and criminals in carrying out their schemes usually deal with other crooks and criminals. What a preposterous thing it is for him to be explaining the finding of an indictment out there and apologizing for the report and suggestions made by that grand jury! And then Mr. LONGWORTH goes on to say:

The whole thing would not be so bad, gentlemen, if the Department of Justice had its case ready for immediate presentation, but Mr. Crim and Mr. Seymour were unable to assure us of any trial of these two Members of Congress for weeks to come, because the matter must be brought before a grand jury impaneled in the District of Columbia; their evidence is not ready and many of their witnesses, being crooks and criminals, are not immediately available because they do not know where they are or whether they can get them.

Later he says:

Gentlemen, that is the position this House is in to-day, with these gross slurs and insinuations cast upon Members of our body and no assurance whatever that anything is going to be done within months from now. We thought this morning—the Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], and I—that we ought to take action at once. Here is a grand jury that presents to a court a statement which is made public and that among other persons suspected are two Members of Congress, but they decline to reveal their names.

And still later, said the gentleman from Ohio:

That will be for the House, in its wisdom, to decide; but that can not come until later. I am talking about what we ought to do here and now in order to purge the House of these charges.

Yet the pending report says:

We will pay no attention to it, but leave it all to Mr. Daugherty.

Do you want a charge that you, a national lawmaker, are a bribe taker, to be left to Mr. Daugherty before your honor shall be vindicated? Mr. Daugherty says that, whatever this House does, he will proceed with this investigation. Therefore why should we delay for one minute?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The committee says it will only leave with Mr. Daugherty the names and the charges, and that is all that was asked of Mr. Daugherty.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I know; but the committee was authorized, by the motion made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], to make such recommendations as it might see fit to make. This is Mr. LONGWORTH's language:

Mr. Speaker, I move that the communication of the Attorney General be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to report at the earliest possible moment its conclusions and such recommendations as it may see fit to make.

So the committee could have made any recommendation it might wish to make. It could have recommended the appointment of a committee, but it did not. It simply recommended that the House do nothing.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] has asked for an immediate hearing and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN] has asked for an immediate hearing. Their names are besmirched. We are asked to refuse their request. And the evidence is that whatever is done is to be done by Mr. Crim, and that it will be months before anything can be done. Is that just to ZIHLMAN? Is that just to LANGLEY? Is it just to you? [Applause.] Both have said here on this floor, "We are not guilty," and with hands raised to heaven have appealed to the God omnipotent to bear witness to the truth of their declarations of innocence. They want a hearing, and why should we deny it to them?

Gentlemen, I have had many astonishing propositions presented by committees on this floor, but in view of the circumstances in this case, in view of the publicity given the names of these two men—in whose innocence we must believe until they are proven guilty; we do believe they are innocent—it is wrong for us to say that we will pay no attention to their demands, but that we will let it go for weeks, probably for months, until such time as Mr. Daugherty may get ready to act. What recourse have they? Take it home to yourself. A just man considers the rights of his neighbor as sacred as are his own, and if your good name as a Member of the House were thus jeopardized, what would you say to a man who, when you should demand an immediate hearing and opportunity for vindication, denied it to you and turned your plea over to Mr. Daugherty? What you would demand for yourself you ought not to deny to a fellow Member. Every Member of the House should be possessed of what Burke calls, "that chasity of honor which feels a stain like a wound." [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HERSEY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Judiciary Committee, which had this resolution under consideration and made the report to the House, I want to make a statement for myself alone.

I am a lawyer of 40 years at the bar, and I look at things from a lawyer's standpoint, and I must necessarily. This is strictly a matter of plain business without sympathy; we have before us the plain facts and our plain duty. If there is one prayer to-day that any Member of this House should make who feels himself under accusation, it is, "O God, save me from my friends." In this time when we get excited, when we lose our heads and everybody in public life is being accused of wrongdoing, we ought to act judicially and act upon our oaths here as Members of this House.

I can add very little to the judicial interpretation of this matter which has been given by my friend from Virginia, Judge MONTAGUE, whom I greatly love and admire. He has stated the facts to you much better than I could along the line he has pursued.

I wish to briefly say this: When this matter is ended in this House and in the courts of this land, I want a verdict from both the House and the courts not only reliably and honestly arrived at, but I want it to be absolute and conclusive, so that the people shall be satisfied that justice has been done all Members accused of any wrongdoing.

Now, there is somebody back home watching us here. The first question they are going to ask us is, "Are you going to whitewash yourselves?" The second question they are going to ask is, "Is the Department of Justice going to do its duty and treat Members of this House the same as everybody else?" There are two departments of this Government under the eyes of the people to-day—the Department of Justice and the House of Representatives, and we both ought to act in our own jurisdiction. The Attorney General was right when he said there can not be two tribunals attempting to act upon the same facts, and attempting to hear the same witnesses at the same time, such an attempt would result in confusion and embarrassment and will defeat the ends of justice.

We have by resolution passed yesterday given to the Attorney General full power and jurisdiction over this matter with special instructions to go ahead at once with the investigation which he says is now being conducted by his department. To-day we are asking the Attorney General to hand us over the evidence and names of witnesses, that a committee to be appointed by this House may take this matter away from the grand jury and the courts and make ourselves ridiculous in the eyes of the country. I want you to think this over carefully, and as men without any prejudices. When you have obtained that information, what are you going to do with it? Let us assume the Attorney General gives the information, and that information states that the two Members of this House accused are HERSEY of Maine and MONTAGUE of Virginia. Having that information, what are you going to do about it?

Well, I suppose the first thing to be done, if you are going to pursue the course that the House is now about to, would be to take up the matter and to refer it to a select committee of this House, which committee would investigate the truth of the information you have received. You go ahead with the investigation. If you find that HERSEY and MONTAGUE are not guilty, the whole country would say, "They whitewashed their Members." And I would not stand for it and you would not stand for it. You would not stand for such a vindication as that, and my friends ZIHLMAN and LANGLEY ought not to stand for anything of the kind, and we are not their friends, in my opinion, who advise them to do that. They are presumed to be innocent and stand before the House and the country as innocent. You want to remember the fact that the matter is in the Department of Justice to-day being investigated and we ought to await the final action of the courts.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the Constitution of the United States provides that this House shall have the power to punish its Members for disorderly conduct, and to expel or suspend them if it finds it is wise or desirable to do so. The exercise of that power under the Constitution was made independent of any court action. It was placed in the House of Representatives to be exercised by this body free from any outside influence or agency. There is no provision of limitation that only after conviction in the courts the House may expel or suspend Members, but the provision is that the House in its own right, whenever it may find just cause, may expel or suspend its Members. And why was it so provided? It was so provided, not for the purpose of visiting private punishment upon the Members of this House for the commission of crime but the reason why that provision was included in the Constitution was to give this body, independent of any court, and independent of every other branch of government, the power to preserve the purity of this Chamber and the power to keep its reputation spotless and so to deserve and preserve the confidence of the public in this body. The integrity of the House of Representatives, the confidence of the public in its membership and in its honesty and honor, and the high privilege of the House to expel and punish Members guilty of wrongdoing, transcend in importance the infliction of private punishment of an individual in the courts. For such reasons the Constitution gives such power to this House

And so it provides a method whereby this House could preserve its own dignity and could hold the confidence and the respect of the people whom we represent. In the exercise of that power the other day the House of Representatives passed a resolution directing the Attorney General to transmit to this House the names, not the evidence, but the names and the nature of the offenses alleged to have been committed by two Members of this House—alleged not by some private individual but by the Department of Justice. In the exercise of our constitutional power we called on the Department of Justice to give us that information; and what do we have in reply? We have a communication in response to that demand to the effect that the Attorney General will transmit to the House the information called for only upon a condition prescribed by the Attorney General himself—he will comply with the demand of the House if the House will appoint a committee, and if we do appoint a committee he will transmit the names and the charges to that committee and will then undertake to wash his hands of responsibility to perform his own duty. Gentlemen say the divulgence to the House of the names and the character of the charges will interfere with the investigation by the Department of Justice of a criminal offense. I want to remind gentlemen of the House that the Attorney General's department divulged the names to the President of the United States. It was so published in the papers and some one gave out a statement from the White House. That did not disturb the prosecution in the courts. The White House gave out a statement directing the Attorney General to prosecute these Members. That did not disturb the Attorney General. Some one, presumably the Attorney General's office or some of his employees, gave the information to gentlemen sitting yonder in that press gallery. That did not disturb the course of the Department of Justice in the prosecution of these Members; but the Attorney General makes a reply to this House that in a manner is insulting to its dignity, because he essays to prescribe the terms and the conditions upon which he will divulge this information. Now, there is no conflict in the two jurisdictions. One is a criminal prosecution of individuals in a court; the other involves the conduct of Members and their right to sit in this House.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I yield.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. DOMINICK. I yield the gentleman two minutes additional.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is it not the meaning of the Attorney General's statement, in the latter part of his letter, that if the Congress proceeds to perform its duty, he will refuse to perform his duty? [Applause.]

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Exactly. I will say that the gentleman from Tennessee has placed his finger upon the very heart of this question. Gentlemen in this House on the Judiciary Committee acknowledge that it is the right and the duty of the House to investigate the accused Members, and yet acknowledging that it is our duty, acknowledging that we possess the power, they are willing to abdicate that power because the Attorney General says that if the House exercises its power and its duty he will fail and refuse to perform his duty.

Mr. HERSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Not for a moment. If the gentleman will give me the time, I would like to have two more minutes.

Mr. THOMAS of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I want to say that the duty of this House is to perform its own duty first, and if the Department of Justice, as an excuse for its action, fails to perform its duty, the House of Representatives then has a remedy by which it can hold responsible the Department of Justice for dereliction of its duty. I yield now to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. THOMAS of Kentucky. I wish to say to the gentleman from Texas that so far as I am concerned regarding his remarks about the Judiciary Committee the gentleman is covering a little too much territory. I did not sign that report. [Applause.]

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I will absolve the gentleman from Kentucky.

The duty of this House is to perform its function and its responsibility to the country first, and if the Department of Justice does not want to perform its functions and its duty and its responsibility we can take care of that question when we meet it. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. DOMINICK. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, if I have the opportunity, I intend to vote for the substitute or motion submitted by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DOMINICK]. I am sorry that the Judiciary Committee did not avail itself of the privilege it had of recommending that a special committee be created for the purpose of trying this case. I am glad that the majority leader has suggested what in all probability is in the minds of a good many of his friends on the Democratic side and, I hope, in the minds of a good many on the Republican side, and that is the appointment of a special committee to try this case at once without regard to any action that may be taken by the Attorney General.

We are quibbling, gentlemen, with a situation with which we should not quibble. We ought to appoint a special committee with full powers to administer oaths, to summon persons and papers, to bring the judge of the court to which this report was made, to bring the report itself to us, to summon the members of the grand jury and to secure from them a list of the witnesses that attended that court, and thereby get to the very bottom of this whole situation. [Applause.]

It has been intimated in more or less clear language that the report of the grand jury referred to in these proceedings and discussions is to some extent and for some unassigned and unfathomable reason more or less of a frame up for the purpose of ruining two Members of Congress and directing the finger of suspicion at the whole body with a view of effecting results more or less vague. The gentlemen charged or accused have intimated it, and rumor, which hath so many evil tongues, has alleged in colorful stories.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. No; I have only five minutes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I just wanted to ask the gentleman if the resolution prohibited you from doing that if you wanted to do it.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. I understand the resolution. What is the use of quibbling with a situation when it is within the power of this House to free itself from any slurring insinuations that may be cast upon it throughout the length and breadth of this country? Of course it is desirable, and everyone knows it, to prosecute criminal cases through the Department of Justice, and thousands and thousands of cases are being prosecuted successfully and unsuccessfully throughout the length and breadth of this land, and they do not create a ripple on the sea of American life; but the suggestion that has been carried broadcast throughout this country that corruption and crookedness is rampant in Congress does mean a great deal to this House and to the American people.

Higher and above the rights of any man before a criminal court and the privileges of the Department of Justice or any other prosecuting agency are the rights and the obligations of this House to maintain itself free from unfair and unjust criticism at all times, and it is only by taking proper procedure that it can maintain that course. If representative government is to last, if the Republic is to endure, its temples of liberty and freedom, the House and Senate must remain pure and unsullied, unstained and untarnished, and, like Cæsar's wife, be above suspicion.

Why, Mr. Chairman, our course is clear. A special committee with full power to act in the case should be appointed that will investigate it from end to end and give to the country what these two accused men are themselves demanding—a fair and square trial for themselves, expeditiously carried out, and a fair and square trial for this House, whose honor, whose prestige, whose history, and whose glory must be maintained by the eternal vigilance to keep it free from stain or stigma or discolorization. The reputation of this House is higher and above the mere privileges that a man might claim for himself in a criminal proceeding or that the Department of Justice arrogates to itself.

Transcending immeasurably the outcome of any prosecution that may be instituted in the courts by the Government is the sacred duty to retain the confidence of the people. "Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members," saith the Constitution. That is not a direction to the Attorney General as to what he should or should not do in the conduct of his office. It is a solemn mandate to the House and Senate—to "each House," to use the language of the Constitution—to maintain inviolate the honor, the integrity, the grandly magnificent place in the soul of America, a representative assembly, free from blemish, unscarred, undimmed, "Sans peur et sans raproche"—without fear and without reproach.

And that mandate can be discharged only by trying Members who are so unfortunate as to be mentioned in such a way as to make themselves and Congress the subject of national conversation and comment. The two gentlemen are everlastingly right in demanding an immediate trial from the House. The House would be recreant to its duty to the country and its own splendid history if it did not move up and show the American people whom we represent that we are alive to the maxim that the honor of Congress is the sacred trust of its Members.

These two Members, I repeat, are right in crying for a trial by their peers in this House at once. Let the committee be appointed and if found innocent let the vindication of rumor's victims go to the world. If found guilty, let them be expelled. That is the course suggested by themselves. I hope for these men's sake, for their families, and above everything else for the honor of this House that the alleged charges will prove to be the vilest of villifications. I do not want to be misunderstood. I know I will not be misunderstood. I thoroughly understand the presumption of innocence. It goes with a person charged with a criminal act from the time that he is charged until he is found guilty, and in proportion to the enormity of the offense committed is that presumption enlarged, increased, and accentuated. It is far greater in a capital offense than in misdemeanor. It is greater still when it affects the honor of a Member of Congress and the historic and honorable traditions of a great House. But correlatively there is the great duty resting upon us of preserving against unjust criticism the reputation of this House and its rights to keep it free from evil judgment, to keep itself free from stigma, by prompt and decisive action when the circumstances warrant it. If we hesitate, if we deal in attenuated refinements of historical traditions, procrastinate and quibble over precedents, the country will have a right to believe that we are faltering, that we are dallying with a situation that demands immediate action. That special committee ought to be appointed, it ought to be given full power to act, and I hope the minority leader will crystallize his thought into parliamentary action.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does the gentleman think that the substitute resolution will give us immediate action?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. No; but it will do a lot more than the majority resolution will.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Oh, no; the majority gives us every right that the gentleman wants. The House can establish its committee any time it gets ready to do so.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. The committee should have recommended the establishment of an independent committee, as was suggested by the last speaker.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. In order to get my substitute properly before the House so as not to be precluded by a motion for the previous question, will I not have to formally offer it and present it in my own time?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will.

Mr. DOMINICK. Then I offer that resolution now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman presents a substitute resolution which has already been reported. Does the gentleman wish to have it reported again?

Mr. DOMINICK. I should be glad to have it again reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the substitute.

The Clerk again reported the Dominick resolution.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. MCSWAIN.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I wish merely to submit this observation, that the Judiciary Committee, by its chairman, has asked us to take as facts in connection with the credibility of Mr. Crim certain things that are entirely outside of the record and are contrary to the opinion as to the reliability and credibility of this same man, brought upon the floor of this House several days ago by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING], who said upon his responsibility here that Mr. Crim was the man who gave away the Government's case in what is known as the Harness case. As a result of the investigation by the Graham committee, charges were preferred, in nature a conspiracy, to the effect that certain Army officers, who had held temporary commissions in time of war, had resigned from their positions as Army officers, and had gotten together on the outside and formed a sort of roll-top desk corporation, calling themselves the "United States Harness Co.," and had gone back to the other officers as though they were bona fide civilians, and made a deal with their friends and associates still remaining as Army officers on the inside. What do the records of the Department of Justice show?

The report of the eminent counsel from St. Louis, who tried that case, shows that when it was tried in Clarksburg last month some of these Army officers and their friends and associates were there creating sentiment in the hotel and in the community, seeking to bring about the acquittal of the men so charged. Mr. King said the defendants did not constitute all that ought to have been indicted in order to establish conspiracy. Some of the conspirators to this movement to defraud our Government were not indicted. Such things as that are what constitute the gravamen of the complaint of the ex-service men for adjustment of compensation. When they realize that they and their children and their grandchildren have to pay the $23,000,000,000 still piled up as war obligations of the Nation, and when they realize that they have been cheated by those who were trusted to protect the Treasury of this Government in time of war and in settling the accounts of the Government after war, then they say that this demand for adjustment of compensation is the only possible public protest, the only public evidence of their righteous indignation against the way the rights of the people and the resources of the Public Treasury were squandered in time of war.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to indulge in any criticism of the Attorney General in a personal way, nor of the assistant of the Department of Justice who seems to have had charge of affairs before the Chicago grand jury when the report which occasioned this condition was made. We are confronted, as I have said in the discussions before, with a very delicate situation, but it is one with which we have to deal. I can not agree with the statement made in the report of the Committee on the Judiciary as it appears near the top of the first column on page 3929 of the RECORD under the head "Conclusions." Under that head we find the following:

> Under the reply of the Attorney General there is but one of two courses open to the House of Representatives:
> (a) The House take full charge of the investigation and evidence of the alleged charges and relieve the Department of Justice from any further responsibility.

I can not agree to that. As a legal proposition, with all due deference to the learned gentlemen who are members of that committee, the great law committee of the House, it is incorrect. The Attorney General was not justified in saying in his letter to the House of Representatives in substance: "If you insist upon obtaining from this department certain evidence with which to prosecute your inquiries under your constitutional power, obligation, and duty, I shall refuse to perform my duties as a statutory officer of the head of the Department of Justice." And that was what I had in mind when I interrogated the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] in his opening remarks.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. The gentleman says that the Attorney General said that he would refuse to discharge his duties.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is the meaning of it.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Let me quote from the Attorney General's letter:

> If, however, the House of Representatives * * * requests that all the evidence now in the possession of anyone connected with the Department of Justice shall be turned over, I will direct all such evidence * * * to be turned over * * * and will wait the complete investigation of the facts of the House before continuing the investigation now being made by the Department of Justice.

Is that cutting off his liability or responsibility?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I can see no reason why the Department of Justice should wait.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. As an act of courtesy when we were pursuing the investigation here. Of course he would have to wait.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Not at all, because he is proceeding along lines of criminal prosecution, while the House is proceeding along lines of ascertaining whether its Members have been guilty of conduct that would require the House to purge itself of them. [Applause.]

I have been greatly puzzled over this matter, Mr. Speaker. It has been a troublesome proposition. I think I shall have to vote for the substitute offered by the gentleman from South Carolina. But let me say this before my time has ended. The House is coming back within a few days, if not now—I think we might as well do it after we have disposed of this resolution this evening—to an acceptance of the proposition that ought to have been accepted in the beginning and which if accepted would have relieved the House of all the embarrassment that it is in now, and that is the creation of a special committee to investigate the conduct of its Members, and whichever of the propositions pending may be adopted, that proposition must follow and follow very quickly. [Applause.]

Mr. THOMAS of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will I ever get the floor? I am on the committee.

The SPEAKER. By vote of the House all time is exhausted except 15 minutes, which is controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, you will be asked in a few minutes to vote for the adoption of the committee's resolution or the adoption of the substitute which has been offered, which means simply to refer this back to the Attorney General and insist upon a more complete answer. I desire within my time to suggest the adoption of a second resolution which is an amendment to the committee's resolution which was agreed to by a majority of the committee and only withdrawn out of deference to one, and I hand this amendment to the Clerk to be read.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman offer the amendment?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I do.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Resolved, That in view of its extreme importance to the House the Attorney General be, and is hereby, requested to proceed at once and give preference and precedence to this investigation and report the result to this House.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Now, it is immaterial to me——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield to me in reference to the amendment?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Not now.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. All right. First, I wish to say that there has been a degree of personal criticism and allusion inserted into this debate that ought to have had no place in it. I want to say to the Members of the House, so far as Mr. Crim is concerned and the discussion of these leather frauds the gentlemen referred to, that there was a distinguished Democratic lawyer, one of the very best for the purpose, allowed by the Attorney General to prosecute that case to its finality.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. And Mr. Crim had no responsibility for it, he assures me absolutely.

Mr. McSWAIN. Has the gentleman seen the report of the distinguished gentleman, the attorney who tried the case?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I decline to yield. If I were standing here as a brother of the men whose names have now been connected with this matter, and moved with the strongest personal affection existing between men, I ask what course would and ought I to pursue. Advise an investigation by this House? Nothing of the kind. I would ask the Attorney General to proceed at once and give us the result of that investigation, which in all human probability will clear everybody and the House itself of every question and imputation. I would say that the proceeding by a committee of this House might appear to be the proper thing in the enthusiasm of friendship, but it is an injustice to the men you would serve. What avails an acquittal at the hands of their colleagues in the House if the matter is not carried out to its conclusion and determined according to law and the facts? A whitewash by his colleagues would be no justification to a man accused if the case itself should proceed to a finality that was different from that conclusion which the House had reached. Gentlemen, I say be patient; I say be temperate. Exercise your calm judgment, and without prejudice give this matter a fair consideration. Let this resolution be adopted calling upon the Attorney General to complete this work at once. If he does not, then the remedy is in your hands and can be rightfully pursued. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time, except a half minute, to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH]. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for ten and a half minutes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I believe it to be my duty both as a Member in my private capacity and also in my capacity as majority leader, which I hold by virtue of the expressed confidence of my colleagues, to support the report of the Committee on the Judiciary. I regret I can not agree with my friend, the gentleman from Tennessee, for I know that his position, like mine, is actuated only by a desire best to maintain the honor and dignity of this House. I hope we can consider this question without any partisan or personal feeling. No man holds in higher esteem the two gentlemen whose names have become regretfully conspicuous in this affair than I. I will go even further and say that I have absolute and complete confidence in the integrity of both the gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from Maryland. [Applause.] I want to do not only what is best for this House but what is best for them, and I am certain that the best thing we can do is not to act hastily in this matter. I agree with my friend from Tennessee that the inevitable result of voting down the recommendation of the Committee on the Judiciary is to have an independent investigation by a committee appointed by this House——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman agree with me further that if the report of the Committee on the Judiciary is adopted it will also be necessary to have an investigation?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I should doubt that, I say to my friend, because I am in hope that if we do not now interfere with the course the Department of Justice is expected to pursue we will have it in our hands, if there is any undue delay in the prosecution of this case, to demand a committee which will investigate this matter on our own account.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman from Ohio permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes; but I have only a short time.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will be brief. Does the gentleman believe that the adoption of this report will preclude an investigation by the House?

Mr. LONGWORTH. No; I want to make it clear that if there is any delay, any unreasonable delay, in the prosecution of these cases on the part of the Department of Justice, I shall be glad to advocate the creation of a committee to investigate on the part of the House. [Applause.]

Now, let us look the facts squarely in the face. The only reason we have to ask for this evidence now in possession of the Department of Justice is to exercise our constitutional right to punish Members; to criticize their course, not to approve it. I am not willing to say that an investigation of this sort would result in the punishment of two Members of this House. As I said before, my belief is that their records are absolutely clean. What, then, can it advantage us or them if we delay—as we must inevitably delay if we demand for the prosecution of this case—the evidence in the possession of the Department of Justice?

What are the facts in this whole unfortunate matter? The facts are that this jury in Illinois, which had no possible jurisdiction in this case, insisted that a supplemental report be drafted and submitted to the judge of the northern district of Illinois urging that other cases involving turpitude, among them these accusations against two Members of Congress, be prosecuted in another jurisdiction. Personally I think it was an outrage that that report was ever made public. [Applause.] The moment it became public it was inevitable that the names of these two unnamed Members of Congress would leak out and everybody would know it.

I do not know whose fault it was, but certainly had that been a sealed report this situation never would have confronted us. But it does confront us now. How are we going to benefit the situation, gentlemen, by demanding our constitutional right to get this evidence in order to punish or expel Members—because that is the only reason we have for demanding this evidence from the Department of Justice? In my view a demand to take over and inspect that evidence and proceed on our own account can do nothing else but delay the inevitable conclusion of this unfortunate affair. We can not go ahead as two coordinate branches of the Government, acting upon the same evidence and summoning the same witnesses.

I do not believe, reasoning it out calmly, that would be the best thing either for the majority of this House or for the two gentlemen who have been named. I can not tell, I have no means of knowing, how long it may take the department to proceed in this investigation. We could get no definite assurance from Mr. Crim or from the Acting Attorney General. I would hope that it would not take a long time, particularly now that they well know that Congress is going to insist that there shall be no delay in this matter.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. DYER. I will say that my information is that the matter will be finished or in shape so that the House may know the situation within two weeks.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Well, I am very glad to hear that from the gentleman, and I hope his information is accurate; but whether it be true or not is it not best to proceed in an orderly way, to wit, by allowing the Department of Justice to go ahead?

I think we accomplished a great result by passing the resolution instructing the Attorney General to reveal the names and offenses, regardless of whether he has seen fit to comply with our direction or not, because to-day, as the result of all this hallabaloo, there are but two names which have been mentioned—mentioned by the gentlemen themselves. There is not another man upon whom the faintest aspersion has been cast in the whole House of Representatives. Under these circumstances is not the safe and wise thing to do, gentlemen, to allow this matter to proceed in due course, reserving to ourselves always the right, when it shall appear to us that there is any undue delay, to at once create a committee of this House to proceed with an investigation on its own account? [Applause.]

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question upon the resolution reported by the Committee on the Judiciary and all amendments or substitutes therefor to final passage.

Mr. THOMAS of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for seven minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] moves the previous question on the resolution and all amendments.

Mr. THOMAS of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I want unanimous consent to address the House for seven minutes. I am a member of this committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to address the House for seven minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, when will that point of order be considered?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will now hear the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I make a point of order on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Tennessee later. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The next question comes upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That in view of its extreme importance to the House, the Attorney General be, and is hereby, requested to proceed at once and give preference and precedence to this investigation and report the results to this House.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that it is not germane to the resolution before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The resolution before the House reads:

Resolved, That the House take no more action for the present.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman permit me to add one word to the resolution by unanimous consent? Add the words "And be it further resolved." That is the way I want to have the resolution read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment in the manner indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The only thing before the House for action, so far as the report of the Judiciary Committee is concerned, is a simple resolution containing a very few lines.

Resolved, That the House take no further action for the present to procure from the Attorney General the information heretofore requested of the Attorney General under House Resolution 211.

There was nothing whatever in House Resolution 211 which in any way referred to prosecutions or investigations by a grand jury or any procedure whatever in the courts of the United States, except the grand jury that heard the case in Chicago. Therefore, all that House Resolution 211 contained was a request for certain names or, rather, directed the submission of certain names and the nature of the charges against them.

Now, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] proposes to expand the committee proposition so as to go far beyond anything that was contained in resolution 211, upon which it is based, which resolution directed the Attorney General of the United States to do certain things.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, I pass by the humiliating situation in which the House would place itself if the House itself asked the Attorney General to do that which it refuses to do, namely, to make an investigation of its Members. [Applause.] But, Mr. Speaker, I rest upon the parliamentary ground that it is not germane to the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the objection made is extremely technical. The resolution is not based entirely on Resolution 211, but it is based explicitly on the letter from the Attorney General which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary with instructions to report thereon. The action of that committee was based on the letter from the Attorney General. In that letter the Attorney General specifically speaks of the investigation being made by him. I forget whether he speaks of a grand jury or not, but he does say that there can not be two proceedings at once, one by a committee of the House and another by the courts, and one of the objections to the inquiry was that the tribunals under his jurisdiction were also investigating. So the Chair thinks the amendment is pertinent, relevant, and germane to the resolution. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, may I have unanimous consent to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] one question.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered, and, of course, that is not in order except by unanimous consent.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I ask for unanimous consent simply to make an inquiry that will not take a quarter of a minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to address the House for a quarter of a minute. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The question first comes on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, may we have the amendment again reported?

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to that amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee) there were—ayes 129, noes 123.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield? I hope the gentleman will not ask for the yeas and nays. We ought not to have any division on this question, and I am perfectly willing to accept any vote either by tellers or otherwise. I think it would be a mistake to have any division.

Mr. TUCKER. Then withdraw the amendment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think it is a great mistake to offer the amendment. It has changed the whole idea. I am willing to take a teller vote on it but I also reserve the right to call for the yeas and nays after the teller vote.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Well, if the gentleman thinks that is advisable, all right.

Mr. ROUSE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 178, nays 162, answered "present" 1, not voting 90, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DOMINICK].

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the substitute be again reported.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the substitute will be again reported.

There was no objection.

The Clerk again reported the substitute.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DOMINICK].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DOMINICK) there were—ayes 143, noes 177.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 152, nays 184, answered "present" 3, not voting 92, as follows:

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee demands the yeas and nays.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, when is it in order to move to recommit?

The SPEAKER. It was in order before this vote was taken.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, this was not a bill reported from the Committee of the Whole. Is it now in order to make a motion to recommit?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has put the question on agreeing finally to the resolution, and the gentleman from Tennessee has demanded the yeas and nays. Obviously, it is too late. The gentleman from Tennessee demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 222, nays 108, answered "present" 4, not voting 97, as follows:

So the resolution was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

On the vote:

Mr. Davis of Minnesota (for) with Mr. Linthicum (against).
Mr. Porter (for) with Mr. Black of New York (against).
Mr. Greene of Massachusetts (for) with Mr. Dickstein (against).
Mr. Edmonds (for) with Mr. Boylan (against).

Mr. Snell (for) with Mr. Pou (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. Wason with Mr. Rogers of New Hampshire.
Mr. Shreve with Mr. Sears of Florida.
Mr. Cable with Mr. Kunz.
Mr. Wertz with Mr. Clancy.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I have a pair with the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. POU, and I desire to withdraw my vote of "yea" and answer "present."

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "yea."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present, listening, when his name was called?

Mr. KING. I heard my name called on the electrical device as I was coming through the hall below in the basement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not bring himself within the rules.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed and to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I object. I think we may have to have a division of the question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee objects.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have offered a privileged resolution, and possibly after that is disposed of there will be no objection to the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman be willing to let that go over until to-morrow?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am going to take the ruling of the Speaker on the proposition of whether the resolution I offer is privileged.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, in time I shall ask recognition to call up a conference report.

The SPEAKER. Of course, a conference report is of the very highest privilege; but perhaps this resolution is also privileged. The Chair will examine the resolution.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I think it should be reported.

The SPEAKER. This resolution is in connection with the same subject which the House has been considering and, of course, it is a matter of the privilege of the House. The Chair is not certain which is of the highest privilege—a conference report or the resolution.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, could we not have the resolution read for information?

The SPEAKER. The conference report has not been read, either. The Chair thinks the motion to reconsider comes first. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed and to lay that motion on the table. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Do I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the ruling of the Chair is that this resolution which I send to the desk is privileged?

The SPEAKER. That is the ruling of the Chair. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 217.

Whereas a grand jury of the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois, southern division, impaneled at the February term, 1924, has reported to that court that certain evidence has been submitted to them involving the payment of money to two Members of Congress;

Whereas the honor and dignity of the Congress require that the facts be immediately ascertained, to the end that such action as is essential for the Congress itself to take may be promptly taken: Therefore be it

Resolved, That a select committee of five Members of the House shall be appointed by the Speaker thereof whose duty it shall be to proceed forthwith to make an investigation of such allegation and ascertain—

(a) Whether said "two Members of Congress" so charged are Members of the House of Representatives; and

(b) If so, to make such further investigation as may be essential to establish the truth or falsity of said allegation.

Said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers and administer oaths and shall be permitted to sit during the sessions of the House and any recess thereof and at such place or places as may be necessary to discharge the duties herein imposed.

Resolved further, That the Speaker is hereby authorized to issue subpœnas to witnesses upon the request of the committee or any subcommittee thereof at any time, including any recess of the Congress; and the Sergeant at Arms is hereby empowered and directed to serve all subpœnas and other processes put into his hands by said committee or any subcommittee thereof.

Resolved further, That said committee shall report to the House as promptly as possible the results of its inquiries together with such recommendations as it may deem advisable.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order on the resolution that the subject matter upon which this motion rests for its privileged status has already been subject to action by the House and has been disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear the reading of the resolution, but just looked at it, and while it was being read the Chair has been examining the precedents on the question of which has the highest privilege, such a motion or a conference report.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman has made the point of order that it is not privileged at all, now let me say if it be privileged—and I think the Speaker indicated it was——

The SPEAKER. It seemed so to the Chair.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. So far as I am concerned I am willing for it to go over until to-morrow and have a vote upon it and give way to the other matter.

Mr. SNELL. I think it would be better.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Would the gentleman be satisfied to have it referred to the Committee on Rules?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It has been before the Committee on Rules substantially.

Mr. SNELL. That exact resolution has not been considered, I think, and I think it would be better for it to hold its status until to-morrow morning.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am willing to have it voted upon to-night. I am willing to give way upon the other proposition and let the conference report be called up, but I did want the question of privilege determined.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would be glad to wait until to-morrow, but the Chair thinks it is privileged.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that its consideration may go over until to-morrow and come up immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. SNELL. What will be the situation with reference to Calendar Wednesday?

Mr. LONGWORTH. May I suggest to the gentleman that to-morrow is Calendar Wednesday, and it has been dispensed with a number of times——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will let it go over until Thursday.

Mr. MADDEN. Let us take a little survey of Thursday. Mr. Speaker, I submit this to the consideration of the House: The Committee on Appropriations has all its bills but two ready. We have not had a calendar for five weeks, and we came in here this morning expecting to go on with the deficiency bill. There is a very large amount of money involved in the deficiency bill and over 100,000 claims.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am perfectly willing to dispose of it at once. I will be very glad to accommodate the gentleman.

Mr. SNELL. Do I understand the gentleman's interests will be as well served if it goes over until Thursday?

The SPEAKER. It is a privileged proposition and——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am simply trying to call attention——

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman from Illinois, I think, will agree to that.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution. I am perfectly willing to agree with gentlemen about the matter. I am willing to agree—does the Speaker rule that it could come up to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. Yes; the Chair thinks so.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly willing that it be disposed of to-morrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal, without debate.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman would be entitled to have an hour and can move the previous question.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. As I say, I am willing for it to come up without debate.

Mr. SNELL. Let us decide on that to-morrow. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand whether an agreement had been reached or not.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, there has been no agreement reached. I will ask—it is not necessary to ask unanimous consent. Mr. Speaker, I will simply give notice that to-morrow immediately after reading of the Journal I shall ask for the consideration of the resolution.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the Interior Department appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan calls up a conference report, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the conference report.

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5078) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 6, 10, 34, 40, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, and 59.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 5, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, 13, 21, 22, 24, 25, 26, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 37, 41, 42, 43, 45, 46, 48, 49, 50, 51, 61, and 62, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows: "$9,000: Provided, That the four inspectors shall not receive per diem in lieu of subsistence for a longer period than 30 days at any one time at the seat of government"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 14: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "and each of said tribal attorneys: Provided further, That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall dispense with the attorney for the Creek Tribe not later than September 1, 1924, and the commissioner shall dispense with any other tribal attorneys at any time their services are no longer needed"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 20: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment, insert: "$7,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows: ": Provided, That except upon the individual order of the Secretary of the Interior, no part of this appropriation shall be used for the support or education at said school of any native pupil brought from Alaska who enters after January 1, 1925"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 27: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert: "$160,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows: ": Provided further, That no part of the money appropriated under this paragraph shall be expended for the development of electric power until the Secretary of the Interior shall have secured, subject to the needs of the Boise project, a contract with the Gem irrigation district providing for the purchase by that district, for a period to be determined by the Secretary of the Interior, of the electric power necessary for the irrigation of the lands of said district: And provided further, That the rates in such contract shall be sufficient to include interest at 5 per centum per annum on the cost of such power development, plus a reasonable depreciation on the power plant, as found by the Secretary of the Interior, and that the contract shall provide that before delivery of power in any season the district shall furnish security satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior to insure payment to the Government of the power charges for such season, and that such contract shall be entered into only in the event that the holders of not less than 90 per centum of the face value of the bonded and warrant indebtedness of the district shall subordinate their claims to the obligations of the district to the Government under such contract: And provided further, That in the event power is furnished from the said power plant to more than one contractor, then the rates for power shall be fixed so that each such contractor, including said district, shall pay only its proper proportionate share of said interest and depreciation, as found by the Secretary of the Interior"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 44: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert: "$1,706,482"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed on amendments numbered 1, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 36, 38, 39, 47, 58, and 60.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5078) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes, submit the following statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

On No. 2: Appropriates $77,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $80,000, as proposed by the Senate, for contingent expenses of the Department of the Interior.

On No. 3: Permits the purchase of supplies and equipment or the procurement of services in open market, without compliance with sections 3709 and 3744 of the Revised Statutes, when the aggregate amount of the purchase or service does not exceed $100 in any instance, as proposed by the Senate, instead of similar permission, as proposed by the House, when the aggregate amount of the purchases or the services does not exceed $100 in any month.

On No. 4: Appropriates $9,000, instead of $6,000, as proposed by the House, and $10,000, as proposed by the Senate, for travel and subsistence for four inspectors, and restores the language proposed by the House and stricken out by the Senate limiting to 20 days the period of time the inspectors may receive per diem in lieu of subsistence while on duty at the seat of government, amended so as to extend the time to 30 days.

On No. 5: Appropriates $124,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $110,000 as proposed by the House, for salaries in the office of solicitor.

On No. 47: Relating to the purchase of Bright Angel Toll Road and Trail, Grand Canyon National Park, Ariz.

On Nos. 58 and 60: Relating to the appropriations for Howard University.

LOUIS C. CRAMTON,
FRANK MURPHY,
C. D. CARTER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, at this time I shall not take any long time in presenting the report beyond any questions that may be asked me. I may say this: That the bill when it was reported to the House carried $261,727,965, and the report of the conferees that is now before you, and the further action which the House conferees will further recommend, if concurred in by the House and ultimately by the Senate, will only produce a bill of $262,565,455 outside of the tribal funds, or a net increase of the bill above the figure reported to the House of about $800,000. Of that increase a round $600,000 comes from the reclamation fund, a revolving fund, which is set apart from other purposes. So from the general funds of the Treasury the increase of the bill, as we hope to have it when we finally get it through the conference, would be about a quarter of a million dollars' increase on the $261,000,000.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman referred to the amount of the bill as reported to the House. Just what did it carry when it left the House?

Mr. CRAMTON. It carried only a little less than $20,000 more than when it was reported by the committee. I quote the figure as it left the committee, because that is what the committee had approved at that time.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I was under the impression that it carried more, because I recall that they put in $253,000 for land offices.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; but some reductions were made that offset that.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. FRENCH. Amendment No. 37 contains one subdivision, No. 3, which requires the American Falls Reservoir district and the Empire irrigation district, in respect to a certain contract—article 46—to rescind or eliminate that part of the contract before the Government will proceed. That part of the contract is a part that guarantees to this district the right to participate in any additional storage which might be developed if additional storage shall be provided for in that reservoir. It is my understanding that in all irrigation districts where additional storage has been provided and which is supplied by the reservoir they shared in the additional storage, and the contract merely recites that which now is the policy of the department. Is that correct?

Mr. CRAMTON. The language in question is a modification by the Senate of language that was inserted on the floor of the House, on my amendment, and covers conditions precedent to any further use of money on the American Falls Reservoir construction. Section 46 of the contract, as to the private districts, as it stands is a very ambiguous section. In the first clause it says that these private districts—the Shepherd district and the others—shall not have any preferential rights to partake in the enlargement of the reservoir. The other part of section 46 says they shall have.

Personally I have felt that it is the natural thing that an existing project that has participated in the construction of the reservoir should have consideration when there comes an enlargement of the reservoir and an increase of water. But I have a deep-rooted objection to tying the hands of the Government perpetually. But I trust that when the time does come when there is an enlargement the authorities at that time will treat the existing districts fairly, and the elimination of that part of section 46 in this bill does not foreclose proper recognition of the existing districts when that enlargement is made and is not intended to foreclose such consideration; but it is to save the Government from the perpetual lien upon such enlargement in favor of the existing districts.

Mr. FRENCH. And you would want these two districts to simply have the same policy applied to them as is applied to other districts?

Mr. CRAMTON. I trust that when the time comes that they will have proper consideration, and in view of the fact that they are populated, while the public lands are not, I presume they will always be in a position to secure proper consideration.

Mr. Speaker, I will ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD with reference to this particular item in the report. It is understood that payments by the private districts under the text of the bill shall cover the advances heretofore made and interest thereon as indicated by this computation by the service.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the conference report on the bill (H. R. 5078) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and so forth, I include the following letter:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
BUREAU OF RECLAMATION,
OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONER,
Washington, February 13, 1924.

Hon. LOUIS C. CRAMTON,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CRAMTON: Reference is again made to your letter of February 1 concerning expenditures on the American Falls development under the Minidoka Federal irrigation project in Idaho, and there are inclosed four tables as follows:

1. Status of allotment for fiscal year 1924.
2. Allocation of expenditures by Government.
3. Summary of Table 2.
4. Interest on payments due under article 43 of contract.

To secure a more accurate result, in Table 2 we have made computations on a monthly instead of a quarterly basis, which we assume will be satisfactory to you.

Table 3 contains, in addition to a summary of Table 2, an allocation of estimated expenditures from January 1 to March 31, 1924.

I trust these inclosures will give you the information you desire. If they do not do so, will you kindly advise.

Very truly yours,

D. W. DAVIS, Commissioner.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On March 10:

H. R. 4121. An act to extend the provisions of certain laws to the Territory of Hawaii.

On March 11:

H. R. 584. An act to authorize the county of Multnomah, Oreg., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Willamette River, in the city of Portland, Oreg., in the vicinity of present site of Sellwood Ferry;

H. R. 3265. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge between the Boroughs of Brooklyn and Queens, in the city and State of New York;

H. R. 3681. An act to authorize the building of a bridge across the Waccamaw River in South Carolina;

H. R. 4807. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State Highway Commission of Louisiana to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across West Pearl River in the State of Louisiana; and

H. R. 4808. An act granting the consent of Congress to the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the Pearl River between St. Tammany Parish in Louisiana and Hancock County in Mississippi.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 3444. An act for the relief of certain nations or tribes of Indians in Montana, Idaho, and Washington;

H. R. 4577. An act providing for the examination and survey of Mill Cut and Clubfoot Creek, N. C.; and

H. R. 5557. An act to authorize the settlement of the indebtedness of the Republic of Finland to the United States of America.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE—INCOME-TAX REDUCTION (S. DOC. NO. 63).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means:

To the Congress of the United States:

It had been my earnest hope that a 25 per cent reduction in taxes to be paid for the current year might be provided by law before the 15th of March current. Many people have been expecting that such would be the case and deferred their tax returns accordingly. It is a matter of such imminent importance that I have no hesitation in recommending that the public welfare would be much advanced by temporarily laying aside all other legislation and enacting a resolution for this purpose, which ought to be by unanimous consent. The taxpayers, the business interests, agriculture, industry, finance; in fact, all the elements that go to make up the economic welfare of the people of America would be greatly benefited by such action. It would remove an element of uncertainty from the current financial year at once, which would be a strong stimulant to business with its resultant benefit to the wage earner and the agriculture of our country. It is impossible to see that any harm could accrue from this action, and there is every prospect of resulting benefits which would be very great. It would be a positive step in the right direction, which is much needed at this time to justify the confidence of the people that the Government is intent solely on the promotion of the public welfare without regard to any collateral objects.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 11, 1924.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. ALMON, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence, for the remainder of the week, on account of official business.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, there are certain amendments which have not yet been acted upon by the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman does not intend to dispose of these amendments to-night, does he?

Mr. CRAMTON. Those on which there is no serious controversy. There is a group of three amendments in Montana which I do not desire to dispose of to-night, because I have an understanding with respect to them with Members interested. There is also an amendment in regard to Howard University.

Mr. RAKER. There is no controversy as to that.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 1: Page 3, line 25, after the word "offices," insert the following: "not exceeding $450 for the purchase of newspapers, notwithstanding the provisions of section 192 of the Revised Statutes of the United States."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the House recede and concur. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that amendments 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19, or amendments 15 to 19, inclusive, may be passed over for the present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that amendments 15 to 19, inclusive, may be passed over for the present. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 36: Page 70, line 6, strike out "$380,000" and insert "$1,045,000."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the House recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment on page 73, line 12: Strike out the figures "$155,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$400,000, of which amount $245,000 shall be used for drainage purposes when the water users of the Truckee-Carson irrigation district have voted for a contract binding themselves to reimburse the Federal Government for the cost thereof."

Mr. RICHARDS. Will the gentleman from Michigan yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will.

Mr. RICHARDS. I note, according to the Senate amendment, that the appropriation has been increased to the original Budget figures. Is that correct?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes. The Senate proposes the restoration of the Budget figures, but for a different purpose.

Mr. RICHARDS. And the language added, to my way of thinking, is partially in compliance with the idea suggested by the chairman in the original committee hearings.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes. It has seemed to me, in view of recent controversies, that hereafter, whenever there is an extension to an irrigation project which involves increase in cost, the Government should not proceed with such expenditure until the district to be benefited clearly commits itself to that proposition; and that is the purpose of the further language. I may add that the Reclamation Service has suggested some modification which I think should have consideration by the conferees if they should conclude to accept the amendment.

Mr. RICHARDS. May I ask the chairman this question: If recommitted to conference, does he think the House Members will go into conference with an open mind and give this matter proper consideration?

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman is well aware that he himself, Mr. Vincell, a representative of the district, and the Reclamation Service have strongly indorsed this item. Of course, I would not want to commit the House conferees at this time, but I will say to the gentleman that we have open minds and will give it careful consideration when it goes back to conference.

Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the House further insist on its disagreement.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 39, page 76, line 12: Strike out "$9,946,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$10,156,000."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to that amendment. It is simply a total which is dependent upon the disposition of the prior amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the House further insist upon its disagreement.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 47: Page 87, line 24, strike out "For the purchase of the Bright Angel Toll Road and Trail within the Grand Canyon National Park, Ariz., as contemplated by the 'Act to establish the Grand Canyon National Park in the State of Arizona,' approved February 26, 1919, $100,000, to be available until expended for payment to the county of Coconino, State of Arizona, for the construction, under the supervision of the National Park Service, of a road from Maine, Ariz., to the south boundary of the Grand Canyon National Park: Provided, That no part of such sum shall be expended until after the delivery of a good and sufficient deed by the proper authorities of said county conveying to the United States full and complete title to the said Bright Angel Toll Road and Trail, and acceptance thereof by the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan offers a motion, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment No. 47, and concur therein with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment insert: "For the construction of trails within the Grand Canyon National Park, $100,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended: Provided, That said sum may be used by the Secretary of the Interior for the purchase from the County of Coconino, Ariz., of the Bright Angel toll road and trail within said park, under such terms and conditions as he may deem proper, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to construct an approach road from the National Old Trails Highway to the south boundary of said park."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, with reference to that amendment, I will only take time at this time to state that the effect of the language is to broaden the scope of the item, but continuing the same amount. While the former language was restricted to the purchase of an existing trail, this gives authority either to purchase or to build. In connection with that the conferees had before them a letter from one RALPH H. CAMERON, setting forth certain statements with reference to Bright Angel Trail, which reads as follows:

MARCH 5, 1924.

In re item appropriating $100,000 for the purchase of the Bright Angel Trail, Grand Canyon National Park.

Hon. REED SMOOT,
Chairman Senate Conferees on H. R. 5078,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Section 2418, Revised Statutes of Arizona (1913), providing for the jurisdiction and powers of the board of supervisors, sub. 10, provides that the board shall have power to "sell at public auction at the courthouse door, after 30 days' previous notice given by publication in a newspaper in the county, and convey to the highest bidder for cash any property, real or personal, belonging to the county, paying the proceeds into the county treasury for the use of the county. The item referred to in the bill provides that the said sum of $100,000, if appropriated, "to be available until expended for payment to the county of Coconino, State of Arizona, for the construction, under the supervision of the National Park Service, of a road from Maine, Ariz., to the south boundary of the Grand Canyon National Park," etc. It will be seen, therefore, that the proposed item of $100,000, if appropriated, will not be paid over to the county of Coconino and deposited in the county treasury. In other words, the consideration proposed to the county of Coconino for this toll road or trail is a remote promise to expend $100,000 on a road almost wholly within forest areas.

Senator ASHURST in his remarks on this item on February 25, 1924, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 3053, says:

> "In other words, the $100,000 to be appropriated is not to be paid into the treasury of the county to become cash assets of the county; the $100,000 will be expended, I repeat, under the supervision of the National Park Service for the construction of a road some 62 or 63 miles in length to the national park from the grand artery of auto traffic, the Santa Fe Trail, to the Grand Canyon."

Under the statutes of Arizona, before the board of supervisors can sell real property—for instance, a road or trail—the same must, under appropriate proceedings, be declared of no longer a public use, be condemned, and then sold. According to the figures of the Department of the Interior, from October, 1922, to September 20, 1923, the number of persons who used this trail were 7,130, and the net source of revenue from such use to the county was some $4,000. Can it be said, therefore, that this trail has no public use in order to come within the statute for condemnation? It is a question in my mind, should the board of supervisors of Coconino County transfer this toll road and trail contrary to the statute, and in doing so not receive and place in the treasury of the county the consideration therefor, whether they would not be liable to indictment.

It has been stated that I have an interest in certain mining claims within the Grand Canyon National Park which have been the subject of litigation. I reiterate that I have not at the present time, and have not had for many years prior to the date of the creation of the Grand Canyon National Park in 1919, any interest in claims title to which is being litigated by the Government of the United States.

It has also been stated that the water from two springs on the Bright Angel Trail have been polluted with typhoid germs. Title to one of these springs is in the county of Coconino, Ariz.; the other in a mining location in which I have had no interest for many years.

I wish to add, further, should the $100,000 be paid to the county of Coconino, as proposed by this legislation, the whole amount thereof could not be applied to the building of the proposed road, under the laws of the State of Arizona.

Therefore, in view of the law, it is my opinion, if this proposed legislation is enacted, it can not be consummated, and is illegal.

With kind personal regards, I am,

Sincerely yours, RALPH H. CAMERON.

It is not possible for me, of course, to say who RALPH H. CAMERON is; that is, who is the RALPH H. CAMERON who writes this letter. There is nothing upon the carbon copy which I have to indicate it. I am sure it can not be the RALPH H. CAMERON I discussed on the floor the other day, because this RALPH H. CAMERON states, "I have not at the present time, and have not had for many years prior to the date of the creation of the Grand Canyon National Park in 1919 any interest in claims, title to which is being litigated by the Government of the United States," whereas the statement which I made on the floor the other day showed that RALPH H. CAMERON was a party to the case of Cameron et al. v. United States (252 U. S. 450), and that the Secretary of the Interior has just called upon the Attorney General of the United States to take appropriate action to protect the interests of the United States and the public in the Grand Canyon National Park against unlawful encroachments maintained by that RALPH H. CAMERON in that park in defiance of that decision of the United States Supreme Court. The RALPH H. CAMERON who was, in 1920, in litigation with the United States over the claims discussed in Two hundred and fifty-second United States, 450, soon will be in litigation again concerning the same claims unless he bows to and obeys that decision, as the following letter from the Attorney General indicates:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., March 5, 1924.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

SIR: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of February 28, 1924, with respect to the failure of RALPH H. CAMERON and others to fully comply with the decrees rendered against them in certain cases which involved asserted mining claims affecting lands within the Grand Canyon National Park, and in which you also called attention to certain mining claims located in January, 1919, by associates of CAMERON.

I have referred the matter to the United States attorney at Tucson, Ariz., with instructions to give these matters immediate attention; to obtain such order or orders as may be necessary to secure full compliance with the decrees already entered, with such exceptions as you have noted in your letter; also, to take up for immediate action by way of suit the matter of these other claims.

Very respectfully,

(Signed) ALBERT OTTINGER
(For the Attorney General),
Assistant Attorney General.

I also referred the other day to a RALPH H. CAMERON, who is a party to litigation with the United States, concerning the validity of certain other claims in the Grand Canyon, 28 in number, discussed on page 3497 of the RECORD, wherein I stated that a hearing set for February 29, 1924, had been continued to next summer on request of Mr. CAMERON. That same RALPH H. CAMERON is a party to this pending litigation and is interested in it is indicated by the following letter:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 15, 1924.

Hon. RALPH H. CAMERON.

MY DEAR SIR: Reference is had to your personal conference with me wherein you requested the postponement of the hearing ordered and now set for February 29, at Flagstaff, Ariz., in the case of The United States v. R. H. Cameron et al., involving a group of 28 mining claims in which you are personally interested. You informed me that it was your desire to be present at the taking of testimony, but that your duties * * * would prevent your attendance on the date named.

You requested a continuance be granted until after the adjournment of the present session of Congress.

It is believed that under the circumstances the public interest will in no wise suffer by granting the continuance requested, and the chief of field division of the General Land Office at Santa Fe has been instructed to postpone further action until after the present session of Congress has adjourned.

Very truly yours,

E. C. FINNEY,
First Assistant Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, January 15, 1924.

Mr. JOHN T. MURPHY,
Chief of Field Division, G. L. O.,
Federal Building, Santa Fe, N. Mex.

MY DEAR MR. MURPHY: Reference is had to the case of the United States v. R. H. Cameron et al., involving the Alta Bueno et al. mining claims in the Grand Canyon National Park, of Arizona, in which the taking of testimony has been set before the clerk of the superior court, at Flagstaff, on February 29, 1924.

R. H. CAMERON, a party in interest, desires to be present at the taking of testimony in this case, but states that his duties will prevent his presence thereat on the date now set. He has asked that the hearing be postponed until after the adjournment of the present session of Congress.

Believing the public interest will not suffer through a reasonable continuance, you are instructed to postpone the taking of testimony in this case until the present session of Congress has adjourned or until you are further advised by this office.

Very respectfully,

WM. SPRY, Commissioner.

So it is apparent that one RALPH H. CAMERON is very much concerned with litigation with the United States concerning claims in the Grand Canyon.

The letter to Senator SMOOT which I have quoted further says of the water available at Indian Gardens, in the canyon:

It has also been stated that the water from two springs on the Bright Angel Trail have been polluted with typhoid germs. Title to one of these springs is in the county of Coconino, Ariz., the other in a mining location in which I have had no interest for many years.

Again it is evident this can not be the RALPH H. CAMERON I have been talking about.

And let us understand. The water in the springs is pure, but the brook flowing from them is contaminated by the corral and waste and closet pits maintained by one RALPH H. CAMERON at Indian Gardens. And the caretaker, who has at times forbidden use of the water from the springs by park visitors, who has continuously torn down signs warning the public of the impurity and danger of the water in the stream, is an employee of RALPH H. CAMERON and gets his orders from him. Note the statement on page 3499 of the RECORD, where Mr. Burlew says, after phoning Mr. CAMERON on March 1, Mr. CAMERON promised to "wire the custodian of the property to allow them to go ahead and use the water."

And that this caretaker or custodian who gets his orders from RALPH H. CAMERON is still holding the fort in defiance of public need and common decency is evident from the following papers just received by the Interior Department:

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, March 8, 1924.

Hon. L. C. CRAMTON,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CRAMTON: In response to your letter asking to be kept advised of developments at the Grand Canyon, so far as the Bright Angel Trail is concerned, I am forwarding to you herewith copies of several letters and telegrams from the superintendent of Grand Canyon National Park bearing on the utilization of the spring at Indian Gardens, which reached the department since March 1, when similar material was furnished you.

Very truly yours,

HUBERT WORK.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
NATIONAL PARK SERVICE, GRAND CANYON NATIONAL PARK,
Grand Canyon, Ariz., March 1, 1924.

The DIRECTOR NATIONAL PARK SERVICE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MATHER: We have to-day wired you as per inclosed confirmation. We have also wired the county health officer as per inclosed copy. If the State verifies the analysis of water at Indian Gardens, as I have no doubt they will, we are in a deplorable condition, and unless the service uses every possible means to remove this menace at the earliest possible moment we are deserving of the harshest criticism. In the meantime the Harvey Co. are carrying water from the rim. Aside from the inconvenience, the water is too warm for drinking purposes after it has been carried for several hours. They have suggested discontinuing the trip, and I have told them it would be a good thing to do, providing the State verifies previous analyses.

Clarkson, Tillotson, Scoyen, and I went down the trail in question on February 27 and placed signs at danger points; a large sign had been previously placed at the head of the trail. On the return trip, February 29, Clarkson and I, who preceded Tillotson and Scoyen, noticed some of the most important signs had been removed. We did not see the caretaker. Tillotson and Scoyen passed Indian Gardens about an hour later, and the caretaker gave them an awful bawling out in front of a lot of tourists. It would serve no purpose to repeat his expressions; but in view of the fact that CAMERON stated * * * that he long ago sold his interests along the Indian Gardens trail, one sentence is significant—"I get my orders from Washington, and that is where your superintendent had better get his unless he wants to follow Reaburn and Crosby." The caretaker stated that he had no objection to warning signs being posted, but under no circumstances would he permit signs to be posted directing visitors to the spring. Recent analyses indicate that water in the spring only is pure.

The Harvey people insist that the time has come to adopt aggressive measures in this matter and we thoroughly agree with them. Under verbal instructions I was to report developments to you, leaving decisions as to actions to be taken to your office. If something is not done at once the caretaker, judging by his present attitude, will try to run us out of the park.

Sincerely yours,

J. R. EAKIN, Superintendent.

GRAND CANYON, ARIZ., March 1, 1924.

The DIRECTOR NATIONAL PARK SERVICE,
Washington, D. C.:

Sign warning against danger of water at lunch station Indian Gardens torn down by caretaker. Refuses to permit use of water at spring. Situation impossible. Something must be done. Have not received analysis from State.

Director NATIONAL PARK SERVICE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Mr. Shirley, of the transportation company, has just informed me that the caretaker now permits his guides to take water from the spring for use of members of parties they are conducting. His attitude toward the erecting of signs has not changed.

Very truly yours,

J. R. EAKIN.

Care Mr. ALBRIGHT.

GRAND CANYON, ARIZ., March 4, 1924.

The DIRECTOR NATIONAL PARK SERVICE,
Washington, D. C.:

Retel fourth have not been advised of action mentioned. Caretaker very irascible and changes orders to us from day to day. Now permitting guides to get water for parties. Attitude toward signs unchanged.

J. R. EAKIN, Superintendent.

STEPHEN T. MATHER,
National Park Service:

Re telegram 9th. Situation stands as stated in my letters and telegrams. Have not received analysis from State. Will wire new developments.

EAKIN.

The time for equivocating, of yielding to high official influence, is past. The Grand Canyon must be opened to the public and made safe for the public, and any Ralph H. Cameron who is not interested in the controversy may well stand aside while Uncle Sam eliminates the RALPH H. CAMERON who is asserting rights in the canyon that have no basis in law or equity.

That there may be no question as to the nature of the agreement made by the authorities of Coconino County with the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] and myself, I offer this letter from the supervisors of that county, but unsigned:

COUNTY OF COCONINO,
OFFICES OF BOARD OF SUPERVISORS,
Flagstaff, Ariz., July 16, 1923.

The Honorable SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of July 6, 1922, requesting terms upon which Coconino County will convey to the Government Bright

Angel Trail, in Grand Canyon National Park, in accordance with section 4 of the act of February 26, 1922:

In the event that Congress shall appropriate not less than the sum of $100,000 to be expended upon the construction of a road between Maine, Ariz., and the south boundary of Grand Canyon National Park, which will be the park's most important approach highway, the county of Coconino will execute and deliver to the United States Government a good and sufficient deed to the Bright Angel toll road and trail, conveying all its right, title, and interest therein to the United States of America.

Respectfully, ——— ———,
——— ———,

The reasons for not signing are set forth in the following letter of same date from the Board of Supervisors of Coconino County:

COUNTY OF COCONINO,
OFFICES OF BOARD OF SUPERVISORS,
Flagstaff, Ariz., July 16, 1923.

The honorable SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Referring to the tentative agreement between Chairman CRAMTON and other members of the Appropriations Committee and officials of the National Park Service and the Board of Supervisors of Coconino County, Ariz., for the sale by Coconino County to the United States of the Bright Angel toll road and trail in the Grand Canyon National Park, our attention has been called by our county attorney to subdivision 10 of paragraph 2418 of civil code, Arizona, 1913, page 848, reading as follows: "To sell at public auction at the court-house door, after 30 days' previous notice given by publication in a newspaper of the county, and convey to the highest bidder for cash and property, real or personal, belonging to the county, paying the proceeds into the county treasury for the use of the county."

Our delay in writing you making a proposition in accordance with our tentative agreement has been due to the uncertainty as to our right to carry out this agreement without first putting the property up for sale at public auction.

It is the desire of the board to carry out our tentative agreement to the letter, and our only question is the proper method to follow. We hereby formally propose to convey to the United States all right, title, and interest of the county of Coconino to the Bright Angel Trail in accordance with the letter dictated by Government officials and others while in conference, with the understanding that the property first be offered for sale at public auction, in accordance with statutes above mentioned, and with the distinct understanding that at the time of said sale a bid be made by a representative of your office of at least $100,000, to be expended by the county of Coconino or under its direction upon the construction of a road between Maine and the south boundary of the Grand Canyon National Park. It is understood that said bid shall be conditional upon an appropriation by Congress of such a sum as may be offered for said trail, not to be less, however, than the sum of $100,000.

A copy of the letter making the proposal agreed upon is attached hereto. It has not been signed by reason of a possible legal objection. This letter nevertheless embodies the proposal we have desired to make, and do now desire to make, subject to our legal right to make it in this form under our statutes. After considering this letter and the legal objections raised by our county attorney, we shall welcome any suggestions you may have that will simplify the transfer of the trail in accordance with our original agreement.

Assuring you of our desire to live up to the letter and spirit of our tentative agreement, we beg to remain,

Respectfully yours, R. E. TAYLOR,
JOHN LOY,
Members Board of Supervisors.

The amendment I have offered makes it possible to build one or more trails with the $100,000, in the Grand Canyon, if political influence prevents carrying out the agreement entered into. I move to recede and concur as stated.

Ralph H. Cameron in Arizona, who does have interests on that trail, very evidently is not the Ralph H. Cameron who addressed the letter to the Senate conferees, because the facts are entirely different as to the two Ralph H. Camerons.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves to recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, the next two amendments pertain to Howard University. As I have already said, I think I am under obligation not to take them up now, due to the absence of one or two gentlemen who did not have notice that the conference report would be taken up this afternoon. Therefore I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 54 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow Wednesday, March 12, 1924, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, March 12, 1924.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father and our God, we would to-day rest in the sunshine of Thy love and would ask Thee so to qualify us in heart and will that we may be glad to do that which is in accordance with Thy mind. Help us more and more to realize that the things that are eternal are the things which are infinitely worth while, and so regulate our conduct and dispose of our opportunity that we may fulfill the high, enduring pleasure of seeing Thee, who art invisible. We ask in Jesus' name. Amen.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary (George A. Sanderson) read the following communication:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, D. C., March 12, 1924.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. CHARLES CURTIS, a Senator from the State of Kansas, to perform the duties of the Chair this legislative day.

ALBERT B. CUMMINS,
President pro tempore.

Mr. CURTIS thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer.

THE JOURNAL.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. JONES of Washington and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The principal clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Norris	Robinson	Stephens	Weller
Oddie	Sheppard	Swanson	Wheeler
Pepper	Shields	Trammell	Willis
Phipps	Shipstead	Wadsworth

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 684) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the commencement on June 18, 1923, of the work of carving on Stone Mountain, in the State of Georgia, a monument to the valor of the soldiers of the South, which was the inspiration of their sons and daughters and grandsons and granddaughters in the Spanish-American and World Wars, and in memory of Warren G. Harding, President of the United States of America, in whose administration the work was begun.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Presiding Officer [Mr. CURTIS] as Acting President pro tempore:

H. R. 6901. An act to amend section 252 of the revenue act of 1921, in respect of credits and refunds; and

S. J. Res. 91. Joint resolution to authorize the National Society United States Daughters of 1812 to place a marble tablet on the Francis Scott Key Bridge.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR ROBINSON.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address by the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] delivered in New York on Friday, March 7, 1924, entitled "The Relation of Business to Government."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The address is as follows:

ADDRESS OF SENATOR JOSEPH T. ROBINSON AT ANNUAL MEETING OF ARKANSAS SOCIETY, NEW YORK CITY, FRIDAY, MARCH 7, 1924.

THE RELATION OF BUSINESS TO GOVERNMENT.

Senator ROBINSON. Mr. President, in the political campaign of 1920 the slogan "We want more business in government and less government in business" was used effectively to discredit the party then in power. Many measures enacted by the Congress to help win the war had imposed restraints on industry and enterprise. They proved harassing while the war lasted and became intolerable after the return of peace. Some of these measures had been only lately repealed, while others were still in force, and the phrase "less government in business" induced support for Mr. Harding from thousands of electors who did not take the trouble to recall that all war measures were passed well-nigh unanimously and without the slightest division on party lines.

The policy of "less government in business and more business in government" is correct in principle but quite impracticable of application under existing conditions and in the present state of the public mind. There should be as little governmental interference in private industry as may be consistent with the general welfare. Initiative and enterprise manifestly are hampered and restricted under too rigid regulation, so that timidity and hesitation are often displayed by individuals and corporations where courage and quick decision are required to promote prosperity.

Desirable as the end would be, it is impossible wholly to divorce Government from business without revolutionizing both. No satisfactory method has been proposed to restore governmental functions to that simplicity which existed prior to the appearance of the dominating influences which have their origin in "big business." The trust problem appeared in the United States after the close of the Civil War. The forces and conditions, however, which produced that problem had long been at work. It was inevitable that the combinations of resources essential to the development of unpopulated areas and unused resources should result in coalitions of brain power certain to produce monopolies.

INFLUENCE OF TRUST AND MONOPOLIES.

The 30 years which immediately followed the close of the Civil War were marked by the multiplication and growth in power of monopolies, so that by 1890 the paramount public problems relating to American business was not how to procure capital for the promotion of large and beneficial enterprises but how to restrain monopolies from exercising sovereignty—how to prevent the trusts from controlling the Government. The act to regulate commerce, enacted in 1887, and amendments adopted from time to time, and the Sherman antitrust law of 1890 were legislative expressions of the popular will to curb the growing power of business combinations over the life and the happiness of the citizens.

Government interference with business became necessary when business interfered too much with Government.

What would have happened if no effort had been made, if no laws had been enacted, and if no court proceedings had been instituted to protect the public against the greed and avarice of the trusts? Some think that gigantic combinations of capital are to be regarded always as benevolent factors in our civilization, but too many instances are known where they have proved destructive of liberty—instances in which helpless and deserving individuals have been driven mercilessly into bankruptcy and ruin merely because of the competition, sometimes actual, sometimes only potential, between them and their oppressors. Modern business organizations by unfair methods in many cases have made governmental regulation imperative to protect the public against exploitation and oppression.

INFLUENCE OF THE PROTECTIVE-TARIFF SYSTEM ON GOVERNMENT.

The protective-tariff system has not only invited powerful business interests to attempt control of Government agencies; it has put a premium on selfishness and corruption in politics. When the Government lends itself to exploiting the entire population—to taxing 110,000,000 people in order to maintain high prices, which is the underlying principle of the present protective tariff law—it recognizes the right of selfish interests to employ and control the authority and agencies of sovereignty. Such a system could not lead anywhere except to the deplorable political status in which the American people now find themselves. Corruption is the natural, if not the inevitable, result of the political theory that government exists to award special advantages and to promote special interests. It is not a far step from the abuse of power employed in levying a tax to maintain excessive prices to the shocking moral delinquency exemplified when the beneficiaries are permitted to name at will tax rates for their own protection which, of course, result in the spoliation of consumers.

A distinction, however, is attempted by a class of political leaders who imagine they discriminate between the immorality of extorting campaign funds from tariff barons and the corrupt act of procuring loans through granting oil leases on the public domain.

GOVERNMENT THROUGH PROPAGANDA.

As a result of the reciprocal efforts of Government and business to control each other, we have an era of propaganda. Blocs, alleged reform agencies, and secret combinations are formed for the purpose of securing special advantages for the gratification of the peculiar class consciousness of their members. There is only one thing on which they all seem to agree, and that is that the inclusion of an appropriation of Federal moneys usually is an act of virtue partially redeeming from objection measures which extend the sphere of Federal activity to every phase of life.

ECONOMY.

Everyone advocates economy in general terms, but no one seems consistently to support it in specific instances. This is why the United States now expends annually between $3,000,000,000 and $4,000,000,000. It partially accounts for the prevailing high taxes which everyone desires reduced. While propaganda is occasionally directed against appropriations, always there are organized groups driving relentlessly every comprehensive plan proposed for increasing Federal expenditures.

Only by heroic reforms—by restoring the Government to greater simplicity, by abolishing bureaus and repealing laws which extend Federal action and multiply Federal agencies, only by abandoning or reducing appropriations for internal improvements and for Federal service can the Budget be brought within reasonable bounds. The accomplishment of such an end is associated with difficulties not likely soon to be overcome. The moment Congress attempts to cut down the sphere of Federal activity and reduce the number of Federal employees a cry of protest is sounded and hosts of propagandists march with measured tread and deafening shout against the Capitol. The struggle to prevent Government interference with business will not succeed until the necessity for separating business from Government has ended. Higher ideals are required in politics and in business to safeguard the honor of the Nation against disgraceful abuses such as have occurred in connection with the Veterans' Bureau and the naval oil reserve leases.

Just as the majority of men prominent in business affairs are honest and incorruptible, so as a rule those who have attained to eminence in public life are upright in motives and in conduct. Nevertheless, shocking evidences of dereliction, incompetence, and corruption on the part of a number of Federal officers have given force to the growing conviction in the minds of many citizens that the Government is corrupt throughout and hardly worth preserving.

OIL-LEASE SCANDALS.

The oil-lease disclosures constitute the principal cause for the prevailing suspicion of public men and mistrust of the Government as now administered.

It appears essential to familiarize the public with the true conditions at the Capitol. In no other way can a complete "housecleaning" be accomplished and the stain of dishonor upon the Nation's record be obliterated. A fair, if necessarily incomplete, outline of the uncontradicted evidence will define the personal responsibility of certain prominent public officers and establish the relationship which their acts bear to the ignominious oil-lease transaction.

WITHDRAWALS OF PUBLIC LANDS.

The policy of conservation with respect to natural resources may be said to have originated during the administration of President Roosevelt. As early, however, as 1865 the Commissioner of the Public Land Office directed the local land office at Humboldt, Calif., to withhold from entry small areas supposed to contain petroleum. It was not until 1900, 1901, and 1902 that further withdrawals were made, the lands being situated in California, Wyoming, and Oregon.

On September 27, 1909, President Taft issued his famous withdrawal orders setting aside from private entry 3,000,000 acres in California and Wyoming, and subsequent withdrawals were accomplished in 1909 and 1910 of areas aggregating several million acres in the Western States.

An issue arose as to whether the President was authorized to withdraw public lands from private entry for the purpose of conserving for the benefit of the general public the mineral resources within the public domain. The authority was finally sustained in a decision rendered by the Supreme Court, February 23, 1915.

ACT OF CONGRESS AUTHORIZING AND RATIFYING WITHDRAWALS.

In the meantime to settle the doubt expressed by many lawyers as to the President's power, Congress passed a law, June 25, 1910, expressly authorizing the Chief Executive to make withdrawals of lands and confirmed the orders previously issued.

The President immediately confirmed the withdrawals already made and executed additional orders. Restorations from time to time of public lands to private entry and additional withdrawals left remaining in the petroleum reserves, December 1, 1921, approximately 230,000 acres in Arizona, 1,200,000 in California, 500,000 in Louisiana, 1,350,000 in Montana, 85,000 in North Dakota, almost 2,000,000 in Utah, and 1,120,000 in Wyoming, aggregating a total of more than 6,600,000 acres in the petroleum reserves.

NAVAL PETROLEUM RESERVES.

The Elk Hills, California, naval oil reserve was created by order of the President out of lands already withdrawn, September 2, 1912, and embraced a little less than 40,000 acres. The Buena Vista Hills reserve was created in the same manner, December 13, 1912, and extended over a little less than 30,000 acres.

The Teapot Dome, Wyoming, reserve was created by Executive order, April 30, 1915, and embraced not quite 10,000 acres. The object in creating the naval oil reserves was to hold in storage under ground a supply of fuel adequate for the use of the Navy in case of war or other emergency. This policy has been clearly defined and is generally regarded as well settled.

ACT OF JUNE 4, 1920.

The leases which have occasioned so much discussion were not made under the general mineral lease law of February, 1920, but under the naval appropriation act of June 4, 1920. This authorized the Secretary of the Navy to take possession of all properties within the naval oil reserves upon which applications for private leases were not pending and to conserve, develop, use, and operate the same in his discretion and to use, store, exchange, or sell the oil and gas products for the benefit of the United States. This authority is generally construed as a conservation measure, limiting development to defensive wells to be drilled for the purpose of protecting the reserves from waste through operations on private or leased lands. This construction prevailed in the Navy Department until the beginning of President Harding's administration. It has been unanimously approved by joint resolution of Congress.

THE EXECUTIVE ORDER.

An Executive order was issued by President Harding May 31, 1921, attempting to transfer the naval oil reserve from the control and administration of the Secretary of the Navy, where the act of Congress vested them, to the Secretary of the Interior. A little less than one year later, after prolonged secret negotiations, leases were made to the Sinclair interests of the reserves in Wyoming and to Doheny of the reserves in California.

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE?

Congress under the Constitution is empowered to legislate for the control and disposition of the public domain. Clearly the President had no power to transfer the control of public lands from one department, where Congress had vested their administration, to another. What actually prompted the execution of this order has given rise to rumors and suspicions of the darkest character.

The admitted facts are that Secretary of the Navy Denby assumed responsibility for initiating and encouraging the proposal, and cooperated with Secretary of the Interior Fall to induce the President to sign the order. Almost every officer in the Navy, other than the Secretary and Assistant Secretary Roosevelt, opposed transferring the naval oil reserves to the Interior Department. Admiral Griffin, the head of the bureau having jurisdiction of the subject, vigorously protested the proposal. Contrary to the custom of all the departments in such cases, the Executive order agreed upon between the two Secretaries was transmitted to the President by Assistant Secretary Roosevelt without any letter of explanation and unaccompanied by the protest of Admiral Griffin.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY ROOSEVELT'S PART IN THE TRANSACTION.

Assistant Secretary Roosevelt, who had been an original stockholder and director in the Sinclair companies, and who, when he entered the Army, had sold his stock and resigned as a director; whose wife had purchased a thousand shares of stock in one of the Sinclair companies in 1920 and sold the same at a loss about the time the leases were made; whose brother was a vice president in one of the Sinclair companies, receiving a salary of $25,000 per year, personally took the Executive order to the President and verbally informed him that Secretaries Fall and Denby had agreed upon it. Neither Assistant Secretary Roosevelt nor Secretary Denby has made clear the reason for the unusual course pursued in securing the President's signature. The fact that no legal opinion was procured as to the validity of the order is a circumstance of additional significance.

LEASES SECRETLY NEGOTIATED.

Almost one year after the date of the Executive order, leases were secretly negotiated by the two Secretaries of the Wyoming and California reserves to Sinclair and Doheny, respectively. The transactions were enveloped in mystery and concealment. It was two weeks after the instruments had been signed before it became known that the leases had been executed. Secretary Denby has never attempted any explanation for carrying on the transactions in secret, and the reasons assigned by Secretary Fall were so absurd that they intensified suspicion. He said that he regarded the subject as a military secret to be divulged only by the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, and in a letter to Secretary Denby he expressly cautioned against publicity until another lease could be consummated.

In every court secrecy under such circumstances is regarded as a badge of fraud. The negotiation of the Executive order, the secret execution of the leases, and the concealment of the transactions brand them as questionable, and impose upon all responsible the obligation of justifying their acts and methods. This they have totally failed to do. The lack of information displayed by both Secretary Denby and Assistant Secretary Roosevelt is unaccountable. Neither was able to explain the important features of the transactions. Both of them answered almost every material question, "I do not know—I can not say," or "I can not answer without referring to the record." The implication that either Secretary Denby or his assistant, Mr. Roosevelt, acted corruptly is not supported by the evidence. While neither can be charged with corruption, the course of both of them exemplifies gross incompetence and inefficiency.

April 29, 1922, the Senate passed a resolution authorizing the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys to investigate the entire subject of leases on naval oil reserves. To one member of the committee more than to all others credit is due for persistency and diligent effort in uncovering not only circumstances which show incompetence and inefficiency on the part of high officers but also facts which tend to show that bribery was employed to secure the leases. Senator WALSH of Montana, without the assistance of investigators, and with only limited funds at his command, has uncovered facts which impeach the competency of every public officer responsible for the leases and which puts them on the defensive respecting their good faith and honesty. One hundred thousand dollars sent by Doheny in a satchel, Doheny's son the messenger bearing the "loan" to Fall! Twenty-five thousand dollars in Liberty bonds loaned by Sinclair to Fall, and $10,000 advanced as expense money in connection with negotiations by Fall as Sinclair's agent for Russian oil concessions! The events were so closely and suspiciously connected that they indicate the alleged loans as mere concealment of bribery.

EMPLOYMENT OF FORCE.

It is humiliating to recount the employment of marines under the order of Assistant Secretary of the Navy Roosevelt in the forcible ejectment of alleged trespassers drilling wells on private claims within the reserves. Captain Schaler, who commanded the marines, declared in an interview in the New York Times, February 29, that Secretary Fall told him that President Harding had only reluctantly consented to the use of force. True, he states, that Mr. Fall ascribed an unworthy motive to the Chief Executive, that of protecting an officer of the Mutual Oil Co., who had contributed liberally to the Republican campaign fund. Nevertheless, Captain Schaler says that under the orders of Assistant Secretary Roosevelt, and after conference with Secretary Fall, deliberately planning to avoid or disregard legal process, he compelled the claimants to suspend drilling under threat of using marines.

The Congress has authorized and the President has employed special counsel to institute and prosecute proceedings for the recovery of the Government's property and rights recklessly bartered away by Secretaries Fall and Denby. The story of their breach of trust is sickening, disheartening. It brings regret to all who hear it.

UNDER THE GREAT WHITE DOME.

Revolting cartoons representing the Capitol as a teapot or an oil can, recently published in newspapers and magazines, portray and at the same time encourage lack of confidence in Government and contempt for public men. The indifference to honest administration disclosed by Cabinet officers may well arouse anxiety for the permanence of American political institutions.

In spite of these considerations, we are justified in presenting a more attractive picture. The people are themselves the source of power. So long as they are not corrupted by avarice or blinded by prejudice, they can effectively condemn and punish dishonesty and inefficiency in office and premiumize the sane administration of their affairs. They can and will, through the simple process of elections, reform flagrant abuses against them and their Government. Heartening effects already may be felt from the exposures of fraud and inefficiency at Washington. Let the investigation be thorough to the end that never again shall such disgusting incidents and shocking betrayals of public trust occur.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, preparatory to submitting a request to print in the RECORD, I wish to speak for about a minute and a half.

When the merchant marine act of 1920 was being considered it was thought wise to insert certain provisions designed to overcome the handicap imposed upon American ships in foreign trade by reason of the higher standards of American living. One of the provisions which became a part of this law was what is known as section 28 of the merchant marine act, which section, in brief, provides that a shipper sending goods or products from the interior of the United States to a foreign port on a through bill of lading would be allowed a lower railroad rate on the transportation of his goods from the interior of the country to the seacoast than he would otherwise obtain, provided he employed an American vessel to complete the transportation of his goods from the seaport to which they had been brought by rail to the foreign port which was to be their final destination.

The same rule was to apply to imports; that is, cargoes brought from a foreign country to the United States and destined for some interior point of the United States would be entitled to a cheaper railroad rate from the seacoast to their destination, if they were imported in American vessels, than would otherwise be the case. Provision was made that upon certification by the Shipping Board that there was not sufficient tonnage available to supply the needs of American commerce this portion of the act might be held in suspense until the Shipping Board withdrew its certificate of tonnage inadequacy. That time, in the opinion of the Shipping Board, now has arrived; and in view of the evident misunderstanding of this action and of the law itself, as indicated by some newspaper comments, I feel it would be proper to insert in the RECORD this explanation of the effect of this act as set forth by the vice chairman of the Shipping Board in a recent address. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that the address may be printed in the RECORD. In connection with the same matter and attached to the papers is an extract from Fair Play which I would also like to have printed in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

ADDRESS OF E. C. PLUMMER, VICE CHAIRMAN UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD, BEFORE THE PROPELLER CLUB OF THE PORT OF NEW YORK, AT A LUNCHEON HELD AT THE RAILWAY CLUB, 30 CHURCH STREET, NEW YORK CITY, AT 12.30 P. M., WEDNESDAY, MARCH 5, 1924.

The merchant marine act of 1920 provides that railroads shall make no reduced rates on through shipments of exports or imports unless the vessels upon which the goods are to be carried to foreign ports, or upon which they have been brought into the United States from foreign ports, are American.

This section of the law would have gone into effect more than three years ago had not the Shipping Board caused its suspension.

The board's action in causing this suspension was necessitated by the fact that in 1920 we had not sufficient American tonnage adequately to serve the trade of this country. With the completion of our World War fleet and the establishment of efficient ocean services under our flag, that condition disappeared. For more than two years there has been adequate service by American shipping for the foreign trade of this country. The board, however, continued to hold section 28 of this law in suspension in order to give our competitors every opportunity to adjust themselves to the active presence of American ships, to give the Interstate Commerce Commission ample time to make such rearrangements as might be required to protect the railroad-rate system of this country so that all United States ports might enjoy equally those advantages accruing from low export and import rates when American ships were employed, and to demonstrate fully the ability of American vessels to handle the bulk of our foreign commerce.

Here it is important to make clear exactly what the recent action of the Shipping Board in connection with this section 28 means.

It is not an aggressive movement on the part of the board. On the contrary, the board merely has withdrawn its suspending certificate and permitted the law to go into effect in accordance with the mandate of Congress. In reality it is Congress that is acting now, not the Shipping Board.
